A suit to recover an amount alleged to be due to a hereditary archaka of a temple as the dues of his office falls under Article 13 of the Schedule to the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act [p. 415, col. 2.]

Subraya Acharya v. Kesava Upadhyaya, 31 Ind. Cas. 206; (1915), M. W. N. 845, followed.

If any portion of a claim is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court, the whole claim should be brought in the regular Court [p. 415, col. 2.]

Malimbath Kunhamanad v. Achareth Parakat, 38 Ind. Cas. 373; 31 M. L. J. 827 at p. 829; 5 L. W. 472, followed.

The term 'wages' in Article 102 of the Limitation Act is a very general term: although it is usually used in connection with daily wages, it also includes the wages paid as monthly salary [p. 415, col. 2.]

A claim, therefore, for the salary and perquisites of office by the archaka of a temple, whose position is essentially that of a servant under the temple trustee, is governed by Article 102 of the Limitation Act. [p. 416, col. 1.]

If the perquisites are received from third persons, they are not wages and if the claim is for their recovery from the trustee as in fort, Article 36 and not Article 102 will apply. [p. 416, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 100 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvannamalai, in Original Suit No. 616 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The 1st defendant is the appellant. The appeal is against the order of remand passed by the Appellate Court which held that the plaintiff's suit was not wholly barred by limitation, the Court of first instance having held otherwise and dismissed the suit.

The material allegations in the plaint are as follows:—

(a) The two plaintiffs (father and son) are the hereditary Archakas of the famous temple at Tiruvannamalai. The 1st defendant-appellant before us is the trustee of the temple. The 3rd defendant is the temple Peishkar. The 1st defendant in June 1912 suspended the plaintiffs from office. The 3rd defendant intimated this fact to the plaintiffs on 19th June 1912 and the suspension of the plaintiffs lasted till 3rd July 1912.

(b) The plaintiffs contend that the suspension order was illegal and unjust and that the 3rd defendant maliciously made misrepresentations to the 1st defendant and made the 1st defendant pass such an unjust order.

BHARADWAJA MUDALIAR v. ARUNACHALLA GURUKKAL.

(c) The 4th defendant discharged the duties of the office during the 14 days during which the plaintiffs remained under suspension.

The plaint concluded for the following reliefs:—

(1) Pay for the days of suspension, Rs. 4-14-4. (2) The value of perquisites from other sources during such period, Rs. 25. (3) Damages for mental distress, loss of dignity, etc., Rs. 50. Total Rs. 79-14-4.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit, applying Article 36 of the Limitation Act which allows two years for a suit for compensation for any malfeasance, misfeasance or non-feasance independent of contract and not specially provided for. The suit was brought on 28th June 1915, the cause of action having risen on 19th June 1912, more than 2 years before the suit was brought. The plaint was filed on the day on which the Tiruvannamalai District Munsif's Court opened after the summer vacation and if the limitation period of three years under Article 62 or Article 102 applied, the claim for at least Rs. 4-14-4 (the pay) was not barred. If Article 120 applied (which provides 6 years) to the claim for pay, then also the District Munsif was not justified in dismissing the whole claim as barred.

The Subordinate Judge, in appeal, held that Article 120 applied so far as the claim for the pay (Rs. 4-14-4) and the perquisites (Rs. 25) against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 was concerned. As regards the claim against the 4th defendant (the locum tenens during the plaintiffs' suspension) the Subordinate Judge was inclined to apply Article 62 (and only in the alternative Article 120), the 4th defendant having "constructively received" the 'money' made up of the pay and the perquisites "for the plaintiffs' use." So far as the claim for Rs. 50 was concerned, that is, the compensation for mental distress, loss of dignity, etc., he held that Article 36 applied and concurred with the District Munsif in dismissing that portion of the claim as barred. He then remanded the suit for disposal in respect of the claim for Rs. 29-14-4. The contention for the defendant, the only appellant before us, on appeal is that the whole claim including the claim for salary and perquisites is a claim for damages for tort and not for a breach of contract, and hence Article 36 alone applied and a suit even for this portion of the claim was barred by limitation.

A preliminary objection was taken by the respondents to the appeal on the ground that the suit was of a Small Cause nature and of the value of less than Rs. 500. We overruled it, following the decision of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., in Subraya Acharya v. Kesava Upadhyaya (1), where the learned Judge held that a suit to recover an amount alleged to be due to a hereditary Archaka as the dues of his office falls under Article 13 of the Schedule to the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. If any portion of a claim is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court, the whole claim ought to be brought in the regular Court. See Mulambath Kunhammad v. Acharath Parakat (2).

I shall now consider the question of limitation. The suit in the case reported as Subbier v. Ranga Aiyangar (3) was brought by a hereditary Stanikam office-holder against the Dharmakartha for the recovery of emoluments wrongly withheld between the date when the plaintiff brought a former suit for the recovery of the office against the trustee and the date when he recovered possession of the office in execution of the decree in that suit. The relevant portion of the judgment is very short and is as follows:—

"We are unable to agree with the contention that Article 36 of the Limitation Act applies. The case is not specifically provided for, and in our opinion comes under Article 102."

I think that neither Article 36 nor Article 102, which are very generally worded Articles, should be applied if any other more specifically worded Article applies to a case. Article 102 applies to suits for "wages not otherwise expressly provided for in this Schedule." 'Wages' is a very general term; though it is usually used in connection with daily wages, it also includes the wages paid as monthly salary. [See Kalichurn Mitter v. Mahomad Soleem (4)]. Article 4 which prescribes a period of limitation of 6 months applies to wages accruing due under the Employers and Workmen Act; Article 7 prescribing one year applies to wages of household servants, artisans or labourers not provided for by Article 4; Article 101 for a seaman's wages and prescribes a limitation period of three years. The plaintiff's claim in this case does not fall under any of the three Articles. It, therefore, clearly falls under Article 102. The plaintiff is the servant of the temple paid in monthly wages, though a hereditary servant. In Seshadri Aiyangar v. Ranga Bhattar (5) Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., say at page 633 *: "The position of an Archaka, though he may have a hereditary tenure in the office, is, in our opinion, essentially that of a servant. The trustee is the representative of the temple and the Archaka must be subject to his disciplinary authority." So far, therefore, as the claim for the pay Rs. 4 14-4 due to plaintiff is concerned, I think that Article 102 applies and the suit is, therefore, not barred by limitation. As regards the perquisites (Rs. 25), if they are payable by the temple they are part of the wages (that is, remuneration for work done and payable by a master to his servant) and the claim for them as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, trustees, also falls under Article 102. If the perquisites are received from third persons, they are not wages, Article 102 will, therefore, not apply and the plaintiff's claim as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 will be in tort and Article 36 might apply.

As regards the 3rd defendant (the temple peishkar) there is either no cause of action against him or the claim against him falls under Article 33 and it is, therefore, barred.

As regards the 4th defendant if Article 62 applies, that is, if it could be held that he received the plaintiff's salary and perquisites for the plaintiff's use [see Sankunni Menon v. Gorinda Menon (6)], the claim against him for such salary and perquisites is not barred. I shall not finally decide just now whether, in law, it could be so held.

In the result, I would modify the order of remand by confining it to the plaintiff's claims against the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 alone. The appeal has substantially failed against the contesting respondents. The 1st defendant (appellant) will, therefore, pay the plaintiffs (contesting respondents) costs in this appeal.

BAKEWELL, J.—I agree.

SARAJENDRA NATH SAHA AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Res judicata—Landlord and tenant—Ex parte decree as to rate of rent, whether res judicata on question of rate of rent annually payable.

An ex parte decree in a rent suit, allowing the plaintiff's claim at the rate of rent alleged in the plaint, does not operate so as to render the question of the rate of rent annually payable res judicata unless there was a prayer in the plaint for a declaration as to the rate of rent as part of the substantive relief claimed. [p. 417, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 23rd of February 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, Dacca dated the 31st July 1916.

Babu D. N. Chakerbutty, and Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar for Babu Rajendra Chandar Guha, for the Appellants

Babu Sib Chander Palit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent of a certain Sikmi Taluk. The plaintiffs who are the respondents before us claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 13-14-11½ gandas, while the defendants-appellants contended that the rent annually payable is Rs. 4-0-3¼ gandas.

Both Courts have found that the true rent is Rs. 4-0-3¼ gandas, but differing from the Court of first instance the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the decision in a previous rent suit between the parties operate as res judicata and has, therefore, decreed the claim of the plaintiffs-landlords in full.

The previous rent suit was for the arrears of the years 1312—1314 and of the first 3 kists of the year 1315. In the plaint and also in the account annexed to the plaint the rate of rent was alleged to be Rs. 13-14-11½ gandas and on this footing a sum of Rs. 52-2-13-2-2 was claimed as the rent due. The defendants, who were recent purchasers of the Sikmi, filed a written statement but subsequently failed to appear, with the result that the claim was decreed in full ex parte. In the written statement filed the defendants denied liability but did not take any explicit objection to the rate of rent alleged. It further appears that after decree the decretal amount was realised in execution proceedings from the judgment-debtors.

The question for our determination in this appeal then is, whether in the circumstances we have set out the previous decree operates so as to render the question of the rate of rent annually payable res judicata between the parties.

On this question many decisions of this Court have been cited, and we are not prepared to say that they can all readily be reconciled. But for the purposes of our decision it is sufficient to say that we are unable to draw any distinction of substance between the present case and the case of Madhusudan Shaha Mundul v. Brae (1), decided by the Full Court on the 27th of February 1889 and reported as Madhusudan Shaha Mundul v. Brae (1). There, as here, there was in the plaint a statement of the alleged rate of rent, but there, as here, there was no prayer for a declaration as to the rate of rent as part of the substantive relief claimed.

We, therefore, hold that the prior ex parte decree does not operate as res judicata, and on this view we set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore the decree of the Munsif. This appeal is accordingly decreed with costs both in this Court and in the Court of first appeal.

Appeal decreed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Lease—Deposit—Forfeiture of deposit in event of breach—Interest, claim for, at 24 per cent. per annum from date of suit—Penalty.

Under a rental agreement executed by the defendant to the plaintiff the latter deposited 6 months' rent as advance, stipulating for its forfeiture in case of breach by him of the terms of the lease. In a suit for rent due and for a declaration that the deposit had been forfeited in accordance with the defendant's undertaking under the lease and for interest at 24 per cent. per annum from date of suit:

Held (1) that section 74 of the Contract Act was not applicable to the forfeiture of deposit and that the clause for forfeiture was not a penalty; [p. 418, col. 1.]

(2) that the claim for interest at 24 per cent. per annum from date of suit was penal and should be disallowed. [p. 418, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 29 of 1916 (Appeal Suit No. 8 of 1916, on the file of the District Court, Coimbatore), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 287 of 1915 (Original Suit No. 31 of 1915, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Coimbatore).

Messrs. T. Narasimha Aiyangar and K. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff's suit is for arrears of rent and for a declaration that the amount deposited by defendants under the rental agreement has been forfeited. It is in effect a suit for rent coupled with a claim for the damages provided in the contract, if a forfeiture of a deposit can be styled damages. Both the lower Courts appear to have treated the suit as one for damages alone and have allowed the defendants to set off the amount deposited by them under the rental agreement against the rent due, although no set-off was pleaded in the written statement and not only has the lower Appellate Court awarded nothing by way of damages for breach of contract, but has mulcted the plaintiff in the costs of the suit.

We think they were wrong in the view that they took and in applying the ruling in Vellore Taluq Board v. Gopalasami Naidu (1) in support of it. It was clearly held by a Full Bench in Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi (2) that in the case of a sale, section 74 of the Contract Act was not applicable and that a stipulation for forfeiture in case of breach is not a penalty. The same view was held by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in the case of a lease, Orr v. Chitha Chinna Yegappa Chetty (3), and it is not contended before us that any distinction can be drawn between the case of a sale and that of a lease.

In determining whether the sum of Rs. 150 agreed to be forfeited was a deposit or not, we must be guided by the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the amount. The point has not been considered by the lower Courts, but, taking all the circumstances into consideration, we must certainly hold the amount to be reasonable, being, as it is, one-half year's rent in a rental agreement for 5 years. Following the Full Bench ruling in Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi (2), we think plaintiff is entitled to retain the deposit.

Plaintiff is also entitled to his rent, and that is not disputed.

Plaintiff has made a further claim, i. e., for interest at 24 per cent. from date of suit until realisation. This is clearly in the nature of a penalty and as his Vakil says he does not press the claim, we disallow it, and reduce the rate to 6 per cent. The second appeal is accordingly allowed and plaintiff will have a decree as prayed for, except in regard to the penal interest claimed with costs throughout.

*Appeal allowed;
Decree varied.*

The words "jagir khudkasht land" do not necessarily mean a service tenure within the meaning of section 181 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 419, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge, Gaya, dated the 30th January 1917.

Mr. Kailaspati, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sita Nandan Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of the land in dispute from the defendants, on the ground that the said land is the plaintiffs' private or zeraif land and that the lease on the basis of which the defendants held the land has expired. The defendants-respondents on the other hand claim to hold the land as occupancy tenants thereof. It is not disputed that the defendants were inducted on the land by virtue of two leases, first, dated the 15th August 1904, which expired in 1314 and the second, dated 2nd September 1912, which expired in 1322. Both the leases were for three years. The plaintiffs' case is that the land was held khas in the interval, i. e., between 1315 to 1319. The present suit was instituted after the expiry of the second lease. The Courts below have held and it is not disputed in this Court that the defendants are settled *raiya*s in the village and their status has also been so recorded in the survey papers. The Courts below have also held that the lands in dispute are not the zeraif land of the plaintiffs and that hence the defendants have acquired occupancy rights in the said lands, although they were brought on the land by means of a temporary lease. The finding of the Court below regarding the character of the land as being not seriat has been disputed by the appellants in this Court. The contention rests upon the description of the land in the kabuliyat as khudkasht land. The oral evidence of the plaintiffs as to the khudkasht and the zerait being synonymous has been disbelieved. No authority has been shown as to khudkasht necessarily meaning zerait or private lands of the proprietor. Such a description, namely, khudkasht in the lease referred to in Apdhya Prosud Singh v. Ram Golan Singh (1) was not accepted as sufficient to mean that the land was the zerait land. The word 'khudkasht' does not occur in section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, where the words expressly mentioned are khamar, nij, nij-jole zerait, sir or khamat, as denoting the proprietor's private lands. It cannot, therefore, be accepted without any express authority that the word khudkasht necessarily means 'zerait'. This contention of the learned Vakil for the appellants, therefore, fails.

The survey record of right has entered the land as the kajemi or occupancy holding of the defendants and the Courts below have concurred in the finding that the entry is correct. The only ground upon which the decree of the Court below is assailed is that the land in dispute forms part of the jagir lands of the plaintiffs and as such it was a service tenure and hence under section 181 the defendants could not acquire an occupancy right in this land. It is true that the land in the kabuliyat has been described as the "jagir khudkasht land." The plaintiffs have also described it at one place as their exclusive jagirdari land and at another place as khudkasht jagir land. It must, therefore, be accepted that the land was known as jagir khudkasht land of the plaintiffs, but there is nothing to show on the record that this was a service tenure as mentioned in section 181. Hence the section has no application.

It is not asserted that the land was a ghutwali tenure. A jagir tenure may be a service tenure or may be an ordinary tenure or holding. Appendix IV, which contains a list of tenures or holdings, attached to Finucane and Amir Ali's Bengal Tenancy Act, page 868. Apart from what has been said in that appendix, personally I am of opinion that the jagir tenure is not necessarily a service tenure. This was not the point taken in the Courts below and as a matter of fact this is not the basis of the claim of the plaintiffs. Although the land is described as jagir in paragraph 1 of the plaint it was meant nothing more than a mere description of the land. This was not the ground upon which the claim was based. Having failed upon the principal grounds taken in the grounds of appeal, the learned Vakil with admirable ingenuity has tried to apply section 181 on account of the mention of the word 'jagir' in the lease and in the pleadings. He certainly would have been entitled to win the case, provided the word 'jagir' was mentioned in section 181 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or there was a clear authority showing that the general acceptance of the word 'jagir' was that it was a service tenure.

For the reasons given above the appeal must fail. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. A. Narasimhachariar for Mr. P. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar and Messrs. Venkatasubba Row and Radhakrishnayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The bond sued on was executed to the father of the 1st plaintiff. The 1st plaintiff's case was that it was assigned to him by the father. After filing the suit he died and the 2nd plaintiff is his legal representative. The 1st defendant is the son of the mortgagor. Defendants Nos. 2 to 11 are the alienees of some of the properties mortgaged. The 12th defendant is the eldest son of the mortgagee. The defendants pleaded that the mortgage bond was discharged by the payment made to one Chinna Narayana Reddi. This Chinna Narayana Reddi was another son of Byreddi Venkata Reddi, the original mortgagee. In the written statement, the case for the defence was that, in a partition between the father and sons, this bond fell to the share of Chinna Narayana Reddi and that after it came to him, there was a complete discharge of the obligation under the bond.

The District Munsif gave a decree to the plaintiff. In appeal, after remand in which the District Judge asked for certain findings upon some subsidiary issues, the Subordinate Judge, who heard the appeal, finally has come to the conclusion that the payment to Chinna Narayana Reddi discharged the 1st defendant from liability and that the plaintiff is not entitled to claim anything under the bond. The facts found are (a) that Venkata Reddi was alive at the time that the alleged payment was made to Chinna Narayana Reddi. Venkata Reddi and his son, the 12th defendant, were sentenced to transportation for life somewhere near 1880 and the discharge is alleged to have been in the year 1883. At that time the father is alleged to have given a power-of-attorney to a person called Narayana Reddi. (b) It is further found that there was no partition as alleged by the defendants. The District Munsif has stated that there was no allegation that Chinna Narayana Reddi was the manager of the family and that it was not sought to establish it before him. In this Court an attempt was made both by Messrs. Narasimha Chariar and Radhakrishnayya to show that Chinna Narayana Reddi was actually managing the family affairs. But the circumstances mentioned by the Subordinate Judge negative any such presumption. After the father and the eldest son were convicted and sentenced to transportation for life, apparently every member of the family was endeavouring to get as much family property as possible into his own hands. In these circumstances, it is unlikely that any one of the members was looked up to as the managing member of an undivided family.

On these facts, the question of law for decision is whether the payment to Chinna Narayana Reddi could discharge the 1st defendant from liability. Chinna Narayana Reddi was undoubtedly not a promisee. The learned Vakils for the respondents argued that, as the money was advanced by the father while the family was still undivided, every member of the family must be taken to be a co-promisee with the father. In the first place, there is no evidence as to the source of the money which was lent. For all we know, it might have been the self-acquisition of the father. Even granting that it was from the family funds that the father advanced the money, it does not follow that the other members of the family were co-promisees with him. The definition of 'promisor' and 'promisee' contained in the Contract Act negatives any such presumption. Prima facie the word

'promisee' means a person in whose name the document has been executed. No authority has been cited before us for the broad proposition that where money had been advanced by the manager of joint Hindu family the other members of the family would become co-promisees with him. The fact that the other members of the family have an interest in the debt is not enough to constitute them promisees. That is a technical expression carrying with it certain rights: we are not prepared to hold that every person who has an interest in bonds or securities standing in the name of another is a co-promisee, even though that other may be the manager of the Hindu family of which he is a member. Therefore, we must proceed on the footing that Chinna Narayana Reddi was not a promisee under the bond. He was one of the heirs of Venkata Reddi to whom the bond was executed. There were also other heirs including the plaintiff who were entitled to the money under this bond. The question, therefore, is whether payment to one of the co-heirs would discharge the obligor from liability. The principle regarding co-heirs would be equally applicable to co-parceners. In Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader Sahab (1) Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., accepts the proposition laid down by Mahmood, J., in the case in Surju Prasad Singh v. Khwahish Ali (2) and says that the co-heir of a single promisee is not entitled to give a discharge in respect of a bond executed to his ancestor. The Subordinate Judge has relied, for his conclusion that payment to one of the co-heirs would discharge the obligor, upon Sheikh Ibrahim v. Rama Aiyar (3). That case only decided that where payment is made in fraud of the other co-heirs, to one of the co-heirs the obligor is not discharged. Further there are some observations in the judgment which are against the view taken by the Subordinate Judge. There is nothing in that judgment to support his position. Mr. Parthasarathy Aiyangar has drawn our attention to the Full Bench decision in Mannava Annapurnamma v. Uppala Akkayya

(4), where two learned Judges of this Court held that payment to one of the co-promisees would be a good discharge. The Chief Justice was against that view. Even the two learned Judges who held that payment to one of the co-promisees would amount to a discharge, guard themselves by saying that the case of a co-heir would stand upon a different footing. Sankaran Nair, J., at page 549* says that the proposition which he enunciated would not cover the case of co-heirs. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., uses similar language in his judgment. In a later case reported as Muniandi Serrai v. Ramasami (5), Sadasiva Aiyar, J., sitting with Hannay, J., held that payment to one of the co-heirs of the promisee would not amount to a discharge of the liability incurred under the bond. Coutts Trotter, J., in Ponnusamy Pillai v. Thyagaraja Pillai (6) seems to doubt the correctness of the Full Bench decision in Mannava Annapurnamma v. Uppala Akkayya (4). If the question for decision were whether the payment made to one of the co-promisees would amount to a discharge of the bond, it might become necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench, having regard to the fact that two cases in Calcutta in which the question was fully argued and elaborately considered, took a different view and to the fact that Coutts Trotter, J., is of opinion that the decision is opposed to the current of authorities in England. We refer to Husainara Begum v. Rahmannessa Begum (7) and Umes Chandra Banerjee v. Dinabandhu Mahanti (8). But that question need not be considered in this case. The principle seems to be clear that payment to one of the co-heirs of the promisee would not discharge the promisor from his liability to pay under the bond. The same considerations govern payments made to a junior member of a Hindu family during the lifetime of its manager in whose favour the bond was executed. In the view we have taken the decision

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 24—Accessory rights—Right to discharge rain water from eaves—Right to go over servient tenement to repair wall supporting eaves, whether accessory to easement.

Plaintiff, who was entitled to an easement of discharging water upon the defendant's land from projecting eaves, sued for an injunction restraining the defendant from making any use of his land which would prevent the plaintiff from going upon it for all the purposes of repairing the wall of his house abutting thereon and which supported the eaves:

Held, that inasmuch as it was not absolutely impossible to repair the wall from the inside it would be an altogether illegitimate extension of the doctrine of accessory easements to grant the plaintiff the injunction sued for. [p. 423, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Heaton, J.—The accessory rights mentioned in section 24 of the Easements Act are not intended to be of such a nature as to deprive the owner of the servient tenement of his rights of property, unless such a result is absolutely essential. [p. 423, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The only substantial point with which we are called upon to deal is whether the lower Appellate Court was right in granting the plaintiff an accessory easement the extent of which is unfortunately not defined in the decretal portion of his judgment. The plaintiff is admittedly entitled to an easement of discharging water upon the defendant's land from eaves which project, as we are told here, although we do not discover this on the record, from three to five inches in length. This probably is about the fact, if not absolutely accurate. On the strength of this easement the plaintiff asked the Court below to give him an injunction, restraining the defendant from making any use of his land which would prevent the plaintiff from going upon it for all the purposes of repairing the wall of his house abutting thereon. The first Court refused this injunction, and in my opinion very rightly refused it. I entirely agree with the reasons given and the characterisation of the plaintiff's case by the trial Judge. In appeal the learned Judge below found that the case fell under section 24 of the Indian Easements Act and that the repair of the wall was an accessory easement to the admitted easement of discharging water through the eaves. It appears to me that this is an altogether illegitimate extension of the doctrine of accessory easement. The wall is just as necessary to the support of the roof as a whole as to the support of these slightly projecting eaves beyond it, and yet it is contended that because of this so-called easement the plaintiff is to have a vague and undefined easement which might preclude the defendant from making any use of his land within five or six feet of the plaintiff's wall. It does not appear to me that this is such an easement as any person is entitled to or was contemplated by section 24 of the Indian Easements Act. It is true that we have been referred to a very similar case in Madras [Hugagreva v. Sami (1)] in which the learned Judges took a different view, a view to which the learned Judge below intended to give effect. The result, however, is manifestly most unjust, and in principle it would come to this, that whoever built a house to the very limit of his own land might, if his neighbour did not build upon his land within twenty years, compel him to forego making any use of it for any profitable purpose within an altogether indefinite distance of the plaintiff's wall. The actual easement is for no more than discharge of water over three to five inches of defendant's land and that easement can very easily be secured and continued without extending it in the manner in which it has been extended by the learned Judge below. Such eaves, for example, in so far as they are separable from the roof as a whole and entitled to special treatment on the ground of constituting an easement, could very easily be supported from the central roof beam or in any other way entirely independent of the wall. It is only by saying that the wall is necessary to support the roof as a whole and that the eaves are dependent upon the maintenance of the roof that we arrive at the position that the maintenance of the wall is in itself a ground for granting an extended easement over the defendant's land. I do not think that that is a reasonable view in principle.

But after all it is not necessary to generalize and, looking to the facts of the particular case and the view taken of it by the learned trial Judge, I should have no hesitation in saying that this at any rate was not a proper case for granting an injunction of the kind prayed for by the plaintiff.

In the lower Appellate Court we find the learned Judge saying that it was not suggested that the plaintiff could repair his wall in any other way than by having the use of the defendant's land which he asks for. It may not have been suggested, but it is pretty clear, that there must be ways in which the plaintiff could do any necessary repairs to his wall from within, and without further encroaching upon the defendant's land. For example, to take an extreme case, we might say that if the plaintiff really was so anxious about the repair of this wall and the maintenance of the easement, he might build his wall two feet further back upon his own land, the eaves then projecting two feet five inches instead of five inches beyond the wall and so preserving the old easement. There would be no difficulty whatever in arranging the matter so, though it would no doubt be very inconvenient to the plaintiff. But the course proposed by the plaintiff and sanctioned by the learned Judge below is certainly as inconvenient and in my opinion far more unjust to the defendant.

In this view of the case, I think that the learned Judge below was wrong in granting the plaintiff the relief he has done, and that the proper order is that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed, and in my opinion it ought to be dismissed with all costs at any rate of the two appeals.

HEATON, J.—I agree. I think that the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Easements Act as illustrated by the examples given has been misunderstood by the lower Appellate Court. The accessory rights mentioned in that section are not intended to be of such a nature as to deprive the owner of the servient tenement of his rights of property, unless such a result is absolutely essential. We can in this case only say that it is absolutely essential that the plaintiff should reach his wall from the outside in order to repair it, by assuming that it is impossible for him to do it from the inside. Clearly, it seems to me, it is not impossible for him to do it from the inside, although it may be very inconvenient. The plaintiff, if he wishes to repair his wall and if the defendant is unwilling that the plaintiff should go on to his land for the purpose, must do so from the inside.

I think it quite right that this claim should be dismissed and the appeal allowed. I agree as to the order proposed as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 8—

KATHA PILLAI KANAKASUNDARAM PILLAI.

Representative suit, leave for—Damages, claim for, maintainability of, in representative suit—Form of order—Objectors, position of—Leave, grant of, without reference to objectors—Scheme of management of trust prayer for, validity of.

Leave to file a representative suit under Order I, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code, may be granted as on behalf of a community or body of persons even though some persons object to it. The order need not be restricted to the grant of leave on behalf of the persons not opposing. [p. 425, col. 1.]

Though leave cannot be granted to file a representative suit for damages, the prayer may be allowed in combination with other reliefs sought. The plaintiffs may be allowed to claim damages, not in their representative capacity but on account of the acts by which they were individually aggrieved. [p. 424, col. 2.]

A scheme of management of trust property may be prayed for in a representative suit, subject to objections when the scheme is actually framed. [p. 425, col. 1.]

Leave was granted under Order I, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code, to the plaintiff, a leading Mirasidar, to file a suit on behalf of 200 co-Mirasidars as trustees of a forest land for a declaration that the property belonged in common to them on trust, for an injunction restraining the defendants from trespassing on it, for damages and, if necessary, for a scheme of management. [p. 424, col. 2; p. 425, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Interlocutory Petition No. 1068 of 1916, in Original Suit No. 109 of 1916.

FACTS appear for the judgment.

Mr. T. N. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants, contended that the appropriate suit was under Order I, rule 1, in which all the alleged owners should be made parties. A representative suit cannot be maintained for damages. Vide Markt v. Knight Steamships Co. (1).

The scheme asked for should not have been sanctioned as that relief virtually would result in a partition among the Mirasidars.

Mr. T. R. Vencatrama Sastri, for the Respondents, argued contra.

JUDGMENT.—The order before us is one granting leave to plaintiff to sue as representing those of his fellow Mirasidars, who have not opposed his application, and it was passed under Order I, rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The proposed suit is brought by plaintiff as a leading Mirasidar and as trustee in management of certain forest land on behalf of the other Mirasidars, alleging that defendants, some of the Mirasidars, have trespassed on it and removed a quantity of forest produce. The reliefs claimed are declarations, an injunction, damages measured by the value of the produce removed and, if necessary, a scheme for future management.

The main objections to the lower Court's order are that Order I, rule 8, deals only with representative suits, and that (1) as the plaint refers to the forest as the common property of the Mirasidars, their interest in it should be protected by a suit framed in accordance with Order I, rule 1, with all the individuals concerned as parties, not by a representative suit under Order I, rule 8, and (2) that a representative suit cannot be brought for damages. Both these contentions have been supported by reference to Markt v. Knight Steamships Co. (1), in which one of several shippers sued, as representing all, for compensation for the losses, which each of the shippers had incurred by the loss of the ship. But the main relief claimed in the present case resembles rather that in question in Duke of Bedford v. Ellis (2), a declaration regarding the rights of the six plaintiffs and other interested persons, whom they were allowed to represent under the English Order XVI, rule 9, corresponding with Order I, rule 8 in the Indian Code; and following the latter case we hold that as regards the reliefs claimed other than damages, the suit is properly constituted.

As regards damages there is no doubt the dictum of Moulton, L. J., in Markt v. Knight Steamships Co. (1) that a representative suit cannot be brought for damages. But it is clear that the objection is only to the representative suit, as such, being for that relief. In fact in Duke of Bedford v. Ellis (2) the plaintiffs were allowed to claim damages, not in their representative capacity but on account of the acts by which they were individually aggrieved, the Court sanctioning the combination in one plaint of the claim by them as representatives under Order XVI, rule 9, and of their individual claims raising common questions of fact and law under Order XVI, rule 1, corresponding with the Indian Order I, rule 1. Similarly in the present case two claims are made in the plaint. But the combination is no more open to objection than that which the House of Lords permitted, since it is of the claim already referred to as made by plaintiff under Order I, rule 8, and of that which he makes alone as trustee or manager of the forest for damages for the loss of its produce and in respect of which there is no question of combination at all. These objections to the lower Court's order, therefore, fail.

It is said next that the lower Court's discretion was wrongly exercised. But only nineteen persons actually objected to its order and they merely referred generally to some others not specified as showing their objection. The total number of Mirasidars is, we are told, about two hundred. The lower Court's discretion was, therefore, exercised properly. Then it is argued that under Order I, rule 8, plaintiff must sue as representative of all the persons interested, and that he should not have been allowed to sue if any of them, even only one, repudiated his representation. This does not, in our opinion, follow from the wording of the Order and it takes no account of the provision in it, enabling any person desiring to be a party to be made one. But in this connection, we observe that the lower Court ought not to have limited plaintiff's representation to those who did not oppose the grant of leave to him before it. It should have permitted him to sue as representing all, who have not been made or do not apply to be made parties to the suit.

Lastly it is said that the prayer for a scheme of management involves or will probably result in a partition of the property among the Mirasidars, and that permission for a representative suit with that object should not have been given. It is not clear that the suit has that object; in fact the scheme asked for is merely one for the management of the property. But in any case it will be for defendants to object to the scheme, when one is proposed, on the ground that it is not of a kind which can be sanctioned in the suit as brought. It is not for them to object to the frame of the suit, because an inadmissible scheme may be proposed at a later stage.

The lower Court's order is modified to the extent stated above, but is confirmed in other respects. Petitioners will pay 1st respondent's costs in this Court.

Order modified.

Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, s. 4 (1)—Alluvion—Accretion, when can be claimed by owner of adjoining land—Boundary line, original, ascertainable, effect of—Decree, improper, whether should be passed.

Plaintiff sued for possession of some land, on the ground that it had formed contiguous to his fields by alluvial deposits in the bed of the river which adjoined his occupancy holding. The accretions took place in successive steps in four years. It was contended for the defendants that the land could not be claimed by the plaintiff inasmuch as the Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, section 4, did not apply to the case, the accession not having accrued by gradual, slow and imperceptible means:

Held, that the plaintiff must succeed, as the only requirement in section 4 of the Bengal Regulation is that the accretion should be gradual, not that it should be slow and imperceptible. All accessions by gradual alluvion are treated alike irrespective of the rate of formation. [p. 426, col. 2; p. 427, col. 1.]

The fact that the original boundary was known or ascertainable does not render the law of accretion inapplicable. [p. 427, col. 1.]

The Hon'ble Sir B. K. Bose, for the Appellants.

GOVINDRAO V. GANAPATI.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-respondents are occupancy tenants of two fields Nos. 3 and 4, which adjoined the bed of the river Kanhan. From 1896 onwards land contiguous to these fields was formed in the bed of the river by alluvial deposit. The accretion amounted to 5.08 acres in 1896, an additional 10.07 acres in 1898, and an additional 3.30 acres in 1907. In 1908 the defendants, Malguzars of the village, took possession of this land, and in 1909 there was a further accretion of .85 acre. The defendants appellants are Malguzars of the villages on both sides of the river and at the last Settlement they were recorded as proprietors of the bed of the river.

The plaintiffs sued for possession alleging that the accretions became part of their occupancy holding. The Additional Judge to the Court of the Sub-Judge gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession but did not in his judgment refer to Bengal Regulation XI of 1825. The appeal of the defendants was dismissed by the District Judge, who applied the provisions of the above Regulation to the case.

The grounds of appeal are general, but the learned Advocate for the appellants has argued the appeal under four heads. In the lower Appellate Court it was argued that the Bengal Regulation did not apply to the case, because the accretion did not accrue by gradual, slow and imperceptible means. The same contention forms the first ground of appeal argued in this Court. The learned District Judge after consideration of the authorities summarised his conclusions as follows:—

"I am doubtful whether the Roman Law, in laying down that alluvion must be gradual and by imperceptible increments, meant to insist on its being slow. The English Law, as it appears in the resumé given by their Lordships in Lopez v. Mullun Mohun Thoor (1), insists on slowness. But their Lordships in speaking of the Regulation in Nugender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Esaff (2) omit the word 'slow'. In the recent Privy Council case of Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (3) their Lordships have gone further and stated that where under English conditions the rule applies to imperceptible alterations, Regulation XI of 1825, Articles 1 and 4, speak of gradual accession. The analogy of the English rule can hardly be prayed in aid when Indian Legislation has thus an established and different rule on the same subject. Certainly the word 'considerable' in the second clause of section 4 suggests that accession may be by small jumps and still come under clause 1 of section 4. This supports their Lordships' view in the recent case that the Indian Regulation is not confined to accretions gradual and imperceptible much less to gradual, slow and imperceptible."

These conclusions of the learned District Judge are called in question in view of the fact that accretion took place by successive steps in four years. In every year when the flood subsided a considerable accretion was apparent, and it is contended that in these circumstances the land cannot be said to have been gained by gradual accession within the meaning of the first clause of section 4 of the Regulation. My task in deciding this question is much lightened by a recent decision of Ayling and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ., in Secretary of State v. Rajah of Vizayanagaram (4), in which the authorities on the subject have been exhaustively discussed by Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., whose conclusions are thus summed up by Ayling, J.:—

"It seems to me the recognition of title by alluvial accretion is largely governed by the fact that the latter is due to the normal action of physical forces: and the different condition of Indian and English rivers is such that what would be abnormal and almost miraculous in the latter is normal and commonplace in the former, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Srinath Roy v. Dinabandhu Sen (3). Such a difference cannot be ignored in the application of the legal principles of alluvial accretion: and it seems to have been given effect to in Bengal Regulation XI of 1825. The only requirement in section 4 of that enactment is that this accession should be gradual, not that it should be slow or imperceptible. Abnormal changes due to sudden alterations of course and violent avulsions are separately provided for, but all accessions by gradual alluvion are treated alike, irrespective of the rate of formation."

Speaking with due respect I am in entire accordance with the view expressed by the Madras High Court and the first ground of appeal, therefore, fails.

It is next suggested that as the boundaries of the plaintiffs' fields Nos. 3 and 4 were already known and had been recorded by the Survey Department, the claim of uncertainty on which the principle of the Bengal Regulations is said to be based is absent. This question also has been dealt with in the judgment of the Madras High Court already cited. It is sufficient to quote the following passage from the judgment of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.:—

"He (the Government Pleader) contended that as the extent and boundaries of the plaintiff's lankas in the river were accurately ascertainable from the map... many lands subsequently formed, even by gradual, slow and imperceptible alluvion in what was the bed of the river in 1870, belonged to the Crown; and relied chiefly on the observations of the Lord Chancellor in Attorney-General v. Chambers (5). This question was elaborately considered in Attorney-General v. McCarthy (6) already referred to and the conclusion reached that there was no such principle and the fact that the original boundary was known or ascertainable did not render the law of accretion inapplicable, and the observations of the Privy Council at page 612 in Attorney General for Nigeria v. Holt & Co. (7) are to the same effect. The surveys in this case were not within the category of the agri limitati of the Civil Law. St. Clair Co., v. Lovington (8), Dr. Hunter's Roman Law, page 276, and Law Quarterly Review, Volume 12, at page 353. This contention must, therefore, be disallowed." This ground of appeal also fails.

The next contention is that it is possible that what happened was that there was an exposure of the pre-existing bed of the river and not a fresh deposit of silt as alleged by the plaintiffs. On looking at the record of the case, however, I find there is no foundation for this contention. The appellants themselves pleaded that the new land had been thrown up by the river.

It is finally argued that the map filed in the case shows that not all the land claimed by the plaintiffs can be correctly described as an accretion to their fields Nos. 3 and 4. A glance at the map (Exhibit P.2.) indicates that only a portion of the land in suit is contiguous to other fields further down the course of the river. The learned District Judge in paragraph 3 of his judgment has noticed this; but he has not thought it necessary to adjudicate on the subject since there were no pleadings on these lines. I am, however, of opinion that no decree should be given by the Courts which is on the face of it improper. It is argued for the respondents that the new land adjoining fields which do not belong to the plaintiffs should nevertheless be considered as an accretion to the plaintiffs' fields because the bank of the plaintiffs' fields is low, while the bank lower down is precipitous. There is no force in this argument, for the accretion must be considered to be an accretion to the land at the foot of the precipitous portion of the bank. I must remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a decision as to what portion of the land claimed is an accretion to the fields of the plaintiffs. Judging by the map, some of the land claimed is an accretion to land not the property of the plaintiffs. The District Judge will use his discretion as to whether further proceedings should take place in his Court or in the Court of first instance.

Costs will be the costs in the suit.

There will be no refund certificate.

Nuisance—Oil mill, erection of, close to dwelling house—Discharge of foul smell and garbage—Noise—Abatement—Stopping of work, right of neighbour to.

It is an actionable nuisance to erect an oil mill close to a dwelling house from which foul-smelling water is always discharged and unbearable noise is produced which can be heard even at some distance. [p. 423, col. 2.]

The owner of the house adjoining the mill is entitled to ask for prohibition of the working of the mill altogether where the nuisance cannot be abated [p. 429, col. 1.]

The locality, the question whether the nuisance has been long in existence, whether the trade which causes it is commonly carried on in that locality and other questions of a like nature have to be considered in deciding whether a particular business carried on by a neighbour is an actionable nuisance. [p. 428, col. 2; p. 429, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Salem, in Appeal Suit No. 250 of 1915, (Appeal Suit No. 162 of 1914, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Krishnagiri, in Original Suit No. 421 of 1913).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Appellant, argued that the opening of a factory close to a dwelling house and in a non-commercial locality was an actionable nuisance. The noise from the mill and the foul-smelling water that flowed on to defendant's premises caused inconvenience, even judging of the matter by the ordinary standards of comfort. The test is, whether it is built in a place where such business is carried on.

Mr. B. Somaya, for the Respondent, argued contra.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant is the appellant. He purchased a schoolmaster's house about a year before suit, the plaintiff's house being next door to the house so purchased by the defendant. The defendant is an oil monger by caste and he set up an oil mill of the country pattern in the yard of his house. The noise of the mill caused by the turning of the machine drawn by the bullocks, the state of the ground trodden by the bullocks and the droppings of the bullocks created much nuisance. The District Munsif found (1) that the machine occupied the entire vacant space in the defendant's compound and that it has been put up very near the occupied portion of the plaintiff's house; (2) that the machine was worked by the defendant both day and night, that the noise caused by the working of the machine was unbearable and prevented the defendant from attending to his photographic work; (3) that the noise proceeding from the mill machine could be heard at a distance of two furlongs; and (4) that black, dirty, foul-smelling water containing mosquitoes and worms was found in the defendant's compound on account of the washing of the nuts and of the cowdung stored in it, especially during the rainy season. In Pollock on Torts at page 429, it is stated: "A nuisance is not justified by showing that the trade or occupation causing the annoyance is, apart from the annoyance, an innocent or laudable one. 'The building of a lime-kiln is good and profitable; but if it be built so near a house that when it burns, the smoke thereof enters into the house, so that none can dwell there, an action lies for it.' 'A tan house is necessary, for all men wear shoes; and nevertheless it may be pulled down if it be erected to the nuisance of another. In like manner of a glass house; and they ought to be erected in places convenient for them.'" So of a fried fish shop. "So it is an actionable nuisance to keep a pig-stye so near any neighbour's house as to make it unwholesome and unfit for habitation, though the keeping of swine may be needful for the sustenance of man." Then at page 426 the learned author says: "What amount of annoyance or inconvenience will amount to a nuisance in point of law, cannot, by the nature of the question, be defined in precise terms. There should be a material interference with the ordinary comfort and convenience of life.....the physical comfort of human existence.....by an ordinary and reasonable standard." The locality, the question whether the nuisance had been long in existence, whether the trade which causes it is commonly carried on in that locality and other questions of a like nature have, no doubt, to be considered in deciding whether a particular business carried on by a neighbour is an actionable nuisance. All these things have been kept in mind on, by the learned District Munsif in arriving at his conclusion that the business of the defendant is an actionable nuisance for the abatement of which the plaintiff could sue. The District Munsif says: "It is not shown that the plaintiff is living in the midst of oil mills." The portion of the suburb where other oil mills are situated seems to be far removed from the locality where the plaintiff lives. The lower Appellate Court has substantially concurred in the findings of the District Munsif on the points already referred to. The lower Courts have also found that the nuisance cannot be abated otherwise than by prohibiting the working of the oil mill. I would, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with costs.

WALLIS, C. J.—I do not think that there are sufficient grounds for interfering with the findings of the lower Courts that what has been done in the circumstances of the case amounts to a nuisance. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an appeal from an order passed by this Court in its District Court Jurisdiction allowing execution to proceed against the surety.

The appellant Umer had given security under Order XXXVIII, rule 5, for Rs. 1,800, the value of the property sought to be attached before judgment. The suit between the parties was referred to arbitration and a decree was made in the terms of the award, and it is this decree of which execution is sought against the appellant surety.

The surety contends that he is not liable to satisfy the amount of that decree, firstly, because that amount has not been "adjudged" by the Court as provided by the terms of his bond, see Form No. 6 of Appendix F of the Civil Procedure Code; and secondly, because the reference to arbitration was not contemplated by him when he executed the bond.

There is no force in either of these objections.

When a suit is referred to arbitration, the Court pronounces judgment for the amount of the award; see paragraph 16 of the arbitration schedule. The amount is, therefore, adjudged by the Court.

The second objection proceeds on the assumption that the liability of the surety is affected by section 133 of the Contract Act. But that section has no application, for, as pointed out by the lower Court, the relation of the debtor and creditor did not exist between plaintiff and defendant at the time the bond was executed. The utmost that the appellant can contend is that he bound himself to pay what the Court adjudged, and not what the parties settled between themselves as the result of a compromise which might be collusive and in fraud of him. But that is not the case here. The reference to arbitration is a proceeding incidental to the conduct of the suit and this has been decided in the case of Srikashen Rockumal v. Relumal Parimol (1), following the case reported as Fariell v. Eastern Counties Railway Co. (2).

Whether an amount arrived at by a compromise between the parties is an amount which the surety is liable to pay under the terms of this bond is not a question which arises in this appeal. Mr. Kalumal refers to the case of Tatum v. Evans (3). But that was a very special case, for the compromise decree was a consolidated decree in two suits; the surety had given a bond in one suit only; the decree made an order affecting the sureties' liability and it was, therefore, held that looking at the substance of the thing there was not an awarding of such sum as the Court should think fit. Further, the Judge took care to say that he would not go to the length of laying down that in no case, where a person gives security as a surety, is he liable when the judgment is obtained by consent.

On the whole I am of opinion that the reference to arbitration in this case was an ordinary incident in the suit and the amount awarded was in a judgment passed against the defendant and is one for which the surety is bound.

I would confirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

HAYWARD, A. J. C.—I concur. I think no sufficient ground has been shown in this case to justify our holding that the surety was released by the award decree between the parties. But I desire to guard myself against holding that in no case would a surety be entitled to claim the application of the equitable principles underlying section 132 of the Contract Act in respect of a bond given under the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal dismissed.

The words "other suits" in Article 90 of the Limitation Act show that that article does not include suits which properly come within Article 89. [p. 431, col. 1.] Great Western Insurance Co., of New York v. Cunliffe, (1874) 9 Ch. Ap. 125; 43 L. J. Ch. 741; 30 L. T. 661, distinguished.

Such matters as the liability of the agent for wilful default and to account for moneys that should have come to his hands come within the scope of an ordinary money account and are governed by Article 89. [p. 431, cols. 1 & 2.]

The termination of an agency is a question of fact for the purposes of Article 89 of the Limitation Act and the agency must be considered as having terminated when the authority of the agent is revoked, or the agent renounces the agency or the business of the agency is completed, which is practically another case of revocation or determination of authority. (3) (1886) 54 L. T. 336.

MUTHIAH CHETTY v. ALAGAPPA CHETTY.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—In the first of these cases—Appeal No. 192 of 1915, the Subordinate Judge has dismissed a suit brought by the principals against an agent and his son to recover a specified sum of money particulars of which are set out at length in the plaint, and those particulars show that what they are really seeking to do is to make the first defendant account for the moneys which they entrusted to the first defendant.

The main ground of complaint taken by the plaintiffs in their plaint is that the first defendant lent moneys of the principals to persons to whom he was not authorised to lend them, and Mr. Krishnasami Ayyar for the appellants has taken the point that this case is governed by Article 90 of the Limitation Act, which provides for and not by Article 89 which deals with suits "by a principal against his agent for moveable property received by the latter and not accounted for."

"other suits by principals against agents for neglect or misconduct,"

Now the use of the word 'other' in Article 90 shows that that Article does not include suits which properly come within Article 89, and we think that this is really a suit for a mere money account which comes within Article 89.

Mr. Krishnasami Ayyar has relied upon Great Western Insurance Co. of New York v. Cunliffe (1). In that case it was sought, in taking an account by a principal against his agent, to hold the agent responsible for the loss which had occurred to the principal by the agent's failure to insure certain goods, that is to say, for failing to carry out the instructions of the principal by spending moneys of the principal in a particular manner, and Lord Justice James held that that did not come within an ordinary money account. In an ordinary money account the accounting party is asked to account for the moneys which have come to his hands and to pay over the balance, and where the account is on the footing of wilful default, he may be held liable, not only for the moneys which have come to his hands, but also for moneys which ought to have come to his hands; and if he is shown, in taking such an account, to have applied moneys in a way in which he was not authorised to apply them, the result is that he is not allowed credit for that sum in taking account. That is the ordinary practice in taking accounts and it seems to us that there is no reason for holding that the matters pleaded in this case should not come into an ordinary money account. As I have said, Great Western Insurance Co. of New York v. Cunliffe (1) itself and also the illustration put there of an attempt to make a solicitor liable for his negligence in the conduct of an action when taking an account in respect of his client's moneys—those are cases of a different nature from the present.

Therefore, in our opinion, in this case, Article 89 was rightly applied.

Then the question arises as to whether this case was properly disposed of with regard to that Article. Now the Judge has simply held the suit to be barred on the authority of a decision of my learned brother and myself in Venkatachalam Chetty v. Narayanan Chetty (2). All we decided in that case was that termination of agency is a question of fact for purposes of Article 89 of the Limitation Act and the agency must be considered as having terminated when the authority to the agent is revoked, or the agent renounces the agency or the business of the agency is completed, which is practically another case of revocation or determination of authority. Now that must be a question of fact in each case to be decided upon the evidence.

We do not think the case is sufficiently clear upon the pleadings to enable us to dispose of the case without taking evidence, and we have, therefore, decided to call for a finding upon fresh evidence as to whether the suit is barred under Article 89. We think it necessary, however, to say that we consider this question depends upon the question when the authority of the agent to represent the principal ceased, and that it does not depend upon the question as to the agent's obligation to take back a salary chit and pass his accounts with the principal. Fresh evidence may be taken. The finding will be submitted in two months

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—On the 10th June 1905 the 1st and 3rd party defendants made an objection before a Settlement Officer conducting a settlement under Chapter X of Act VIII of 1885, to the effect that the lands in suit, measuring an area of 18 bighas, 3 cottahs 16 dhurs had been wrongly recorded as the lakhiraj estate of the plaintiffs. The objectors succeeded before the Settlement Officer, and on the 12th January 1906 a final record was published containing entries in accordance with the Settlement Officer's decision. On the 11th January 1907 the suit out of which the present appeal arises was instituted before the Munsif of Purnea, for a declaration that the entries in the finally published record with regard to the lands in suit were incorrect. The suit was decreed by the Munsif, but was dismissed on appeal by the District Judge on the 30th November 1908. There was then a second appeal to the High Court of Calcutta, with the result that the case was remanded to the District Judge for a decision upon the merits. I have to explain here that the District Judge who disposed of the case on the 30th November 1908 was of opinion that no civil suit for a declaration, such as had been given to the plaintiffs by the Munsif, would lie and that the proper remedy of the plaintiffs was by way of an application under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the settlement of a dispute to the Revenue Officer. The High Court of Calcutta held that this position of the law had been misconceived by the learned Judge and that a suit in the Civil Court would lie to declare that the entries in the finally published record were incorrect. When the case went back to the District Judge on remand, the decree of the Munsif was confirmed. The learned District Judge found that in regard to 9 bighas 10 cottahs 16 dhurs of the land in suit the plaintiffs had established a title by purchase made in 1825, shewing that this area was part of the lakhiraj estate of one Mr. Beaufort. As regards the remainder of the land the learned Judge found that the plaintiffs had been in adverse possession for more than 12 years and that they had, at the time that the finally published record of 1906 was published, acquired a complete title as against the defendants. Against this decree of the learned District Judge a second appeal was again preferred to the High Court. That appeal came before a learned Judge of this Court sitting alone for the hearing of second appeals and the learned Judge of this Court, disagreeing with the learned District Judge dismissed the whole suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. It appears that an issue on the question of limitation was raised in the Court of the Munsif but there was no distinct finding upon it. In the Court of the District Judge who last heard the case it was raised somewhat faintly, and the learned Judge came to the conclusion that as the suit had been brought within 12 years of the disposal of the objection case before the Settlement Officer in 1905 the suit was within time. The learned Judge of this Court, however, has gone upon a different ground and in order to consider his objection to the plaintiffs' suit it is necessary to take it in two parts. With regard to that portion in respect of which the plaintiffs have established their title by purchase from the 4th party defendants, the learned Judge finds that in 1888 or 1889 a survey and settlement under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act as it then stood was made by a Revenue Officer and that in the course of that settlement the land in dispute was recorded as belonging to the Patni tenure of the first party defendants in Mouza Chandi Katwa and that it was in the actual possession of the 2nd party defendants as occupancy raiyats. In the opinion of the learned Judge of this Court the plaintiffs having failed to bring a suit to correct the entry in the finally published settlement record of 1888-89 within six years of publication, it is no longer competent to them to bring a suit for a declaration that the record of 1905 is wrong.

The contention is that as the prayer in the present suit substantially involves a correction of the record of 1888-89, the plaintiffs cannot be indirectly allowed to obtain a declaration which is barred by the law of six years' limitation. Now this raises the question as to what is the precise scope of the present suit. The present suit does not in any way concern itself with the entry in the Record of Rights published in 1888-89. It in terms only seeks for a declaration that the record of 1905-6 is incorrect. Section 111 A of the present Bengal Tenancy Act clearly confers the right to the plaintiffs to obtain a declaration in the terms of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Is there anything in the law which compels the plaintiffs to ask for a declaration in respect of the previous record before they can obtain the reliefs they now seek? The learned Vakil for the respondents before us has been unable to show any direct authority in support of his contention, but he has suggested that the case of Akbar Khan v. Turaban (1) is authority for the proposition that in the present case time began to run against the plaintiffs upon the publication of the first record. I have carefully examined this case and I can find nothing in it which supports the general proposition that where there are two consecutive finally published Records of Rights, it is incompetent to a party aggrieved by the second to ask for a declaration in respect of that second record without first displacing any prejudicial entries in the first record. On the contrary this case is authority for the proposition that a plaintiff seeking a declaration is entitled to sue upon each successive invasion of his right, and the learned Judges of the Allahabad Court cite with approval two other judgments of their Court recognising this principle, namely, Ilahi Bakhsh v. Harnam Singh (2) and Robert Skinner v. Shankar Lal (3). The same principle has been recognised in this Court in Brij Bihari Singh v. Sheo Shankar Jha (4) and Ramji Ram v. Sadhu Saran Lal (5). In each case it must be seen whether the invasion upon which the plaintiffs seek to base their cause of action was in fact an invasion or not. In Akbar Khan's case (1) above cited their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court dismissed the suit on the ground that where an adverse entry was made in 1895 in a settlement record and the plaintiff in 1903 failed to get that entry corrected by the Revenue Officer, such subsequent failure did not constitute a fresh invasion of his right. But that is not the case here. Here it is clear that in 1906 a fresh invasion of the plaintiffs' right occurred. They may have had a number of reasons for not pursuing their remedies in respect of the previous entry.

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 557; 31 A. 9; 5 A. L. J. 637; A. W. N. (1908) 252; 4 M. L. T. 444.

(5) 41 Ind. Cas. 11; 2 P. L. J. 493.

LATAFAT HUSAIN V. KALIKER NAND SINGH.

The entry did not create or extinguish any rights. It did not affect their title. It is found that they were in possession and there was no reason whatsoever why they should put the law in motion, for an owner in possession is not bound to sue upon every challenge to his rights. On the other hand in 1906 if they were of opinion that it was to their advantage to rebut the presumption created by the entry adverse to them, then although that entry in terms repeated the contents of a previous entry, there does not seem to be anything in the law which debars them from counting time from the date of the second entry. It is admitted that the suit is within the period of limitation under Article 120 if time began to run from the 12th January 1906. The case is not similar to Amir-ul-Din v. Saidur Rahman (6), where it was held that a plaintiff cannot by changing the form of his suit count a fresh period of limitation if in fact the real object of his suit is to obtain a declaration such as is contemplated by section 111A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That case has no bearing on the facts of the present case. Therefore, if the plaintiffs' title is not extinguished and if being in possession they were not called upon to bring a suit to declare their possession, then I see no reason why they should not be allowed to get a declaration that the Record of Rights of 1906 was incorrect. The learned Judge of this Court has relied upon the case of Reeves v. Butcher (7). That case followed Hemp v. Garland (8). Both those cases were based upon an English Statute of Limitation in regard to the recovery of debts the payment of which had been contracted for in instalments. It was held that if the contract was that upon the failure to pay any instalment the whole debt would become due, then if the creditor omitted to sue within the six years allowed by Statute from the date of the first default his remedy to recover not only the instalment but also the whole debt would be barred. Article 75 of the present Indian Limitation Act has made a slight change, but it also recognises the principle that omission to sue for the first default within the statutory period would ordinarily render the creditor incompetent to recover the whole debt. That principle has no bearing upon the case before us. Here time began to run against the plaintiffs upon the publication of each record, that is to say, upon each invasion of their right, and they do not seek to violate the principle that time must run from the earliest moment. So far, therefore, as that half of the land in suit which has been found to be situated within the plaintiffs' purchased lakhiraj estate is concerned, the suit is within time and the decision of Mr. Justice Atkinson is, in my opinion, wrong.

There remains the other half of the property. The position in regard to this is that the District Judge finds that the plaintiffs obtained possession in 1885 and that although the land is situated within the revenue-paying Mauza of the 1st party defendants, the plaintiffs have by adverse possession acquired a complete title. It is contended by the defendants that as that title matured not later than 1897, the plaintiffs were bound to bring a suit within six years of 1897 in order to obtain a declaration that they had acquired a prescriptive title by adverse possession. It is, therefore, urged that as the present suit was brought in 1907 it is out of time. Now it is quite clear that the plaintiffs were not bound to bring any suit at all for a declaration that they had acquired a prescriptive title. Their suit in 1907 was for the purpose of dispelling the cloud which threatened their title in the shape of the entry in the Record of Rights of 1906. I see no reason why they should not be entitled to a declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act; for being in possession all that they could demand was a mere declaration. The learned Vakil for the respondents is unable to cite any authority which requires every person who has acquired a title by adverse possession to bring a suit for a declaration that he has acquired such title. So far as the entry of 1882-1889 is concerned, the plaintiffs had not at that time perfected their title and consequently the entry, so far as it shewed the title of the 1st party defendants, was correct and the plaintiffs were not competent at that time to bring any suit for a declaration regarding the correctness of that entry. Here the cause of action in respect of the entry in the Record of Rights clearly arose when the record was finally published in 1906. The result, therefore, is that with regard also to this second half of the land in suit the bar of limitation does not apply and the plaintiffs, having brought their suit within six years of the publication of the Record of Rights of 1906, are well within time. The result is that the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court will be set aside and the appeal decreed with costs in all Courts.

Jurisdiction of the High Court in Civil Suit No. 252 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to an easement of light and air and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering, in certain respects, with the enjoyment by the plaintiff of her house and window. The facts as found by the learned Judge (and we see no reason to differ from his conclusions) are as follows:—The plaintiff's house adjoins the defendants' house to the north and in the plaintiff's southern wall there is a window, which has been in existence for nearly 30 years. The defendants have recently re-built the portion of their house opposite to this window, with the result that the eaves of the roof are now above the level of the plaintiff's window sill and the shutters of the plaintiff's window which open outwards cannot now be shut and opened as usual, because the defendants' roof obstructs their movement. The defendants have also constructed a channel to catch the rain water from their roof, which runs on the same level as the plaintiff's window sill and encroaches on plaintiff's wall and finally discharges into the plaintiff's courtyard. The water from this channel also overflows at times through the window into the plaintiff's bed room. In the room opposite the plaintiff's window the defendants have constructed two chimneys, one 1½ feet and one 5 or 6 feet from the window and the smoke from them goes into the plaintiff's room. The learned Judge has accordingly granted the declaration prayed for and an injunction ordering the defendants

(a) to remove the two chimneys opposite to the said window and adjacent to it;

(b) to lower the roof of the house and ground No. 8, Ramanuja Iyer Street, George Town, Madras, opposite to the said window so as to enable the plaintiff to open and close the window doors freely to the width of the said window by one foot;

(c) to re-align the channel in such a manner as to prevent the rain water from flowing into the plaintiff's room or into any portion of the plaintiff's house; and

(d) to remove two inches along the whole drain which encroaches on the wall of the plaintiff's said house.

There is no appeal as regards (d), and as regards (c) we need only say that defendants have failed to prove that they have any right to discharge water on to plaintiff's premises and consequently the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction restraining them from doing so.

The two orders to which objection is chiefly taken are (a) and (b). It has been found that defendants have not caused any serious diminution of light and air, but the smoke from the two chimneys pollutes the air passing into the plaintiff's house. As one of the chimneys discharges directly into the plaintiff's window from a distance of $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet, it is clear that a substantial nuisance must be caused, and of this we have evidence on the plaintiff's side. The chimneys have been newly constructed and the appropriate relief is to order their removal as being a nuisance to the plaintiff. Objection is taken to order (b) on the ground that the plaintiff, having only an easement of light and air, can have no right to open the shutters of her windows outwards and that such a right cannot be acquired as an easement. It is not suggested that the outer shutters have not been in existence ever since the window was made and consequently if any right can be acquired, plaintiff has acquired such right by prescription. It is contended on behalf of defendants that a right to open and shut windows cannot be held to be an easement, but Mr. Seshachariar is unable to quote any authority in support of his contention. The right appears to be an easement within the meaning of section 4 of the Easements Act, for it is a right which the plaintiff, as owner of her house and site, has, as such, for the beneficial enjoyment of that land to do something, i. e., to swing the shutters upon certain other land not her own. A similar right, i. e., the right to hang clothes on a line above another person's yard was regarded as an easement in Drewell v. Towler (1) and in America the same right of swinging shutters over a passage way was also regarded as an easement (Jones on Easements, section 10). This being so, we agree with the learned Judge that the plaintiff has acquired such an easement. It would be impossible to make an accurate estimate of the pecuniary damage sustained by the plaintiff in respect of the several injuries caused by the defendants and consequently an injunction is the only appropriate remedy. Defendants cannot complain of any hardship, for they disregarded the plaintiff's notice in writing given before the erection of their roof and even denied all the plaintiff's rights. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (7) — Execution — Mortgage decree directing mortgaged properties to be sold and in case of deficiency balance to be realised from other properties and persons of judgment-debtors—Limitation, commencement of.

A mortgage decree directed that the mortgaged properties should be sold and that if the sale-proceeds proved insufficient, the balance should be realised from the other properties and the persons of the judgment-debtors. An application for execution of the latter part of the decree was made more than twelve years after the date of the decree:

Held, (1) that under section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code time began to run from the date of the decree, and not from the date when the mortgaged properties were sold and that the application was, therefore, barred by time;

(2) that the direction in the decree was not a direction to pay money at a certain date within the meaning of clause (7) of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, as the date of the sale of the mortgaged properties was not certain.

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Coxe and Mr. Justice Ray, dated the 4th June 1913, reported as 24 Ind. Cas. 35.

FACTS.—This appeal arose out of the execution of a mortgage decree. It was directed in that decree that the mortgaged property should be sold, and if the proceeds of the sale were insufficient the balance should be realized from the other properties and the persons of the judgment-debtors. The application was presented more than 12 years after the date of that decree. The learned Subordinate Judge held that there were virtually two decrees at that time and that the period of 12 years did not run until what he regarded as the second decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, became operative and capable of execution. Accordingly, he held that the application was not barred.

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court, which held that limitation began to run from the date of the decree as fixed under Order XX, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, and the application was consequently barred by time See 24 Ind. Cas. 35. The decree-holder appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DUNEDIN.—Their Lordships do not see any reason to differ from the judgment of the High Court in this case. They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal. As the respondents have not appeared, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 84—Tender, what is—Usufructuary mortgage—Requisition by mortgagor for statement of accounts and expression of readiness to pay, whether constitutes tender—Assertion by mortgagee of title in himself, whether causes cessation of interest—Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), rules under, r. 41—Case involving large pecuniary value—Two sets of fees, award of.

The mere expression of willingness on the part of a mortgagor to pay the amount due on the mortgage cannot amount to a tender within the meaning of section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 438, cols. 1 & 2.]

The assertion of a title by the mortgagee in himself, coupled with a statement of the amount due by the mortgagor on the mortgage in reply to a requisition by the latter for accounts, will not amount to a dispensation of tender, nor cause a cessation of interest as from that date. [p. 438, col. 2.]

Under rule 41 of the rules framed under the Legal Practitioners Act, it is competent to a Court to award two sets of fees to a party where more than one Vakil has been engaged by him owing to the large pecuniary value of the case, even though it does not involve questions of special difficulty. [p. 440, col. 2.]

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—The Transfer of Property Act lays down the conditions relating to a valid tender and a valid deposit. It nowhere says that, even if a valid tender has not been made, interest will cease to run if the mortgagee happens to set up a right to the property in himself. [p. 438, col. 2.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The foundation of section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act is that the liability for interest on the amount due on the mortgage shall cease from the date of the tender, inasmuch as the person who has made the tender not merely has to produce money in order to make it but must also keep it ready for payment in Court or otherwise. There is a distinction between the proposal to make a tender and an actual tender, and there is no reason why a person who makes the former should be treated any better than a person who makes the latter, [p. 440, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 30 of 1910 dated the 25th December 1915.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—This appeal is in a suit to enforce a usufructuary mortgage, and the question that is argued before us is as to whether there was a valid tender of the amount due on the mortgage on the 17th January 1899 or whether the respondents dispensed with the necessity for such a tender. On either ground the claim is that interest ceased to run from the date mentioned. Mr. Narayanamurthi who has argued the case for the appellants before us conceded, and we think rightly, that what happened could not be stated to amount to a valid tender within the meaning of section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act. The so-called tender really depends on what the 2nd appellant wrote to the respondent on the date in question. That letter is Exhibit Va, and there he asked the mortgagee to give him an account of what was due to him and expressed his willingness to pay what was due to the mortgagee. In his reply the mortgagee stated that under the terms of Exhibit A, the deed of mortgage, he had acquired an absolute right to the property and, therefore, he was not bound to render any account to the appellants and refused to do so. He did, however, mention what was the amount that had become due on his mortgage. That amount was Rs. 3,19,946. It is argued that that would be the correct amount upon the terms of the mortgage, that is, calculating interest at the rates specified therein. This or any amount was never actually tendered by the appellants, nor was it sought to be deposited in Court. In fact, before the institution of the suit, no deposit or tender was made, and even now after decree, no portion of the amount due to the respondents has been paid. The mere expression of willingness on the part of a debtor to pay a debt cannot possibly amount to a tender within the meaning of the law. In fact, as we have said, Mr. Narayanamurthi did not contend so far. But he has strongly urged upon us that inasmuch as the respondent put forward the allegation that he had acquired an absolute right to the property and, therefore, the appellants were not entitled to redeem him, it must be taken in law to amount to a dispensation of tender.

On this point we have been referred to a number of Indian and English cases dealing with contracts for sale or other cases of reciprocal contracts; for instance, Dayabhai Dipchand v. Dullabhram Dayaram (1), Owners of the "Norway" v. Ashburner (2). But the principle laid down in those cases is that where there are reciprocal promises and one of the promisees waives or dispenses with the performance of the promise made to him, he cannot afterwards put forward the non-performance of that promise as an answer to a suit for damages. But as regards the question whether the interest on a debt ceases from the date of tender or deposit, that class of cases depends upon the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and upon a different principle. That Act lays down the conditions relating to a valid tender and valid deposit. It nowhere says that even if a valid tender has not been made, interest will cease to run if the mortgagee happens to set up a right to the property in himself. If the argument of the appellants were well founded, the position would be this: In every case where the mortgagee in good faith, as in this case, asserts that he has acquired an absolute right to the property, the mortgagor or the person who has purchased the equity of redemption, by reason of that fact alone, would be exempted from payment of interest, provided he has expressed his willingness to pay the debt. No authority whatever has been cited in support of such a proposition which, in our opinion, is altogether untenable. We have been referred to a Privy Council decision in Harendara Lal (1) 8 B. H. C. R. 133.

(2) (1865) 3 Moore. P. C. (N. S.) 245; Br. & L. 404; 11 Jur. (N. S.) 892; 13 L. T. (N. S.) 50; 13 W. R. 1086; 148 R. R. 62; 16 E. R. 92.

CHALIKANI VENKATARAMANIM GARU t. VATSAVYA VENKATA SUBHADRYAMMA.

Rai Chowdhri v. Maharani Dasi (3). There what happened was that under the contract between the parties the mortgagee engaged to appraise the mortgaged property if there was any proper negotiation for the sale of that property and it was brought to his notice. There was in fact a bona fide offer to purchase the property which was brought to the notice of the mortgagee in that case and he was asked to say whether he would appraise the property and fix the value. He refused to do so and in consequence the mortgagor was unable to find a purchaser for the property and re-pay the mortgage amount. Their Lordships held that the mortgagee having rendered impossible the sale of the property by the mortgagor by which the latter would have been in the position to re-pay the debt, the matter stood 'as if it was a case of tender.' Mr. Narayanamurthi has attempted to build an argument upon this phrase to the effect that their Lordships treated the case as one of a tender. But we do not think that there is any warrant for such an interpretation. There was no case of tender there and the Judicial Committee merely cited the case of a tender only by way of analogy. The other case referred to, Gopewar Saha v. Jadub Chandra (4), stood apparently on the same footing and none of those cases support the broad proposition which has been contended for before us on behalf of the appellants. We, therefore, hold that what happened between the appellants and the respondents in 1899 did not have in law the effect of making interest cease to run from that date. The Subordinate Judge also finds upon the evidence that, in fact, the 1st appellant had not the necessary amount at his disposal on the date of Exhibit Va. He is no doubt a large landlord with an income of about Rs. 40,000 a year. But the evidence does not show that he had, on the date in question, the amount which would be required to discharge the mortgage debt at his disposal. He was obliged to borrow even small sums of money and sometime after 1899 he got considerably involved in debt. He swore in the witness box that he had Rs. 1,50,000 in his chest. The Subordinate Judge has disbelieved that evidence and we think rightly. If he had anything like that amount with him at the time, his account books would have been the best evidence to show it. He must have kept accounts which he has withheld from Court, and it was not the case of the 8th defendant, the principal appellant before us, that he had been negotiating to raise money, still less that he had actually raised money in that way. We, therefore, accept the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that if Exhibit Va would be construed as an offer to pay, it was not a bona fide offer in the sense that the appellants had the means of making the payment at the time. It may be pointed out that the 8th defendant bought the bulk of the mortgaged properties for Rs. 2,40,000, while on 17th January 1899 the amount payable to the mortgagees was over Rs. 3,00,000. That also supports the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the so-called offer in Exhibit Va, if offer it can be called at all, was really not bona fide, for we are not prepared to hold that the 8th defendant was able and willing to pay that amount on the date in question.

The 3rd point which has been raised before us relates to costs. The Subordinate Judge has given a personal decree against defendants Nos. 3, 8 and 12 for the entire costs. As regards the conduct of the suit we think that the Subordinate Judge was right in saying that the way in which the defence was conducted was vexatious. Defendants Nos. 3, 8 and 12 have been rightly made liable to pay the costs finally. But we do not think that they ought to be made personally liable for the costs relating to the stamp duty. So that amount must be deducted from the amount of costs for which defendants Nos. 3, 8 and 12 have been made personally liable. In other respects, the decree of the Subordinate Judge is confirmed.

The 1st respondent's memorandum of objections relates to the expenses of the establishment charges, repairs to canals, etc., expenses for the village headman, service inams to village headman, and village duties and other similar expenses. The Subordinate Judge has allowed Rs. 3,000 a year for all these charges, which are amounts actually spent by the mortgagee. But the contention is that Rs. 4,000 is provided for in a lump sum in the deed of mortgage, that being the amount which was settled with the mortgagee as payable on account of these charges. The clause in question says that it is agreed that after deducting for Government taxes so much and Rs. 4,000 on account of establishment charges, etc., and other payments mentioned therein, the mortgagors should take an account of the balance of the net income from the mortgagee's officials on the 1st February of each year. The agreement is only to account for the balance and not with regard to any of the items mentioned in that clause. This view is suggested also by the clause at page 7 of the document which says that, if in addition to the usual earthwork which may have to be executed, any extensive repairs have to be done in respect of river Bunds, etc., in respect of these unusual expenses, the mortgagee is entitled to charge the actual amount paid in excess of the Rs. 4,000. There is no mention here as to the other items comprised in the Rs. 4,000, that is to say, it is not provided that, if for establishment charges, the mortgagee has actually spent more than what was taken into account, he would be entitled to the excess. Nor is it anywhere provided that if anything less than Rs. 4,000 is spent the mortgagee must account for the rest. It seems to us that with respect to these petty and recurring items of expenditure, which were of a variable character, both the parties agreed that they should be fixed at a certain figure. If all that they intended was that the actual expenses incurred under these heads should alone be allowed to the mortgagee, there would have been no necessity to fix this figure at all. We must allow the memorandum of objections with costs to come out of the estate.

(3) 28 C. 557; 29 I. A. 89; 5 C. W. N. 536; 11 M. L. J. 171; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 48 (P. C.).

(4) 32 Ind. Cas. 537; 22 C. L. J. 352; 20 C. W. N. 689; 43 C. 312.

CHALIKANI VENKATARAMAN GARU V. VATSAVYA VENKATA SUBHADRYAMMA

The 3rd respondent's memorandum of objections is not pressed and is dismissed.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with my learned brother's judgment; but I prefer not to base my conclusion on any implication from the particular reason which the 1st plaintiff gave in his letter, Exhibit V, for refusing to receive money from the defendants. The foundation of section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act is that liability for interest on the amount due on the mortgage shall cease from the date of the tender, inasmuch as the person who has made the tender not merely has to produce money in order to make it, but must also keep it ready for payment in Court or otherwise. It is clear that no money could have been produced in this case and that none was kept ready for payment. There is, no doubt, a distinction to be drawn between the proposal to make a tender, such as we have in this case, and an actual tender; but there is no reason why a person who makes the former should be treated any better than a person who makes the latter. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the appellants, who made no bona fide proposals and who, it is admitted, made no tender of any sort, cannot benefit by the principle of section 84. On the other points, I entirely agree with my learned brother's judgment.

This case coming on for hearing for orders this day, the Court made the following ORDER.—In this appeal Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar for the respondent has applied to us for fees for two Vakils under the new rule 41 framed under the Legal Practitioners Act. This Rule empowers the Court in cases of special difficulty or importance to allow two sets of fees to a party who has engaged more than one Vakil. This case involved about seven lacs of rupees, but it did not strike us that there was any specially difficult question involved in the appeal and in fact we did not call upon the learned Vakil for the respondent to reply. It is, however, urged that the case is of special importance having regard to the amount involved. We are inclined to agree with that contention; for the respondent, in view of the fact that no less than seven lacs were concerned in the litigation, was justified in engaging two Vakils. We, therefore, allow fees for two Vakils, which will be taxed according to the rules.

APPEAL NO. 86 OF 1911.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the cases which gave rise to these appeals may be stated shortly as follows:—

One Durga Charan Mookherjee died in 1898, leaving his son Madhu Sudhan an infant. Bistoo Charan brother of Durga Charan was appointed guardian under Act VIII of 1890 in respect of the properties of the minor on the 20th February 1900, and one Sarat Chandra Ray and three others executed a security bond on the 13th June 1900 as sureties for Bistoo Charan. The order appointing Bistoo Charan as guardian was, however, set aside on appeal by the High Court on the 23th January 1902, and on the 23rd August 1904, one Rajani Kanta was appointed administrator of the estate. On the 27th January 1905, he brought a suit for accounts for the period of Bistoo Charan's management claiming Rs. 12,000 and odd, and the sureties Sarat Chandra Ray and others were made defendants along with Bistoo Charan. After filing the suit application was made for attachment before judgment of the properties of Sarat Chandra, and on the 28th April 1905 a conditional order for attachment was passed and the order was served on the 9th May 1905. On the 19th May 1905, objection to attachment was made by Bistoo Charan and on the same day Sarat Chandra filed an affidavit stating that he was not going to alienate any property. On the 22nd May 1905, the conditional order for attachment was withdrawn. On the 12th January 1906, a fresh order for attachment before judgment was issued and served between the 19th and the 25th February 1906. A preliminary decree for accounts was passed on the 9th February 1906, and a final decree was passed on the 16th March 1909 for Rs. 10,867-8-4 in favour of Aftabuddin who had succeeded Rajani Kanta as administrator of the estate against Bistoo Charan and Sarat Chandra and the other sureties. While the said suit was pending Sarat Chandra executed six conveyances in favour of certain persons in respect of some of his properties. Two of these were executed in favour of Basanta Kumar Mukerjee, one dated the 29th September 1905 and the other dated the 25th December 1905. Two others were executed in favour of one Dewan Das, one of which dated the 31st December 1905 was in his own name and the other dated the 25th February 1906 in the name of his son Gour Das. Another Kobala dated the 14th February 1906 was executed in favour of one Shamsere Ally, and lastly there was a Kobala in favour of one Nanda Kumar on the 25th February 1906. After the final decree was passed in the account suit, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree against Sarat Chandra and attached his properties. Thereupon Basanta Kumar Mookherjee and the other purchasers preferred claims to the properties attached on the strength of the Kobalas executed in their favour. The claims of Shamsere Ally, Gour Das and Nanda Kumar were disallowed, but the claims of Basanta Kumar and Dewan Das were allowed on the 31st January 1910.

The decree-holder thereupon brought a suit No. 160 of 1910 for a declaration that the purchase by Basanta Kumar was fraudulent, collusive and benami, and that no title passed to him under the Kobalas. The suit was dismissed by the Court below and appeal No. 86 of 1911 has been preferred in that suit. A similar suit brought against Dewan Das (Suit No. 161 of 1910) was also dismissed and Appeal No. 269 of 1911 is against the decision in that suit. The suit (No. 53 of 1910) brought by Shamsere Ally was decreed, and Appeal No. 268 of 1911 arises out of that suit. The suit brought by Nanda Kumar was dismissed and no appeal has been preferred by him. The suit by Dewan Das upon the Kobala in the name of Gour Das (Suit No. 53 of 1911) was also dismissed by the Court below and Second Appeal No. 2918 arises from that suit. We will first deal with Appeal No. 86 of 1911 which arises out of Suit No. 160 of 1910, in which Basanta Kumar Mookherjee is the contesting defendant. It appears that the most valuable of the properties belonging to Sarat Chandra was a share in a big estate called Jugdia Estate, which was in the hands of one Hem Chandra Das as Sadar Malguzar, the proprietors getting their respective Malikanas from him. Sarat Chandra had 13-gundas 1-cowri 2-kags share at the time of the transactions we are dealing with in that estate. Hem Chandra Das had a Katchari at Char Parbati in that estate and Sarat Chandra served as Naib (principal officer) in the Katchary under Hem Chandra. Basanta Kumar as already stated purchased by two Kobalas dated the 29th September 1905 and 25th December 1905 respectively some shares of the Jugdia Estate from Sarat Chandra. By the first Kobala he purchased a 1-gunda 2 karas 1-krant, 1½-dantis share, and by the second a 5-gunda share. Basanta Kumar is a Pleader practising at Feni. He acted as a Pleader for Durga Charan Mukherjee so long as he was alive and afterwards for the administrator of his infant son's estate, i. e., the decree-holder. His lodging and that of Durga Charan were in the same compound with only a fencing between them. He was cited as a witness in the suit for accounts against Bistoo, Sarat and others, and the summons was served personally upon him on the 3rd July 1905 and he was examined as a witness in that case. In his deposition in the present case he at first stated that he could not say whether he knew about the account suit before the date of his conveyances. But when the bills of his travelling and other expenses which he had submitted to the Court in the account suit were shown to him, he had to admit that he knew of the suit before the execution of the Kobalas. It appears from the evidence of Hem Chandra that he, Sarat Chandra and Basanta Kumar gave evidence in the account suit at the same time and Rajani Mohan Ray, who was formerly the administrator of the estate of Durga Charan, swears that he told Basanta Kumar about the attachment before and after the first attachment and before and after the second attachment. The Kobalas in favour of Basanta Kumar and the other purchasers were all executed at the Parbati Char Katchari of Hem Chandra, the Sadar Malguzar of the Jugdia Estate. The first attachment was served at Char Parbati on the 18th May 1905, and the second on the 19th January 1906. There can be no doubt that Hem Chandra was fully aware of the attachment. He denied knowledge of the attachment in his deposition in the present case, but in his deposition in the claim case on the 11th December 1909 he stated that he heard of the first attachment and that it had been subsequently withdrawn on the objection of Sarat Chandra. Sarat Chandra was then serving under him as a Naib in the Jugdia Estate in the Char Parbatia Kutchari. The Court below observes:—"It is quite clear from the deposition of Hem Chandra Das that he knew about the attachment and Basanta Kumar made enquiries from him. Hem Chandra and Basanta Kumar are friendly. It is highly improbable that he would conceal the fact of attachment from him. Moreover he is a Pleader and was a witness in the suit on behalf of the administrator and appeared in Court on many dates. It is very probable that he should know it. Rajani Roy, the previous administrator, affirms that Basanta Kumar was told everything. He is no administrator now and has no concern with the estate or the present administrator or the owners and so I see no reason to disbelieve him. I, therefore, find that Basanta Kumar was aware of the attachment, and the attempt of Sarat to sell properties to avoid the liability." We entirely agree with this finding of the Court below, and we have no doubt that Basanta Kumar was perfectly aware of the attachment and of

Sarat's intention to dispose of his properties, to avoid liability under the decree which might be passed in the account suit, before he took the conveyances from Sarat. The next question is whether any consideration was paid by Basanta Kumar for the Kobalas. The first Kobala was for Rs. 1,365, and the second for Rs. 4,520. Hem Chandra and the attesting witnesses have deposed to the passing of the consideration and Basanta Kumar also deposes to the payment of consideration of the second Kobala. The attesting witnesses, however, are all the servants or relations of Hem Chandra. Basanta Kumar is a Pleader, he has money-lending business and landed properties. He has accounts, but he says that he has no account books to show the payment of the consideration of the Kobalas. Hem Chandra says that out of the consideration for the first Kobala in favour of Basanta Kumar certain debts which Sarat Chandra owed to certain ladies of his (Hem Chandra's) family were paid off. These loans are said to have been advanced to Sarat Chandra on behalf of the ladies by Hem Chandra on bonds, but he cannot say whether the bonds were registered or were unregistered or whether they were mortgage bonds. Hem Chandra has produced certain accounts to show the re-payment of the debts by Sarat Chandra. They are loose sheets of paper stitched together, and having regard to the evidence we do not think that it has been satisfactorily proved that Sarat Chandra really owed any debts to the ladies of Hem Chandra's family or that they were paid off out of the consideration money of the first Kobala. At the same time we are unable to hold that the Kobalas were benami. Hem Chandra, under whom Sarat Chandra was serving as a Naib, was helping him as much as he could and Basanta Kumar was the friend and Pleader of Hem Chandra, but we do not think it likely that he would act as the benamdar of Sarat Chandra or hold the property for him when he obtained no benefit from such a transaction. He had already purchased a share in the Jugdia Estate, which appears to be a very valuable one, and he would naturally be desirous of acquiring further shares in that estate. He had undoubtedly the means to purchase the share. There is evidence that since his purchase from Sarat Chandra he got his name registered in respect of the shares and received the Malikana of the shares purchased from Hem Chandra, the Sadar Malguzar. We do not think having regard to all the circumstances that Basanta Kumar purchased the property from Sarat Chandra benami or held it for his benefit. Basanta Kumar, however, is a Pleader and a man of business, and it is not likely that with full knowledge of the suit which was pending at the time, the attachmen's before judgments and the sure prospect of litigation which a purchaser from Sarat Chandra, would have to enter into in the event of a decree being passed against Sarat Chandra, should have paid the full value of the property which the consideration stated in the Kobalas represents. But if the Kobala were not benami and if Basanta Kumar paid some consideration it is idle to speculate how much he actually paid, and we must hold that the Kobalas were not without consideration. The transfers by Sarat Chandra, however, were made with intent to defeat or delay his creditor, the plaintiff, and the Court below has also come to the same conclusion. The only question, therefore, is whether Basanta Kumar was a transferee in good faith. The learned Subordinate Judge observes:—"It cannot, however, be conceived for a moment that Basanta Kumar intended to help Sarat in his fraudulent conduct. It appears from the evidence on the side of the administrator that Basanta Kumar was a well wisher of the estate of Durga Charan and had intimacy with him and his widow. Under such circumstances, it is highly improbable that he should help Sarat. It seems that he purchased for his own benefit without any thought of helping or injuring any one. The question is whether under these circumstances he is to be held as acting mala fide. The law has been elaborately discussed in the decisions reported as Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (1) and Ishan Chunder Das Sarkar v. Bishu Sirdar (2). Going carefully through these decisions I think the purchase of Basanta Kumar cannot be said to be mala fide merely because the result has been to defeat the creditor. We are unable to agree with the Court below on the point. There is no doubt that the transfers made by Sarat were fraudulent. They were made with intent to defeat or delay the plaintiff in the event of his obtaining a decree against him. When the first order for attachment before judgment of his properties was served, Sarat Chandra on the 19th May 1905 stated in his affidavit that he was not attempting to transfer any properties and the Court in rejecting the application for attachment on the 22nd May 1905 to a certain extent relied upon the said affidavit. The transfer made by Sarat Chandra in favour of Basanta Kumar on the 22nd September 1905 was certainly fraudulent and if the latter, with full knowledge of the fraudulent intention, obtained the conveyance, we fail to see how he can be said to have acted bona fide. The mere fact that the transfer was not a cloak for the benefit of the debtor or that it was for adequate consideration does not necessarily show that it was made in good faith. A mere knowledge of an impending decree or execution against the transferor is not sufficient to make the transferee a transferee otherwise than in good faith, when he does not share the intention of the transferor to defeat or delay his creditors. But as observed in the case of Ishan Chunder Das Sarkar v. Bishu Sirdar (2), "Indeed it would almost be a contradiction in terms to say that a transferee for value, who takes the transfer with the intention of helping the transferor to convert his immoveable property into money which can easily be concealed, and thus to defeat or delay his creditors, should nevertheless be treated as transferee in good faith, and the transfer to him should be upheld, though section 53 says that a transfer made with such intention is voidable at the option of the creditors. Where the transferee is a creditor of the transferor and accepts the transfer in satisfaction of the debt due to him, though with the knowledge that his so doing has the effect of defeating other creditors of the transferor, the transfer may come within the last paragraph of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act." AFTABUDDIN V. BASANTA KUMAR MUKOPADHYAYA.

v. Kennett (3) Lord Mansfield said: "If the transaction be not bona fide, the circumstance of its being done for a valuable consideration, will not alone take it out of the Statute. I have known several cases where persons have given a fair and full price for goods, and where the possession was actually changed; yet being done for the purpose of defeating creditors, the transaction has been held fraudulent, and, therefore, void." The authorities on the point were elaborately disowned in the case of Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (1) and we agree with the view taken by the learned Judges as to the result of the authorities. In that particular case, the transfer impeached as fraudulent was made in favour of a creditor and there was adequate consideration for the transfer, and it was accordingly held that the transfer was not invalid. The Judicial Committee in affirming the decision of this Court observed:—"The transfer which defeats or delays creditors is not an instrument which prefers one creditor to another, but an instrument which removes property from the creditors to the benefit of the debtor. The debtor must not retain a benefit for himself. He may pay one creditor and leave another unpaid." Their Lordships were dealing with a case where the transfer was in favour of a creditor.

In the present case, Basanta Kumar was not a creditor and he had full knowledge of the fraudulent intention of the transfer. Under the circumstances the transfer is void as against the plaintiff even if Basanta Kumar had paid full value for the property purchased by him.

It is said that the first conveyance was executed in favour of Basanta Kumar for payment of certain debts which Sarat owed to certain ladies of Hem Chandra's family. We have referred to the evidence on the point, and have expressed our opinion that the existence of the debts or the payment thereof by Sarat out of the consideration of the said Kobala was not satisfactorily proved. But assuming that there were some debts and that a portion of the consideration money paid by Basanta Kumar was applied in payment of such debts, we do not think that the transfer is for that reason valid. We fully agree with the observations quoted from Lockrain v. Rastan (4) in the case of Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (1) referred to above and which run as follows:—"A person who purchases for a present consideration is in every sense a volunteer; he has nothing at stake, no self-interest to serve: he may with perfect safety keep out of the transaction. Having no motive of interest prompting him to enter into it, if yet he does enter, knowing the fraudulent purpose of the grantor, the law very properly says he enters into it for the purpose of aiding that fraudulent purpose. Not so with him who takes the property in satisfaction of a pre-existing indebtedness, he has an interest to serve: he can keep out of the transaction only at the risk of losing his claim. The law throws upon him no duty of protecting other creditors. He has the same right to accept voluntary preference that he has to obtain a preference by superior diligence; he may know the fraudulent purpose of the grantor, but the law sees that he has a purpose of his own to serve and if he goes no further than is necessary to serve that purpose, the law will not charge him with fraud by reason of such knowledge."

So far as the second conveyance is concerned, there is no evidence that any creditor was paid off with the consideration for the said conveyance. Hem Chandra says that Sarat sold his property in order to raise money for a business in rice. If that is so, he converted his immoveable property into money, so that the creditor might be defeated. Under the circumstances we think the transfers in favour of Basanta Kumar are void against the plaintiff.

It is contended, however, on behalf of Basanta Kumar that this is not a suit under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act on behalf of the creditors to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, that the issues which arise in such a suit were not raised and evidence was not gone into on such issues, and that the plaintiff having challenged the conveyances as benami and without consideration and having failed to prove the same, the suit should be dismissed. There is no evidence that there are any creditors of Sarat other than the plaintiff, the suit, therefore, is not open to the objection that it was not brought on behalf of all the creditors.

It is true that the suit was based upon the grounds that the conveyances were benami and without consideration, and evidence was adduced in support of that case. The questions of benami and fraud appear to have been mixed up in the plaint and the evidence, but there are distinct allegations in the plaint that Sarat Chandra, with intent to frustrate the decree and with the help of Hem Chandra, created the false and fraudulent conveyances.

Basanta Kumar in his defence set up that he was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the attachment. The 4th issue raised in the case was: "Is the defendant No. 1 a benamidar for defendant No. 2 and is the Kobala set up by the defendant No. 1 a fraudulent and collusive document?" And the learned Subordinate Judge discussed the question whether Basanta Kumar purchased in good faith. After referring to the authorities relating to fraudulent conveyances, he observes:—"Going carefully through these decisions I think the purchase of Basanta Kumar cannot be said to be mala fide merely because the result has been to defeat the creditor. In this connection it is to be noted that in the plaint against Basanta Kumar the plaintiff did not want to avoid the sale because of the bad faith of Basanta Kumar. His purchase was impeached as benami. Had the plaintiff based his case on an intention to defraud, the defendant could have been able to prove that the property which Sarat had even after the sale to him, was sufficient to meet any claim of the administrator."

It appears, therefore, that although there were allegations to the effect that the Kobalas were fraudulent and were executed in order to defeat the claim of the plaintiff they were mixed up with the question of benami, and the attention of the parties was not directed to the points arising in a suit under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and evidence was not adduced on all such points.

In these circumstances, we think that for the ends of justice the case should be remanded for an enquiry into the assets of Sarat Chandra at the time of the sales to Basanta Kumar, and whether they were sufficient to meet the claim of the administrator in the account suit then pending. If the Court finds that they were not sufficient, the conveyance in favour of Basanta Kumar will be declared void as against the plaintiff. If, on the other hand, Sarat had sufficient properties at the time to meet the claim of the plaintiff, the suit will be dismissed. Costs will abide the result.

IN APPEAL NO. 268 OF 1911.

This appeal arises out of the suit (No. 53 of 1910) brought by Shamsere Ally who was unsuccessful in the claim case. He purchased 2½ gandas of the Jugdia estate by a Kobala dated the 14th February 1906. The purchase, therefore, was after the second attachment was applied for and before it was effected (between 19th to the 25th February 1906). Shamsere was already the owner of another 2½ gandas share, and appears to be a substantial landowner and shopkeeper. The consideration stated in the Kobala is Rs. 2,160. There is evidence to show that the consideration passed and there are entries in his jama khurach book showing payment of Rs. 2,160 as consideration besides other expenses for stamp and registration, etc., of the Kobala.

The Court in the claim case was of opinion that the jama khurch was not "above suspicion," but we do not see sufficient reason for rejecting the book as unreliable receipts have been produced to show that he received Malikana for the years 1313 to 1316. The account book of 1312, which was produced to show payment of consideration, could not contain entries relating to receipts of Malikana of that year, as the Kobala was executed at almost the end of the year (Falgoon), although the fact that the books of the years 1313 to 1316 were not produced is open to comment. The only evidence to show that the Kobala was benami is that of Aftabuddin and Basiruddin. The first merely says that he "heard" from many people that the Kobalas were without consideration, and the statement of Basiruddin (who is also one of the sureties) that Sarat told him about the benami nature of the transaction cannot be relied upon. Shamsere, it is true, admits that he did not make any enquiry about the property, but he was a co-sharer in the property, though the fact that he did not enquire whether the property purchased by him was 'under any debt or not' is suspicious. Having regard, however, to the facts that he already had a share in the estate and had the means to purchase the 2½ gundas in question, the evidence as to payment of consideration may be accepted.

Shamsere holds jamas in the Jugdia Estate of which Hem Chandra is the Sadar Malgozar and is the "master of giving or refusing settlements" as the witness Abdul Majid says. The Kobala was executed in Hem Chandra's Katchari where Sarat used to serve as Naib, and Shamsere resided at Char Chandia within the Jugdia estate. Basanta Kumar sometimes acted as his Pleader. But there is no direct evidence to show that Shamsere was aware of the suit against Sarat, or of the attachments before judgment or that he purchased with knowledge of the fraudulent intention of Sarat in disposing of his properties, although all the circumstances raise a suspicion that he was aware of the facts. In the absence of the evidence, however, the Court cannot act upon mere suspicion, and under the circumstances we are unable to differ from the Court below or to hold that the purchase was not bona fide. This appeal accordingly will be dismissed, but in the circumstances we direct that each party do bear its own costs.

IN APPEAL NO. 269 OF 1911.

This appeal arises out of the suit (No. 161) brought by Aftabuddin against Dewan Das, whose claim was allowed in the claim case. The suit relates to 1-gunda share of Jugdia Estate purchased from Sarat Chandra by Dewan Das, on the 31st December 1905, for Rs. 1,296. Dewan Das is said to be more than a hundred years old: his son Gour Das, looks after his properties. Gour Das and a witness Nalini Kumar have been examined to prove the payment of the consideration. No jama khurach has been produced, but Gour Das says that they have no jama khurach. The Malikana receipts have, however, been produced [Exhibits B 11 (1) to B 11 (4)]. The case bears a general resemblance to the case of Shamsere Ally. The Kobala was executed at the Katchary of Hem Chandra and the witnesses to it were the amlas of Hem Chandra. Dewan Das already had a 12½ gundas share in the estate. His son Gour Das admits that Sarat told him about his debts, but he did not enquire into the particulars. Dewan Das lives at Char Chandia within the Jugdia estate, and appears to be a substantial man. The only evidence as to the Kobala being a benami transaction is that of Aftabuddin or Basiruddin and the observations we have made with respect to them in the case of Shamsere Ally apply to this case also. There is no direct evidence to show that Dewan Das or his son Gour was aware of the suit against Sarat or the attachments or that they had knowledge of the fraudulent intention of Sarat in disposing of his properties, although as in the case of Shamsere a suspicion arises that they were aware of the facts. Under the circumstances, we must dismiss this appeal also, each party to bear his own costs.

IN SECOND APPEAL NO. 2918 OF 1913.

We now come to the second appeal preferred by Dewan Das which arises out of suit (No. 53 of 1911) brought by him for declaration of his right to 1-gunda 3-karas share of the Jugdia Estate which was purchased by him in the name of his son Gour Das by a Kobala dated the 26th February 1906, that being the last Kobala by which Sarat Chandra sold away his share in the Jugdia Estate. The suit was tried by another Subordinate Judge and he came to the conclusion that the evidence regarding the passing of the consideration was very doubtful but that even supposing that the amount was actually paid to Sarat, "there could be no doubt that the object of the Kobala was to convert the property out of the reach of the decree expected to be passed in the account suit," and that the plaintiff had full knowledge of the fraudulent intention of Sarat. The suit accordingly was dismissed by the Court of first instance. On appeal the learned District Judge affirmed the decree of the first Court. The learned

JANARDAN GANGESH KHADILKAR v. RAVJI BHIKAJI KONDKAR.

Judge says:—"The evidence as to the passing of the consideration was held to be unsatisfactory by the lower Court. I do not differ from the lower Court on this point. It may or may not be true. But I cannot believe that the plaintiff or rather his son Gour had no knowledge of the proceedings against Sarat." Then after making certain other observations he states his conclusion thus:—"But no unquestionable evidence is forthcoming to prove the passing of consideration and the Courts must presume the facts to be according to the common course of natural events and that Gour had knowledge of Sarat's motive in disposing of his property." The finding that the consideration for the Kobala was not proved by unimpeachable evidence is a finding of fact and is binding upon us in second appeal.

It is true that we have in appeal No. 269 upheld the first Kobala of Dewan Das on the ground that there was no direct evidence that he had knowledge of the attachments or the fraudulent intention of Sarat. But that Kobala was executed on the 31st December 1905 and the Kobala in the present case was executed on the 26th February 1906. It was the last Kobala by which Sarat disposed of his share in Jugdia Estate, and it is so recited in the Kobala itself.

It may at first sight seem anomalous that the same person (Gour Das) who obtained both the conveyances should be held to have had knowledge of the fraudulent intention of the transferor in the one case and not in the other, though the circumstances disclosed are somewhat similar in both cases. But he might have had no knowledge of such intention in December 1905 when the first Kobala was taken, whereas he might have knowledge of it two months later. The suit relating to the second Kobala was instituted later. We do not know what evidence was adduced in this suit or what presumption of fact could be drawn therefrom. However that may be, it is unnecessary to examine the finding as to the knowledge of the fraudulent intention. There is the finding that consideration for Kobala was not proved and Dewan Das is the plaintiff in the present case, while he was the defendant in the other case. It comes to us by way of second appeal and we are bound by the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. We must accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 833 OF 1915.

December 18, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Beaman and Mr. Justice Marten.

JANARDAN GANGESH KHADILKAR AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS

versus

RAVJI BHIKAJI KONDKAR—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Easements Act (I of 1882), ss. 2 (c), 17 (c)—Water rights—Right to take river water over another's lands in undefined channel, nature of—Presumption of lost grant—Easement.

From time immemorial the plaintiff and his ancestors as owners of certain non-riparian lands had been taking water from a river at or about a certain spot on the banks and thence over the lands of the defendants successively till the plaintiff's lands were reached. The water was brought not in a defined channel but was allowed to spread over and irrigate defendants' lands first and then the plaintiff's.

Held, that even if the right enjoyed by the plaintiff and his ancestors could not be acquired as an easement, there was nothing intrinsically unreasonable in it; on the contrary it was compatible with the usages and sentiments of the agricultural population in many parts of India and having been enjoyed from time immemorial it was saved by section 2, clause (c), of the Easements Act. [p. 449, col. 1.]

Per Marten, J.—The plaintiff's claim was to river water and not to mere surface water on the defendants' lands and consequently section 17 (c) of the Easements Act had no application to the case. [p. 450, col. 1.]

The presumption of a lost grant is one which may be made in India as well as in England. The presumption arises out of the strong desire of the Courts to find a legal origin for an ancient and uninterrupted user. The presumption may be rebutted like other presumptions. It also requires certain conditions and one is that the right could have been the subject of a grant. [p. 450, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Thana, in Appeal No. 17 of 1914, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Bhiwandi, in Civil Suit No. 452 of 1911.

JANARDAN GANESE KHADILKAR V. RAVJI BHIKAJI KONDKAR.

The Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah (with him Messrs. S. R. Bakhale and B. V. Desai), for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wadia (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—Assuming (but without deciding) that Mr. Jinnah's contention is sound, viz., that the plaintiff could not have acquired the right which he is suing to enforce under the Indian Easements Act, still the case is saved by section 2, clause (c), of that Act.

The lower Courts have found concurrently, as a fact, that the plaintiff has acquired this right and enjoyed it from time immemorial.

Even if it were a right that could not be acquired as an easement, there is nothing intrinsically unreasonable in it. On the contrary it is compatible with the usages and sentiments of the agricultural population in many parts of India. In my opinion the decree of the Court below must be confirmed and this appeal dismissed with all costs upon the appellants.

MARTEN, J.—This second appeal raises an interesting question as to water rights which has been decided in plaintiff's favour in both the Courts below. The facts proved show that from time immemorial the plaintiff and his ancestors as owners of certain non-riparian lands have been taking water from a river at or about a certain spot on the river banks, and thence over the lands of the defendants successively till the plaintiff's lands are reached. The water thus taken has not flowed in a definite channel over the defendants' lands, but has followed the general lines indicated by the colour blue, viz., first to the south of the westernmost embankment coloured red on the map in the suit, and then bifurcating almost at right angles east and west. The map is not so helpful as it might be. It contains no scale and no compass bearings, and only shows a portion of the river, viz., that to the east of the embankment I have mentioned. It is on the site of this embankment that the water has hitherto been taken. The embankment itself was only built some eighteen years ago but the findings are that the plaintiff then pierced this embankment so as to admit of the water flowing as before, and that the pipe he subsequently placed for that purpose was a hollowed palm tree which he subsequently renewed. It was then that the defendants obstructed the pipe and the flow of water for the first time, and consequently this action was brought. The embankment I have referred to is called "the dam in dispute" in the Court of first instance, and must not be confused with the dam which from time to time has been placed by the plaintiff and others in the river bed itself so as to ensure a supply of water in time of drought or scarcity.

The technical difficulty here is that the water has been brought not in a defined channel but has been allowed to spread over and irrigate the defendants' lands first and then the plaintiff's. This indeed appears to be a common method of irrigation in India [see Villuri Adinarayana v. Polimera Ramudu (1)]. It has at any rate been the method adopted for very many years for irrigating the paddy fields in dispute in the present case. Accordingly the contention of the defendants that the plaintiff's right, if established, "would tend to the total destruction of the defendants' property" within the meaning of section 17 (a) of the Indian Easements Act may be summarily dismissed.

The defendants' substantial objection is that the right claimed is really one "to surface water not flowing in a stream" and hence cannot be acquired as an easement under the Indian Easements Act [see section 17 (c)], nor be the subject of a presumed lost grant. In my judgment that is not really the right which the plaintiff is claiming. He is really claiming the right to take the water from the river without interruption by the defendants, and to have it conveyed over their lands. According to the Court of first instance the plaintiff alleges that "from the time of his ancestors the plaintiff has been in the habit of taking the water of that river for irrigating his lands." The plaintiff then proceeds to give details as to how that water is taken and reaches plaintiff's lands.

Some difficulty was caused by the fact that a large portion of the embankment in question appears to be on land belonging to Government, and not to the defendants as they alleged. The Collector, however, does not appear to take any objection, and so far as the present parties are concerned, I do not know that the point is really very material. Defendant No. 3 is now the Government tenant but has been warned not to obstruct the plaintiff in taking the water.

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 648; 37 M. 304 at p. 306; 12 M. L. T. 637; 24 M. L. J. 17.

JANARDAN GANESH KHADILKAR V. RAVJI BEIKAJI KONDKAR.

If, then, my view of the facts is correct, the claim is to river water and not to mere surface water on the defendants' lands and consequently section 17 (c) does not apply.

It is no doubt true that the method of conveying that river water over the defendants' lands creates a difficulty, for some is used to irrigate the defendants' lands or may be lost by percolation, and on the other hand the volume of general water on the defendants' lands may be affected by rain water falling on their lands or from other like cause. This might, however, happen just the same if the water was conveyed in a definite open channel. Some of the river water might still be diverted by cross-cuts in that channel on the defendants' lands. Further, rain water falling on the defendants' lands might easily increase the volume of water in the open channel. One may, I think, fairly assume that the method actually adopted in the present case of conveying this river water for all these years is the one best suited to local requirement, and preferable in particular to a definite channel with cross-cuts. Budhu Mandal v. Malat Mandal (2) and Kensit v. Great Eastern Railway Co. (3) are instances of an easement or grant for river water across certain lands.

But the plaintiff does not necessarily depend on the Indian Easements Act. Section 2 (c) provides that nothing in that Act is to derogate from "any right acquired before this Act comes into force". Had then the plaintiff or his predecessors in-title acquired any such right before the Indian Easements Act came into operation? I think he had. The decisions in Ramessur Persad Narain Singh v. Koonj Behary Pattuk (4) and Rajrup

Kuer v. Abul Hossein (5) show that the presumption of a lost grant is one which may be made in India as well as in England. The presumption arises out of the strong desire of the Courts to find a legal origin for an ancient and uninterrupted user. The presumption may be rebutted like other presumptions. It also requires certain conditions, and one is that the right could have been the subject of a grant. As Lord Selborne puts it in the leading case of Goodman v. Saltash Corporation (6): "An open and uninterrupted enjoyment from time immemorial under a claim of right seems to me to be all that is necessary for a presumption that it had such an origin as would establish the right, if a lawful origin was reasonably possible in law."

Is then the grant of the right claimed reasonably possible in law? I think it is. It is true that the plaintiff is a non riparian owner. Presumably, therefore, the riparian owner of the embankment in question could not have made a grant of the river water so as to affect the lower riparian owners [see Ormerod v. Todmorden Joint Stock Mill Co. (7) and McCartney v. Londonderry and Lough Swilley Railway Co. Ltd. (8)]. But the grant would at any rate be good as against such grantor (see same cases), and I assume also against his sequels in title. And the lower riparian owner could not complain unless he was injuriously affected in fact. [See Kensit v. Great Eastern Railway Co. (5)]. Further, as between himself and the lower riparian owners, the grantor might justify the user by a grant from the lower riparian owner or by prescription [see McCartney's case (8)]. In this very case we find a dam erected in the river bed, and this I suppose could only be justified against lower riparian owners by grant or prescription. Possibly the non-riparian grantee could not sue the lower riparian owners in his own name [see Ormerod's case (7)]. Here, however, the defendants or their predecessors are either the original grantors of the river water, or else are the grantors of the right to have such water conveyed over their land in the way specified. In other words, I think it reasonably possible in law that the defendants' predecessors could have granted the right to convey definite river waters over their lands notwithstanding that such river waters flowed or passed through the defendants' lands in no definite channel. In this respect the case presents a considerable resemblance to that of Villuri Adinarayana v. Polimera Ramudu (1).

It was suggested that the pleadings in the present case did not permit of the presumption of a lost grant. The plaint, however, clearly pleads the fact of immemorial user, and it is this fact which raises the presumption in law. Further, this very point is dealt with in the judgment of the Court of first instance at page 22, line 41. If necessary, therefore, the pleadings should be treated as amended so as to raise this point expressly, and I decide this case on that footing.

Some objection was made as to the form of the original decree. No objection appears to have been taken on this head in the lower Appellate Court, and I do not see that it is essential to vary the form of the decree. In effect the injunction is intended to preserve the immemorial user.

In my judgment the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SHEODARSHAN DAS SHASTRI—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by one member, whether can be impeached by other members not parties to alienation—Stranger, whether can impeach alienation—Grant of property to mahant and his heirs, whether grant in favour of temple—Appeal by legal representative of deceased party—Procedure.

If one or more members of a Hindu joint family, purporting to act on behalf of the family as a whole, make an alienation of joint family property, it is open to those members of the family who did not join in the alienation, to contend that the alienation was made without authority and not for valid necessity or for the benefit of the joint family and that it is not enforceable. But such alienation is good as against a person who is not a member of the joint family and does not claim through the joint family. [p. 455, col. 2.]

A grant of property made under a deed in favour of a mahant of a temple and his heirs for the services rendered by the mahant to the temple is not a grant of the property to the idol or to the temple, and the mahant and his heirs are competent to deal with the property as their private property. [p. 457, col. 1.]

A legal representative of a deceased party is not entitled to appeal as such legal representative without first obtaining an order of the Court bringing him on to the record in that capacity. [p. 456, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—The suit out of which this appeal and the connected Appeal No. 317 of 1915 arise, was brought to enforce a mortgage-deed of the 10th of January 1881. The property hypothecated was the equity of redemption in a revenue-free grant in village Gadaya Latifpur and 500 bighas of revenue free land in another village called Khankara. It is recited in the deed itself that the latter of these two properties was already mortgaged with possession to the same mortgagees under a deed of the 15th of June 1866. Part of the consideration of the simple mortgage now in suit was the redemption of this older usufructuary mortgage on the land in village Khankara. Out of the total consideration of Rs. 10,801 for the deed in suit a sum of Rs. 7,184 was calculated as due on the usufructuary mortgage of the 15th of June 1866, and was set apart for the redemption of the said mortgage. One effect, therefore, of the deed in suit was that the mortgagors became entitled to re-enter into possession of the land in village Khankara, which had hitherto been in the possession and enjoyment of their mortgagees. It is further stated in the deed in suit that the revenue-free grant in village Gadaya Latifpur was also mortgaged with possession to the same mortgagees under a deed of the 18th of October 1865. It is only the equity of redemption which is hypothecated under the deed in suit. It is admitted that this mortgage of the 18th of October 1865 has never been redeemed. The relief sought in the present suit is to bring to sale the equity of redemption in respect of the revenue-free grant in village Gadaya Latifpur and the entire right, title and interest of the mortgagors in respect of the land in village Khankara. The mortgagors under the deed are as follows:—

1. Mahant Lachman Das, disciple of Mahant Hari Das.

2. Khubi Ram and Ram Ratan, sons of Gulab Das.

3. Hargobind, son of Hardeo.

The evidence on the record shows that the properties now in question in villages Gadaya Latifpur and Khankara were in the possession in the year 1826 of one Mahant Kesho Das, described as priest of the temple of Sitaramji. They were held by him under revenue-free grants made by the Maharatta Government. This Kesho Das appears to have had a number of chelas or disciples, and it seems clear from the record that he himself belonged to a celibate order of religious ascetics. Kesho Das died somewhere about the year 1828 and, under circumstances which will require to be further considered, he was succeeded in possession of the properties in suit by two persons, Hari Das and Gulab Das. The former of these took the title of Mahant, lived as a celibate and would seem to have succeeded Kesho Das in the office of priest. Gulab Das was a married man and brought up a large family, seven sons of his being shown in the pedigree the correctness of which has been admitted. Hari Das, however, adopted chela, and as his eventual successor in the Mahantship, Lachman Das, one of the sons of Gulab Das. This is the Lachman Das whose name appears as the first of the mortgagors in the deed in suit. Of the remaining mortgagors two are sons of Gulab Das, while Hargobind is a grandson of Gulab Das, his father Hardeo having presumably died before the execution of the deed in suit. There is a recital in the same deed to the effect that three other persons interested in the mortgaged property as descendants of Gulab Das are "not present here," and the executants of the deed undoubtedly purport to act for and on behalf of these alleged absent members of the family and to deal with the property as a whole, including the shares of the said absent members. The three persons thus specified are Har Prasad, an own brother of the executant Hargobind, Bhola, another grandson of Gulab Das, whose father Baldeo we must presume to have died prior to the execution of this document, and Bal Kishen, another son of Gulab Das. There remains one other son of Gulab Das called Bhupal, who is not accounted for in the above statement of facts. His name neither appears as an executant of the mortgage-deed in suit nor in the recital of those members of the family on whose behalf the executants of the deed purport to act. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary it seems a fair presumption that Bhupal had died prior to the execution of this deed, and there is no evidence on the record to prove the contrary. The nearest the defendants have been able to get is the production of certified copies of certain village records which purport to show Bhupal as alive in the year 1879. This does not prove that he was alive in 1881, and does not seem to me to outweigh the presumption of his death which may reasonably be drawn from the wording of the deed in suit. It is an admitted fact in the case that Lachbman Das adopted as his chela another grandson of Gulab Das, namely, Raghunath Das, son of Khubi Ram, one of the executants of the deed in suit. This Raghunath Das similarly became a celibate Mahant and succeeded Lachman Das in the office of Mahant in connection with the temple of Sitaramji. Raghunath Das has since departed from the tradition of the family by adopting as his chela a person named Banarsi Das who is an outsider, that is to say, not a descendant of Gulab Das, and in respect of whom it is alleged, though the matter has not been enquired into in the present case, that he is disqualified from succeeding to the Mahantship by the fact that he is a house-holder and a married man. At any rate, on the 29th of May 1907, Mahant Raghunath Das executed a deed by which he purported to transfer all his rights, including both his personal property and his office as Mahant and whatever interest he possessed as priest, manager or trustee of the temple of Sitaramji, to the aforesaid Banarsi Das. A suit was brought by Banarsi Das on the strength of this document, in which he impleaded all the descendants of Gulab Das, together with certain persons alleged to be transferees of property appertaining to the temple, but not the mortgagees under the deed now in suit or any representative of the said mortgagees. The suit was resisted upon a variety of grounds, and after it had been dismissed by the Court of first instance it came before this Court as First Appeal No. 307 of 1910, decided on the 23th of October 1912. The learned Judges of this Court expressly declined to determine the question whether the property in suit in that litigation, which included the property now in suit, was or was not trust property belonging to the temple of Sitaramji. Their decision proceeded upon this line of argument: either the property in suit was trust property, as alleged by Banarsi Das, that is to say, appertained to a trust of which Mahant Raghunath Das was, or had been, the sole manager and trustee, or it did not. If it did not, Banarsi Das obviously had no case at all: assuming for the sake of argument that it did, there was no evidence on the record to satisfy the Court that Raghunath Das had any right to nominate his successor at his own free will and pleasure, still less to transfer the office of Mahant, with the rights and duties of trustee and manager of the temple property, to another person during his own lifetime.

The present suit was instituted on the 29th of March 1910, that is to say, before the declaratory suit brought by Banarsi Das had been decided even by the Court of first instance. The foregoing recital of facts is, however, necessary to the understanding of the pleadings in the present suit; and in the view which I take of the case a proper appreciation of these pleadings is absolutely essential to the determination of the questions raised by these appeals. It may be said at once that the plaintiff is a transferee of the rights of the original mortgagees under the deed in suit, and also under the usufructuary mortgage of October the 18th, 1865. The determination of the present suit has, as a matter of fact, been delayed by the circumstance that a plea, raised by the defendants, against the validity of the plaintiff's document of transfer, was accepted in the first instance by the trial Court; but the decision on this point was taken to this Court in appeal and was disposed of by this Court on the 17th of November 1913 (vide First Appeal No. 21 of 1912 the record of which has been before us), with the result that the validity of the plaintiff's document of title was affirmed. It seems just worth while to note at once that the plaintiff is himself the trustee and manager of another religious endowment connected with another temple at Bindraban, and that the money which he has embarked on this speculation presumably comes from the surplus profits of the trust in his hands. It is entirely superfluous, therefore, to allow any considerations as to the feelings of the Hindu public with regard to the sanctity of temple endowments to interfere with the consideration of the questions of law involved in this suit. If the plaintiff succeeds he will bring this property to sale for the benefit of another religious endowment. Nor is it necessary that we should trouble ourselves overmuch with any considerations as to the general equities of the case. The plaintiff is a speculator who has bought up a disputed claim for what it may be worth; while the defendants are in the position of persons who have raised money upon property under a representation that they had every right to do so, and who are now seeking to repudiate the debt on the ground that the property hypothecated was not theirs to deal with.

The array of defendants as originally impleaded was as follows:—

The first defendant was Banarsi Das, who is described in the plaint simply as "disciple of Raghunath Das." The next six defendants were representatives of the family of Gulab Das, being his grandsons, great-grandsons or great-great-grandsons, together with the widow of a deceased descendant, who was presumably impleaded as a matter of precaution. The eighth defendant was stated to be an auction-purchaser of whatever rights Raghunath Das had possessed in the property in suit; while the ninth defendant was the successor-in-title of the original mortgagee, who had transferred his rights to the plaintiff. Subsequently, three more defendants were added; two of these were alleged to be also transferees of the rights of Raghunath Das in the property in suit; and Raghunath Das himself was also impleaded, apparently at the suggestion of the Court. He is described as "Mahant Raghunath Das, a disciple of Mahant Lachman Das, gaddi-nashin and managing trustee of the temple of Thakur Sri Sitaramji Maharaj, placed at Mauza Gadaya Latifpur." In the petition by which Raghunath Das was impleaded the plaintiff carefully refrained from admitting that Raghunath Das was in any way a necessary party to the suit. He admitted him to be the managing trustee of a certain temple; but his case was throughout that the property in suit formed no part of the endowment of that temple, or of the trust property in the hands of Raghunath Das. The property in suit was alleged by the plaintiff to be the personal property of the original mortgagors, and Banarsi Das was impleaded, instead of Raghunath Das, on the ground that the latter's deed of the 29th of May 1907, whatever might be its effect as regards the trusteeship and the trust property, did operate to transfer in favour of Banarsi Das whatever rights Raghunath Das possessed in any personal property of his own. In a petition which he presented to the Court after he had been impleaded, Raghunath Das disclaimed all interest in the litigation. He apparently intended to support the contention of Banarsi Das that the property in suit was not merely trust property, but appertained to an endowment in favour of the temple of Sitaramji of which Raghunath Das had been the sole trustee and manager, until he transferred his rights to Banarsi Das. Those defendants who resisted the suit raised a variety of pleas; but the point to be noticed for my present purpose is that there was a marked difference in the position taken up by Banarsi Das on the one hand, and by the descendants of Gulab Das on the other. Both these parties took the plea that the property in suit was trust property appertaining to the temple aforesaid, and as such inalienable;

but they were as much at variance amongst themselves as they were with the plaintiff. Banarsi Das expressly pleaded that the property in suit appertained to a trust of which he was himself the sole manager, by appointment in succession to Raghunath Das; he pleaded that "Radha Ballabh and other defendants, the heirs of Gulab Das, have no interest in the property." On the other hand, those of the descendants of Gulab Das who contested the suit denied that Banarsi Das had any interest in the matter. They not merely denied that he had succeeded to the interests of Raghunath Das, whatever they may have been, in the property in suit; but they set up a trust under which the descendants of Gulab Das were joint trustees along with whatever Mahant for the time being had succeeded to the rights of Hari Das and of Lachman Das. They pleaded, and in view of the position taken up by them they were clearly entitled to plead, that Raghunath Das was a necessary party to the suit, and that his absence from the array of original defendants was a fatal objection to the maintainability of the entire suit, inasmuch as he had been impleaded after the expiration of the special period of limitation prescribed by section 31 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), within which the present suit was instituted. The learned Subordinate Judge fixed a number of issues, and one of these issues was whether Banarsi Das or the defendant Raman Das (a grandson of Hargobind, one of the executors of the mortgage deed in suit) was the lawful successor to Mahant Raghunath Das. In the end, however, the Court below came to the conclusion that this was an issue which arose only as between two of the defendants and did not require to be decided in order to the determination of the suit. He overruled on various grounds all the pleas raised by all the defendants, except the plea taken by the descendants of Gulab Das to the effect that the shares of those members of the family who had not joined in the execution of the mortgage-deed in suit were not affected by the mortgage and could not be brought to sale in satisfaction of the same. On this basis he has given the plaintiff a decree for the full amount claimed by him, but enforceable only as against an undivided 17/24ths share of the property in suit. All the defendants except Banarsi Das have submitted to this decree, and I regard it as most important to insist upon the fact that the appeal now before us is by Banarsi Das alone. On the other hand the plaintiff has filed a separate appeal No. 317 of 1915, in which he asks that the decree of the Court below be modified by making it enforceable as against the whole of the mortgaged property. This appeal I propose to deal with in a separate judgment.

The memorandum of appeal presented by Banarsi Das is a somewhat prolix and argumentative document, but it has been agreed before us that in substance only three points are raised:—

(1) It is contended that the property in suit is trust property, belonging to the idol worshipped in the temple of Sitaramji at Godaya Latifpur, and to no other person whatsoever, so that the executants of the mortgage-deed in suit had no right to alienate the same and it cannot be brought to sale in execution of the mortgage decree.

(2) It is contended that Mahant Raghunath Das was a necessary party to the suit, and that the suit must fail on the mere ground that he was impleaded after the expiration of the prescribed period of limitation.

(3) A plea is taken, in the alternative, to the effect that, on the view of the facts taken by the Court below and assuming that the joint family formed by the lineal descendants of Gulab Das were owners, or part owners of the property in suit, then it should be held as a matter of law that the executants of the mortgage-deed had no right to hypothecate either their own shares or the shares of any person in the joint ancestral family property, and that this ground alone would be sufficient to warrant the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit.

I propose to take these points in the reverse order, because the last two can, in my opinion, be very briefly disposed of. I do not think there is any force in the third plea, and I propose to deal with it more in detail in my judgment on the cross-appeal filed by the plaintiff. For the purpose of the appeal now under consideration it is sufficient to say that this plea is not open to Banarsi Das. He is not, never was, a member of the joint family formed by the descendants of Gulab Das. If one or more members of a Hindu joint family, purporting to act on behalf of the family as a whole, make an alienation of joint family property, it is, of course, open to those members of the family who did not join in the alienation to contend that it was made without authority, that it was not made for valid necessity, or for the benefit of the joint family, and that it is not enforceable. As against a person like Banarsi Das, who is not a member of the joint family and does not claim through the joint family, the alienation is good.

In dealing with the question of limitation I have one further point to note. A document which is on this record at page A12 shows that Raghunath Das died on the 19th of January 1913, during the pendency of this suit in the Court below. The plaintiff made no attempt to have any person brought on the record as successor to Raghunath Das; and from his point of view he was obviously right in not doing so. He had contended throughout that Raghunath Das was not a necessary party to the suit and that any interest which he had ever possessed in the property in suit had passed to other hands. Banarsi Das in his memorandum of appeal to this Court says that he files his appeal in the capacity of trustee of the waqf property belonging to Thakur Sitaramji, representing Raghunath Das in that capacity. He has never applied to this Court to be brought upon the record as successor to Raghunath Das. Had he made such an application, it seems clear to me that it could not have been granted without some further enquiry, seeing that the right of succession to the office of Mahant and to the trusteeship held by Raghunath Das was a matter in controversy in this very suit. The document to which I have already referred does, no doubt, afford some evidence in support of the contention that Banarsi Das, whatever his rights may be, has succeeded in obtaining effective possession of the temple and of any property appertaining to the temple other than the property now in suit. At the same time it seems clear that no litigant has a right to assume to himself the position of legal representative of a deceased litigant, without making an application to the Court in proper form and obtaining the orders of the Court thereon. In the suit itself the position taken up by Banarsi Das was that he had already taken the place of Raghunath Das as manager and trustee of the temple in virtue of the transfer of the 29th of May 1907. The plaintiff impleaded Raghunath Das as manager and trustee of the temple, but denied that the property in suit had any concern with the trust of which Raghunath Das was the manager. The question of limitation, therefore, if it can be raised at all by Banarsi Das in this appeal, depends for its determination on the decision of the Court in respect of the main question. If the property in suit is found to belong to a trust of which Mahant Raghunath Das was, on the date of the institution of this suit, the sole trustee and manager, the suit will fail on its merits, and it must also be held to be barred by limitation on the ground that the trustee was impleaded after the expiration of the limitation period. On a contrary finding it would follow that Mahant Raghunath Das had, on the date of the institution of the suit, no interest in the property in question and was not a necessary party. This was the position taken up by Raghunath Das and by Banarsi Das himself in the Court below, and I very much doubt if the appellant can be permitted to resile from it now. I may say further that, after carefully considering the memorandum of appeal filed by Banarsi Das in connection with this question of limitation, I am by no means satisfied that it is incumbent upon us at all to hear Banarsi Das on the merits. He does not appeal in his personal capacity as Banarsi Das, defendant No. 1 in the suit. He expressly claims to appeal as the representative of Raghunath Das, the person subsequently impleaded as defendant No. 10 in the suit. He has, no doubt, adopted this attitude in the hope that it may lend force to his plea of limitation; but he has neglected to observe that he is not entitled to appeal as a legal representative of a deceased defendant, without first obtaining an order of the Court bringing him on to the record in that capacity. He has not amended his pleadings in any way in consequence of the decision of this Court in First Appeal No. 307 of 1910, and must be taken to stand by the position originally taken up by him that the trusteeship of the temple had been transferred to him prior to the institution of this suit by the deed of the 29th of May 1907. In the absence of any amended pleading on his part or of any application from him asking to be brought upon the record as the legal representative of Mahant Raghunath Das, after the death of the latter, and of any order to this effect from the Court, it seems to me that his appeal as filed is not maintainable at all.

It is only because this point was not properly brought out in the course of argument before us that I prefer to pass on to the consideration of the main plea raised by Banarsi Das, instead of throwing out his appeal on this ground alone. With regard to this question whether the property in suit forms part of a religious endowment, there is a great deal of evidence of one kind or another on the record and I quite admit that portions of that evidence have not been satisfactorily dealt with in the judgment of the Court below. At the same time it seems to me that the issue as between Banarsi Das and the plaintiff (and these are the only parties with whom we are concerned in this appeal) lies within a very narrow compass. I find no force in the contention, pressed upon us in argument, that the property in suit never belonged to Mahant Kesho Das, but was from the very outset a religious endowment, the true owner of which was the idol of Thakur Sitaramji worshipped in a particular temple. It is admitted that the revenue-free grants by the Maharatta Government in respect of the lands in both the villages in suit were at one time in existence in writing, but the grant in respect of village Gadaya Latifpur is not forthcoming. I find nothing on the record to lend colour to the suggestion made on behalf of the appellant that this document is in the hands of the plaintiff and is being wilfully kept back by him. It is expressly referred to in one of the older documents on the record as having been lost. What is described in the judgment of the Court below as "the original sanad of muafi Mouza Khankara, dated 10th Jamadi-ul-arwal 1321 Hijri" is on this record and has been produced by the plaintiff. It is a very ancient document and, partly in consequence of the defective processes employed in our Courts for the binding of records, is now in an extremely damaged condition. The official translators of this Court have been compelled to report that they are unable to prepare any intelligible translation of the document. The learned Judge of the Court below is a Muhammadan gentleman: I have no doubt that he was quite capable of reading the document in question with comprehension, and it would appear that he was able to do so while its condition was less dilapidated than it is at present. He states in his judgment that this sanad conveys the property as a personal grant or muafi from generation to generation; and I can see no reason why we should not be content to accept this account of its contents. There is nothing unusual or inconsistent with Hindu religious ideas in the making of a grant to the Mahant of a temple for the personal enjoyment of himself and of his successors after him. No doubt the person making the grant is influenced by the fact that the grantee is the priest of a temple and performs religious services in connection therewith, but that is no reason why a grant made for the enjoyment of the Mahant personally should be construed as a grant in favour of the idol as a juristic personality. Moreover, there is one consideration which seems to me decisive against the appellant as regards this part of the case. The one document in the appellant's favour, without which he would have no arguable case at all, is the bhetnama (deed of endowment, or of dedication) executed by Mahant Kesho Das on the 9th of May 1826. At the time when he made that grant Kesho Das obviously regarded himself as having full right of disposal in respect of the property dealt with therein. The appellant himself asks us to regard this document as creating an endowment in favour of the temple, or of the idol as a juristic personality; and this position is inconsistent with the suggestion that the endowment was already in existence, or that the idol was already the owner of the property and Mahant Kesho Das nothing more than a trustee. The one difficult point in the case is the meaning and the legal effect of this document itself. The learned Subordinate Judge has brushed it aside somewhat lightly with the remark that it was never acted upon. I freely concede to the appellant that this is not a satisfactory way of dealing with it. If the Court has before it a document which undoubtedly created a trust or religious endowment, it is not a sound position to take up that the document became of no effect as soon as the trustee or trustees appointed thereunder began to commit breaches of trust in respect of the properties thus placed in their hands. I think the document requires to be considered, both in connection with the pleadings of the parties to this appeal, and in connection with the available evidence bearing on the position of Kesho Das at the time, and the events immediately following on his death. We have it from Mahant Kesho Das that he had a good many chelas or disciples, and he was obviously anxious to arrange that the property in his hands should pass peaceably after his death into the hands of the two particular persons whom he desired to nominate as his successors. It is to be noted that he described them somewhat differently in the deed in question. He speaks of Hari Das as "my disciple, and of Gulab Das as my adopted son." Seeing that Kesho Das was certainly a very old man when he executed this document and that he died within two years of its execution, I think that we may take it that Gulab Das was already a family man in the year 1826, was married and had begotten children. The fact that he is described as "my adopted son," and not as "my disciple," suggests that Mahant Kesho Das himself was doubtful whether Gulab Das would be accepted by Hindu religious feeling as a qualified successor to himself in the office of Mahant and of temple priest. At the same time he was obviously anxious to make provision for Gulab Das and his family and to insure for their benefit a right to share in the profits of the property in question. It must be remembered, further, that he held this property under revenue-free grants. Those grants might or might not be confirmed by the British Government. The property itself, that is to say, the share in Gadaya Latifpur and the land in village Khankara, Mahant Kesho Das might perhaps dispose of by Will so as to secure peaceable succession to the same for the benefit of his legatees; but the value of the property would be greatly diminished if the Government refused to continue the revenue-free grant and proceeded to assess the land to revenue. I take it that these considerations dictated the peculiar form of the document which we have to consider. It is curiously worded, and one part of it is difficult to reconcile with another. In one place the Mahant purports to make a gift or dedication of the property in question (which by the way includes other property besides that now in suit) to Thakur Sitaramji as a juristic personality, and merely to appoint Hari Das and Gulab Das to perform the worship and services of the idol. Further on, however, he speaks of them as his "donees," and says that, while they should be careful to keep up the worship and services of the Thakurji, they are to regard themselves as owners of the gifted property and to enjoy the same as such. Another point which was not noticed in the course of argument before us, but which seems to me of some significance, is that the idol of Thakur Sitaramji spoken of in this document does not seem to be identical with the idol of which, according to the plaintiff, Mahant Raghunath Das was the managing trustee on the date of the institution of the suit. The latter is in a temple at Manza Gadaya Latifpur; but in the deed of 1826 Mahant Kesho Das describes himself as priest of the temple of Sitaramji situated in Mohalla Pulan in the town of Bindraban, and there is nothing in the document to suggest that the "Thakur Sitaramji" subsequently referred to is any other than the idol worshipped in this temple in the town of Bindraban. After the death of Mahant Kesho Das the question of the continuance of this revenue-free grant in favour of his legatees or successors was considered by the British Government and was the subject of a good deal of correspondence, extracts from which are to be found printed in this record. The revenue-free grant was continued; but it is beyond question that neither the temple, nor the idol of Thakur Sitaramji regarded as a juristic personality, was ever entered in the revenue papers as the holder of the grant. At page A6 of the record is an extract from the register of revenue-free grants relating to village Khankara. The name of the holder of the grant there given is "Hari Das Bairagi." There is a note that it was granted for the love of God and for the expenses of Thakurji in "Gadaria Ilaka Farrah." The name "Gadaria" in this place would seem to be a variant of the name of Gadaya Latifpur. A similar paper of the year 1868 relating to this latter village shows that the British Government finally remitted the revenue assessable on this village in favour of Hari Das and Gulab Das, heirs to Kesho Das. The word 'heirs' is to my mind of great significance. Under the heading 'designation of the tenure' appears the following entry:—"for the maintenance of the priest and the expenses of the temple of Thakur Sitaramji." In the mortgage-deed of October the 18th, 1835, Gulab Das and Lachhman Das, the successor of Hari Das, speak of the property in Gadaya Latifpur as constituting a muafi in perpetuity granted by Maharaja Sri Madho Rao Sahib Bahadur of Gwalior for generation after generation and upheld as such by the British Government, and as having been "in our proprietary possession up to this day." They unquestionably assume to themselves the right to deal with this grant as their own and to alienate it in such manner as they think proper. At the same time, while putting the mortgagees in possession, they reserved to themselves the right to receive one rupee daily from the mortgagees, "for the expenses of the temple of Sitaramji Maharaj situated in the village aforesaid." Now there has been much litigation arising out of this stipulation, and the question of the position of the mortgagors and mortgagees under this deed of 1865 does not come to us precisely as res integra in the present litigation. The documents which especially require consideration are a judgment of the District Judge of Agra, dated February the 19th, 1892, at page 10R of this book, and a judgment of the same Court, dated July the 12th, 1912. With regard to the former of these documents it is to be remarked that the decision of the District Judge was not affirmed by this Court on appeal: there was an order of remand which resulted eventually in a judgment (which the parties have neglected to print) by which the decision of the District Judge was considerably modified. The net result of this litigation has been that this allowance of one rupee per diem has been held not to appertain to any trust or endowment, either in favour of the temple or in favour of the idol worshipped therein, but to be a personal right reserved to themselves by the mortgagors. Further, it has been held that the successors of the original mortgagors are entitled to recover this allowance piecemeal in certain definite shares; that is to say, a right to receive one-half of the allowance has been affirmed in favour of the successor to the Mahantship, the other half the heirs of Gulab Das have been permitted separately to recover for the benefit of the joint family to which they belong. The decision of the District Judge of Agra in the litigation of 1912 seems to me of particular importance. I do not say that it operates as res judicata as between Banarsi Das and the plaintiff. But even as between them it is relevant evidence, as an instance in which a certain right was contested and was affirmed by the Court. In that litigation the present plaintiff, as successor of the original mortgagees, was arrayed on one side along with Raghunath Das, while the descendants of Gulab Das, who were claiming a half share in the arrears of the daily allowance, were arrayed upon the other. In deciding that the heirs of Gulab Das were entitled to receive the half share claimed by them, the learned District Judge expressly proceeded upon a finding that the mortgagors in the deed of 1865 had hypothecated their personal property, and not endowed property belonging to the temple for the services of which it was said that the allowance ought to be expended. It seems to me that this finding is conclusive as between the plaintiff on the one hand and the descendants of Gulab Das on the other, and this may be the reason why the latter have not seen fit to contest this appeal. The position of Banarsi Das is not quite the same; but we must limit ourselves to a consideration of the case as it stands between the appellant and the respondent now before us on their own pleadings, and on the evidence on the record it seems to me that Banarsi Das has no substantial case. The one document in his favour is the bhetnama of May the 9th, 1826, and that document, if it is evidence of any kind of trust, is no evidence at all of the particular trust alleged and contended for by Banarsi Das in this case. On any possible interpretation of that deed, it does not create a trust the benefits of which are to go wholly to the temple of Thakur Sitaramji, still less to a temple of that deity situated in Gadaya Latifpur; still less does it create a trust of which the sole manager and trustee shall be the Mahant of the temple for the time being. If this document can be construed as creating any sort of a trust, then it is a trust for the maintenance of the worship of the idol in a certain temple, but principally for the benefit of the trustees themselves, and these trustees are Mahant Hari Das and his successors after him and Gulab Das and his descendants after him. If I felt that this appeal could not be disposed of without going further into the question of the possible creation of a trust of this nature, and the legal consequences which would follow in the event of such a trust being proved, I should have a good deal more to say; but I do not think this question is now in issue. Mahant Banarsi Das (as I observe that he now calls himself) set up a trust for the benefit of the idol Thakur Sitaramji, of which he was himself the sole manager and trustee. The plaintiff admitted the existence of a trust in favour of the idol of which Mahant Raghunath Das was the sole manager and trustee, but denied that the property in suit appertained to that trust. So far as the parties now before us are concerned, they went to trial on this issue and the one piece of evidence which can be seriously relied on in favour of Banarsi Das is the document of 1826, which is no evidence that the property in suit belongs, or ever belonged, to a trust exclusively in favour of the idol in question, or of which the Mahant of the temple for the time being was the sole trustee. All the other evidence on the record is entirely against Banarsi Das, and in favour of the contention that the mortgagors of 1881 were right in saying that they had a power of disposal in respect of the property dealt with by the deed in suit.

If it be suggested that I am taking too narrow a view of the pleadings, and that Banarsi Das should be allowed at this stage to set up, at least by way of an alternative pleading, the alleged rights of the descendants of Gulab Das by way of jus tertii, although he had expressly denied the existence of those rights in his written statement, even then it seems to me that the position is clear. If Banarsi Das can be heard to plead the rights of the descendants of Gulab Das, he cannot raise on their behalf any plea which would not be open to them. And in my opinion they are precluded by the decision of the District Judge of Agra, of July the 12th, 1912, from asserting that the property now in suit, or rather the half share in that property with which they are concerned, is not their personal property. They have obtained, as against the present plaintiff, a decree which proceeded upon an express finding to the above effect, and which without that finding would have been impossible. On these grounds I am of opinion that there is no force in this appeal, and that it must be dismissed with costs.

WALSH, J.—I agree in the order dismissing the appeal. I do so with some hesitation, solely because I entertain an uncomfortable feeling that the deed of 1826 created a religious endowment of property which could not thereafter be legally alienated under any circumstances except for the purposes of such endowment, and that we are impliedly sanctioning what may be described as a prescriptive right to divert trust property from its original purpose without the approval of any Court. I think the property and those in possession of it have long ceased to pay any but a perfunctory and inconsiderable tribute either in spirit or in cash to the wishes of the original founder of the endowment.

I recognize, however, the force of my brother's observation with reference to the feelings of the Hindu public in this particular case, and having regard to the special circumstances and to the special form in which the case now comes before us in appeal, I think that the order proposed does substantial justice between these parties.

By THE COURT.—The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Execution—Application for transfer of decree, dismissal of—Subsequent application for attachment—Limitation—Exclusion of time occupied in appeal and second appeal against first order.

A decree-holder applied in the Tinnevely Munsif's Court on 13th September 1909 for transfer of his decree to the Ambasamudram Munsif's Court. The application was rejected by the Munsif but was allowed in appeal. In second appeal, however, the High Court restored the Munsif's order on 13th February 1913. The decree-holder then applied for attachment of the judgment-debtor's properties on 14th October 1913:

Held, that the application was barred by limitation and that the time occupied in the appeal and second appeal in the matter of the first application could not be excluded under section 14 of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as the application was proceeded with in a Court having jurisdiction and the decree-holder could not be said to have pursued his remedy through a bona fide mistake in the wrong Court. JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is one of limitation in connection with a petition for execution. The decree-holder made an application for execution, No. 1571 of 1909, on the 13th September 1909, the object of the application being to get a transfer of the decree from the Tinnevely Court to the Ambasamudram Munsif's Court. The application was dismissed on two grounds by the District Munsif, firstly, that it was not shown that there was no property of the judgment-debtor within the local limits of the Tinnevely Court and secondly, that the application was barred by limitation. Then on appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that order. But the High Court in second appeal restored the order of the District Munsif. This was on the 13th February 1913. The present application was put in on the 14th October 1913 and limitation is said to be saved by deducting the time between the filing of the application on the 13th September 1909 and the date of the High Court's order, 13th February 1913. The District Judge, who has held in favour of the decree-holder, applied section 14 of the Limitation Act to this case. But it seems to us that that section has no application because it could not be said that the application was proceeded with in a Court without jurisdiction, that is to say, that the application was infructuous because it was proceeded with in a Court without jurisdiction or on a similar ground. The Tinnevely Court had jurisdiction to deal with the application for transfer, though it could make the order only if certain facts were proved. It could not be said, therefore, that the decree-holder was pursuing his remedy through a bona fide mistake in the wrong Court. Further the relief that is now sought, that is, attachment of properties in the Tinnevely Court is not the same relief which was asked for in the application of the 13th September 1909, because all that was asked for in it was transfer of the decree for execution to another Court.

Then the learned Vakil for the respondent has asked us to uphold the order of the District Judge on the basis of the ruling reported as Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (1), following the ruling in Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (2). There what was apparently held was that since the party against whom limitation was pleaded was in fact litigating the same question in another Court, the remedy of the party was suspended during the time that that litigation occupied. This apparently was the principle, so far as I understand it, upon which that case proceeded. I am unable to hold that it applies to the present proceedings. The one complete answer to the argument of the learned Vakil for the respondent is that the remedy which is now sought could have been asked for if he had only put forward proper facts before the Court even while the application of the 13th September 1909 was pending litigation. It was open to him to find out the facts and make an effective application for attachment of the properties. The appeal must be allowed and the execution petition of 14th October 1913 is dismissed with costs here and in the Court below.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree and only wish to add that I cannot read the decision in Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (1) as in any way affecting the scope of section 14 of the Limitation Act. There is no doubt that the appellant must succeed.

APPELLANT

THE BHARGAVA COMMERCIAL BANK

—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 176—Pawnee, sale by, of pawned articles—Notice, reasonable, what is.

Section 176 of the Contract Act does not contemplate that the pawnee should give the pawnor information of the actual date, time and place of sale. The section does not mean that a sale should be arranged beforehand and that due notice of all the details should be given to the pawnor. All that the law intends is that the pawnee should give the pawnor a reasonable time within which to exercise his right of redemption and proceed to sell if the property be not redeemed. [p. 462, col. 2; p. 463, col. 1.]

The pawnee's right to sell is analogous to the seller's right of re-selling granted under section 107 of the Contract Act and the two rights must be exercised in more or less the same method. [p. 463, col. 1.]

A pawnee of certain articles of jewellery gave notice to the pawnor that unless the money was paid within a fortnight, the jewellery would be sold without further reference to him. The notice did not mention the actual date, time and place of the intended sale. The articles were sold but the full amount of the debt was not realized. In a suit by the pawnee for the balance, it was contended that the notice given was not a reasonable notice of sale within the meaning of section 176 of the Contract Act:

Held, that the notice given was a reasonable notice of the intended sale within the meaning of the section. [p. 463, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana (with him Mr. Mangal Prasad Bhargava), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are simple. The appellant-defendant pawned to the respondent Bank certain gold and silver ornaments as security for a loan in the year 1912. In January 1914 the Bank pressed the defendant for payment and stated that they had an offer of Rs. 1,480 for the ornaments and that if the defendant did not pay within a week the ornaments would be sold for the value offered and that a suit would be brought for the balance. The defendant in reply asked for full particulars of the offer and also asked for time for payment. In his reply he stated that the ornaments were worth more than Rs. 2,400 and that he would hold the Bank responsible if they were sold for less than their value. The Bank on the 26th of February 1914 sent in a statement of account and a list of the ornaments pawned and again gave the defendant fifteen days' time within which to pay, otherwise the Bank would sell. The Bank did not carry out its threat. On the 9th of May 1914 the defendant again asked for 15 days' time as he had a chance of paying off the debt. The correspondence continued and again on the 18th of August 1914 the Bank wrote to the defendant stating that it had an offer of Rs. 1,500 for the ornaments and would proceed to sell. On the 25th of August the defendant asked for further time. On the 12th of September the Bank agreed, and then on the 15th September it again wrote to the defendant saying that unless the money was paid within 15 days the jewellery would be sold without further reference to him. The Bank did not sell on the 30th of September, but it actually waited till the 5th of October and then carried out the sale. A suit was then brought for the balance and both the Courts below have decreed the claim. One point was urged in the Court below, and that is that the notice given on the 15th of September was not a reasonable notice of the sale within the meaning of section 176 of the Contract Act. It was contended that notice of the actual date, time and place of the intended sale should have been given to the defendant. This plea was repelled by the Court below. It has again been raised before us, and this is the only point for our decision.

It is urged that under section 177 the pawnor has a right to redeem at any subsequent time before the actual sale of the goods, that unless he is given full information of the date, time and place of the sale, it is impossible for him to redeem, if the property were sold at some other date, time or place. No ruling on the point has been cited. In our opinion section 176 does not contemplate that the pawnee should give the pawnor information of the actual date, time and place of sale. The words are: "He may sell the thing pledged on giving the pawnor reasonable notice of the sale." This, in our opinion, means an intention to sell and it does not necessarily mean that a sale should be arranged beforehand and that due notice of all the details should be given to the pawnor. For instance, it would be open to the pawnee to put up the property to auction sale and to sell it to the highest bidder. It would be impossible for him to give the pawnor information beforehand as to who would be the final purchaser. It is quite clear that all that the law intends is that the pawnee should give the pawnor a reasonable time within which to exercise his right of redemption and proceed to sell if the property be not redeemed. His right to sell is analogous to the seller's right of re-selling granted under section 107 of the Contract Act, and we take it that the two rights must be exercised in more or less the same method. The seller's right to re-sell under section 107 may be exercised after giving notice to the buyer of the intention to re-sell after the lapse of a reasonable time. The language of the two sections is slightly different, but their meaning is practically the same. In our opinion in the circumstances of the present case the respondent Bank gave the appellant notice, and a very reasonable notice indeed, of the intended sale. We think the decision of the Court below is correct. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Co-owners—Rent, collection of, by fractional co-owner—Payment of Government revenue—Contribution, suit for, of proportionate share of revenue payable by other co-owners—Set-off of defendant's share of collections plea of, validity of.

Plaintiffs owned a 1/4th share in a mitth, and the defendant owned the remaining 3/4th share. Plaintiffs paid the peishcush and sued defendant for the share of the peishcush paid by them which he was bound to pay. The defendant pleaded that plaintiffs were bound to give him a fourth of the amount of rent collected and he claimed a set-off of such amount as against his share of the peishcush. The plaintiffs contended that the total amount collected by them did not exceed their share of the rent and that defendant was bound to meet the common charge, viz., the Government revenue.

Held, that the plaintiffs should be deemed to have made the collections on behalf of all owners, each co-owner being entitled to his fraction in that amount in proportion to his share and that defendant was, therefore, entitled to the set-off claimed. [p. 468, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Where a co-sharer expressly intends to collect rents for his own share alone and is paid by the tenants expressly for that share, he must be deemed to have collected his own share and not for all the co-owners. [p. 468, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—First and 2nd plaintiffs, appellants, with 3rd plaintiff sued defendant to recover his share of the peishcush they had paid on the Mitth which all own in common, defendant's interest being one-fourth. The defence was that plaintiffs had collected from the tenants sufficient to cover what they paid for defendant in addition to what they were entitled to retain as their own share of the collections; and the issue between the parties relates to the manner in which the collections should be apportioned, plaintiffs contending that as co-owners they are entitled to all they may collect up to a sum equal to three-quarters of the total demand of the estate; defendant, as his case was put forward in the lower Appellate Court and finally here, that they are entitled to retain only three-quarters of their total actual collections and must hold the balance in trust for him and credit it against the amount they have paid out on his behalf.

Of these methods of calculation that proposed by plaintiffs is evidently open to the objection, regarded by the lower Appellate Court as decisive, that it admits of one side collecting its share of the rents from the solvent tenants and leaves the other to collect at excessive trouble and expense from the insolvent and recalcitrant. But plaintiffs have founded their contention on their alleged right as co-tenants to any enjoyment of the common property which does not involve their receipt of more than their just share of the profits realisable from it or the ouster of the other co-tenants; and this is supported by reference to two Indian and two English cases, in which, it is contended, the law applicable to the co-tenants before us is laid down.

The first of these, Nallayappa Pillai v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (1), no doubt dealt with collection of rents and it was said that "not only was the Kattalai, as one of the tenants-in-common, not bound to pay over to the mutt (the other) a moiety of what it received from the Ryots, so long as such receipts did not exceed its proper share, but in an action against the Kattalai to account for its receipts over and above what it was entitled to, it was for the mutt distinctly to allege and show that the Kattalai's receipts did in fact exceed its due share." But the judgment proceeded, "no averment of that kind having been made and no proof in support of it having been offered, the suit" (brought on an agreement, not, as the District Munsif treated it, for an account) "necessarily failed." The circumstances were peculiar and it appears from the record that not only was the suit not for an account, but the Kattalai had been tendering pattas and presumably collecting only its half share. With the English authorities referred to, including Kennedy v. DeTrafford (2), I deal later. The material fact is that the Court referred to the share of receipts, not of demand; and this is in defendant's favour.

The other Indian decision, Maresh Narain v. Nowbat Pathak (3), relied on as supporting plaintiffs, can, in my opinion, be distinguished. The dispute was between one co-tenant of a quarry and a lessee under another, the lessee's rights being discussed as equivalent to those of his lessor; and it was, no doubt, held that, as there was no ouster or destruction of the common property, the co-tenant plaintiff, who himself had not attempted or been debarred from any enjoyment of it, was not entitled to an account in the absence of proof that the lessee had taken more than his lessor's just share of the stone. The case, however, differs from that before us in respect of the manner, in which the profits are claimed and in which they were obtained. Firstly in Maresh Narain v. Nowbat Pathak (3) they were claimed directly by the plaintiff, co-tenant, whilst as the judgments show, he was disclaiming any liability to contribute towards the expenses incurred. Here not only has defendant been ready to give and plaintiffs have not refused credit for the proper proportion of the expense incurred by the latter in collection, but also defendant's claim is made in answer to one by plaintiffs to be reimbursed for expenditure, essential to the continuance of the common property in the common ownership, but for which it would have been brought to sale by Government for arrears of peishush and no profits could have accrued. It is not suggested that contribution is claimed from defendant in respect of any distinct portion of the estate for which plaintiffs have not collected and he is at liberty to collect, or otherwise than for his unascertained share in the property as a whole.

The second distinction between the present case and Maresh Narain v. Nowbat Pathak (3) appears clearly from the quotation from the judgment in one of the English authorities now relied on, Henderson v. Eason (4), on which the Calcutta decisions are based. The claim in Henderson v. Eason (4) was to an account and share of the profits derived by a co-tenant from common property, of which he was in possession and which he had cultivated directly, just as the lessee and the co-tenant lessor had enjoyed the quarry, which was in question in Calcutta; and it was observed that in such cases it is impossible to say that the co-tenant has received more than his just share. "He takes the whole of the crops; and is he to be accountable for any of the profits, when it is clear that, if the speculation had been a losing one altogether, he could not have called for a moiety of the losses, as he would have been enabled to do, had the land been so cultivated by the mutual agreement of the co-tenants?.....He receives in truth the return of his own labour and capital to which his co-tenant has no right." This ground of decision was as directly available in Mahesh Narain v. Nowbat Pathak (3) as it is excluded by the facts before us, plaintiffs' acceptance of profits, to the making of which their own exertions or expenditure have not gone, except as regards the latter so far as they claim that defendant was jointly liable for the peish-cush with them.

The portion of the judgment in Henderson v. Eason (4) relating to a state of facts similar to those before us is also relied on, because it also is said to support plaintiffs' claim inasmuch as it shows that the English common law to be applied in the present case had previously been that, whilst the co-tenancy continued, one co-tenant had no remedy against another who had received the profits, unless the latter had been expressly appointed the former's bailiff or the former had been ousted. Vide also the extract from Co. Litt. 200b in the argument. And it is urged that this view is further supported by Kennedy v. De Trofford (2), in which Lord Herschell said that a co-tenant collects rents in the right, which he possesses as such, and does not need any special contract (such as was proved in that case) or any agency, express or implied, to justify him in collecting. This dictum was, however, relevant only to the question then in issue, whether the co-tenant, who collected the rents, was on that account in a fiduciary relationship with the other co-tenant which would debar him from purchasing the property, when it was sold by a mortgagee. There was no issue and no decision as to his liability to account for any part of his collections or its extent; and there is nothing to affect the conclusion as to the liability in Henderson v. Eason (4) based on the Statute 4 Ann. C. 16, which was held applicable, in supersession of the common law, to "cases in which one of two tenants-in-common of lands leased at a rent payable to both receives the whole or more than his proportionate share according to his interest in the subject of the tenancy," that "he is bailiff only by virtue of his receiving more than his just share and as soon as he does so, and is answerable for only so much as he actually receives." The Statute is dependent on no local or temporary considerations and has been the English law from prior to the date of its reception in India, as representing justice, equity and good conscience and, if there were no Indian provision for the case, I should treat it not the earlier common law, as applicable.

It is, however, argued, it seems to me correctly, that such provision is available in section 90, Trusts Act (II of 1882), the relevant portion of which provides that, "where a co-owner, by availing himself of his position as such, gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property, or where any such owner, as representing all persons interested in such property, gains any advantage, he must hold, for the benefit of all persons so interested the advantage so gained, but subject to re-payment by such persons of their due share of expenses properly incurred in gaining such advantage." It is unnecessary to decide whether the section was intended to embody the English rule. For it is sufficient that it applies to a co-owner's right existing like defendant's in the present case, but unlike that in question in Mahesh Narain v. Nowbat Pathak (3) independently of and antecedently to the realizations, which not only his position as co-owner but also his special exertions or expenditure enable him to make. Here defendant, as the plaintiff admits and the claim made involves, is a co-owner; and it is not disputed that he is, apart from plaintiffs' collection of the rents, entitled to a proportionate share in them. The co-owner, who collects them, can, in the absence of arrangement with the others, do so only as their representative, thi appearing from the fact that, if he attempts to recover by suit, he is bound to join those others, either as plaintiffs or defendants, the Court being able to protect their interests at the execution stage by an order under Order XXI, rule 15. Nepal Chandra (Hose v. Mohendra Nath Roy Chowdhury (5) and Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (6)). The terms of the section being fulfilled, plaintiffs under it must account to defendant for the advantage they have gained in the shape of the excess over their own proportionate shares in the collection.

No other ground of appeal being argued, this entails concurrence in the lower Appellate Court's decision. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

SADASIVA AITAP, J.—The plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 are the appellants. They and the 3rd plaintiff own $\frac{1}{3}$ th share in the mitta and the defendant owns the remaining $\frac{2}{3}$ th share. The lands in the mitta are enjoyed by tenants and the plaintiffs' share of the net rents (after deducting costs of collection) is a $\frac{1}{3}$ th fraction and the defendant's the remaining $\frac{2}{3}$ th fraction. Both the plaintiffs and the defendant are jointly liable for the peishcush due to Government. The plaintiffs paid more than their $\frac{1}{3}$ th share of the peishcush due for Faslis 1319 and 1320 and the defendant paid much less than his $\frac{2}{3}$ th share and hence the plaintiffs brought the suit for the recovery of the excess (over $\frac{1}{3}$ th share) paid by them. The defendant contended (among other defences) that the plaintiffs have collected and enjoyed more than their $\frac{1}{3}$ th share of the rents due by the tenants and that if accounts are taken, nothing would be found due to the plaintiffs.

The District Judge passed an order on the 27th January 1915 calling for a finding from the lower Court, the material portions of the order being as follows:—"The defendant claims in issue No. 3 that the rents collected by the plaintiffs should be set off against their demand. The lower Court has held that so long as the plaintiffs have not collected more than their share of the whole rental, they are not accountable to the defendant. I think that the correct view is that the plaintiffs are accountable for a proportionate amount on each pattah." (Italics are mine.) "With joint holders, it would never do for one to be allowed to collect his fraction of the total rent from the solvent tenants leaving it to his fellows to collect their dues from the other tenants. Each landholder is entitled to a proportionate amount from each tenant who contracts with the landholders jointly. It is, therefore, necessary in this case to have a statement of account showing what has been paid by each pattah or tenant to each landholder from the beginning of Fasli 1318 up to date of plaint together with the expenses incurred by each landholder for collection. Accordingly I remand this case for submission of such an account." It is not very clear from this remand order whether the District Judge thought (a) that after totalling the collections from all the tenants holding under several pattahs, it should be ascertained whether the total amount exceeded $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the total demand from all the holdings in the village and plaintiffs should account for the balance to the defendant, or (b) whether the plaintiffs should account for $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the total collections made by the plaintiffs to the defendant, or (c) whether they should account to the defendant whenever they had collected more than $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the demand due on any pattah for the excess over that $\frac{1}{3}$ th on that pattah, though their total collections from all the holdings might be less than $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the demand on all the holdings or might be less than even $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the total amounts due by the tenants from whom they made collections. From the way, however, in which the accounts were afterwards taken by the District Munsif and by the Commissioner appointed by him without protest, it appears that all the parties understood that the District Judge held that, out of the net collections made by the plaintiffs in each Fasli from all the tenants, they should account for $\frac{1}{3}$ th share to the defendant while the defendant in his turn should account for $\frac{2}{3}$ th of his net collections (that is, collections after deducting expenses of collection) to the plaintiffs and that the accounts should be taken in the above manner. When accounts were taken as above, it was found that a sum of Rs. 134 and odd was due by the plaintiffs themselves to the defendant, and hence the Subordinate Judge (to whom the appeal had been transferred after remand) dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. The second of the grounds in the memorandum of second appeal before us is as follows:—"It having been admitted and proved that the plaintiffs did not collect more than their share of the rent from the Ryots and they paid not only the peishcush due by them but also that due by the defendant, the lower Court should have held that the plaintiffs are entitled to contribution and the suit should have been decreed." It is not clear whether the expression 'plaintiffs' share of the rent' found in this second ground of the appeal memo. means, (a) plaintiffs' share of the total annual demand from all the ryots, or (b) whether it means plaintiffs' share of the total demands due by those tenants alone from whom they made collections, or (c) the plaintiffs' share of the demand on each particular holding from the tenants of which they made collections. At the arguments Mr. T. R. Ramachandrier for the appellants contended that as the plaintiffs' total collections were not alleged by the defendant to have exceeded $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the total demand from all the Ryots, the plaintiffs were not in law bound to account for $\frac{1}{3}$ th share of the net sum so collected by the plaintiffs, as decided against them by the lower Appellate Court in the remand order which decision was adopted by the Commissioner in taking the accounts.

In support of this proposition of law, the learned Vakil relied on the observations in certain English cases and on the dicta found in Nallayappa Pillai v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadhi (1) and Mahesh Narain v. Nowbat Pathak (3). A few more facts might be stated here to appreciate the relative positions of the parties. The defendant and the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were willing in January 1910 to have the 1st plaintiff recognised as the "manager" of the whole mitta estate and registered by the Collector as "the senior joint owner", so that he may be recognised as proprietor under Act II of 1894 to exercise the powers of appointment of village officers of reporting against them, of punishing them and so on. As manager, the 1st plaintiff alone issued puttahs to the tenants in Faslis 1319 and 1320. And this could have been done only on behalf of all the four joint proprietors. As regards arrears not collected from the tenants, all the three plaintiffs and the defendant filed suits jointly in the Revenue Court for such arrears due for Faslis 1320, 1321 and 1322, and most of the suits have been decreed in favour of all the four jointly. The 1st plaintiff says in his evidence: "Under ordinary circumstances all the four mittadars should share equally profit and loss. The profit or loss can be ascertained only after payment of peishcush." Each of the four mittadars seems to own the Kudivaram also in some of the lands in the estate and usually the rent due by each of the four mittadars as a Ryot of these lands (to the four mittadars jointly as landlords) is not actually collected, but each debits the rents due by him in the account of collections which he gives to the common Karnam (see the evidence of the Karnam P. W. No. 2). Where attachments or other proceedings have to be taken and expenses incurred, the net collections alone are considered as received by the proprietor who has incurred the cost of such collections. On the above facts, it is clear to my mind that the justice and equity of the case is in favour of the view taken by the lower Appellate Court that every one of the co-owners must be deemed to collect on behalf of all every rupee he obtains as net collection from any tenant, that the net amount must, therefore, be brought into the common account and that each co-sharer is entitled to his fraction in that amount in proportion to his share. After I prepared my judgment up to this point, I had the advantage of a perusal of the judgment just now pronounced by my learned brother and as I entirely concur with him in his discussion of and conclusions on the English and Indian precedents, I think it unnecessary to myself refer to them or detail them. Where there is no risk, no question of adventure or enterprise, no question of employment of real and appreciable labour or skill or capital or industry in the obtaining of pecuniary profits from the common property by one co-sharer, the reason of the decisions quoted by the appellant does not apply and even if there are old English decisions in which wide language is used as to the irresponsibility of a co-sharer to his other co-sharers under all circumstances, it should be remembered that the rights and liabilities of joint owners, joint debtors and joint creditors were looked at sometimes under the English common law in a too technical manner, not quite consistent with plain equity and justice, and I am not prepared to follow such old decisions, especially after the English Statute of Anne was passed evidently in order to get rid of some at least of the said technicalities based upon the old forms of action. Of course where one co-sharer obtains the amenities of mere comforts, conveniences or residential advantage of mere user and occupation without an adverse animus against the other co-owners, he cannot be treated as bound to account to his other co-sharers as if he had obtained the common premises for the rent to which they could have been let to a stranger.

In cases other than those in which the co-sharer expressly intended to collect for his own share alone, made a demand on tenants for his own share alone, as in the case of Nallayappa Pillai v. Ambalavana Pandara Sannadi (1), and was paid by the tenants expressly for or towards that share alone (those facts being required to be alleged and proved by that co-sharer in any litigation between him and other co-sharers if he wants to rebut the natural presumption that he collected for the common benefit), plain law and equity, in my opinion, is in favour of the view that he collects whatever he collects on behalf of all.

In the result, I concur in dismissing the second appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

An Appellate Court has inherent power to consolidate appeals, though it is not conferred by Statute, and Courts can, if necessary, invoke the provisions of section 151, Civil Procedure Code, for the purpose. [p. 469, cols. 1 & 2.]

Courts should, however, consider whether there is a fit case for consolidation having regard to the loss of revenue in Court-fees by allowing consolidation. [p. 469, col. 2.]

Where in respect of several plots only one notice was sent to the owner under section 12 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act and he presented only one application under section 18 and one reference was made by the Land Acquisition Officer to the District Court, the fact that the award was split up by the latter should not prejudice the party who is entitled to treat it as one single award. [p. 469, col. 2.]

The absence of a request for consolidation in the lower Court does not bar consolidation in appeal where the award was split up in the lower Court without notice to or knowledge of the party. [p. 470, col. 1.]

VENGU NAIDU v. DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF MADURA DIVISION.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Ramesam (Acting Government Pleader), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to consolidate the several appeals from awards passed by the District Judge of Madura on reference made to him by the Land Acquisition Officer under section 18 of Act I of 1894. Several references appear to have been made to the District Judge, but they were all in connection with land taken up for the extension of Madura town, except one with which we are not now concerned. The District Judge treated all the references as 47 separate petitions and passed a separate award on each of these, although they were all tried together and were disposed of in one judgment. It is not quite clear whether the Land Acquisition Officer divided up the references in this way, either of his own initiative or at the request of the District Judge, or whether it was done by the District Judge himself.

The first question argued is whether this Court has power to consolidate appeals. No express power to do so is conferred by the Legislature, but such power has been held to be inherent in the Court, and I think has rightly been so held. So long ago as 1871 the Calcutta High Court approved of the consolidation of two suits and their disposal by one decree. Enayetoollah v. Radha (Jhurn Roy) (1). In Kashi Prosad Singh v. Secretary of State (2) appeals from 44 references under the Land Acquisition Act were ordered to be consolidated. In Fink v. Secretary of State (3) it was held that in that case it was too late to consolidate the appeals from references under the Land Acquisition Act, but the Court pointed out the inconveniences that arose from the failure to consolidate and remarked that the Judge and the Collector should have consolidated the references. In Drahi Curseti Shroff, In re (4), Macleod, J., held that the Court had power to consolidate, and relied on Fink v. Secretary of State (3). Reference may also be made to In the matter of the "Falls of Ettrick" (5), where the question is considered. There appears to be no decision of this Court on the point, and the only case at all analogous is that when two appellate decrees have been passed on appeal from one decree, the second appeals are consolidated into one [Gangulakurti Sanyasi Lingam v. Nidugonda Gavaramma (6)], but the analogy is somewhat remote. Consolidation is allowed in England and consequently I agree with the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts that a Court has power to consolidate appeals and would, if necessary, invoke the provisions of section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure in support of the proposition.

The learned Government Pleader takes objection to consolidation only on the ground that if it is allowed the public revenues will be deprived of a portion of the Court-fees payable by appellants. We have, therefore, to consider whether this is a fit case for consolidation. Although several plots of land were acquired from appellants, only one notice was served on them under section 12 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act in respect of all the plots, and under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act the appellants only made one application to the Collector to refer their objection to the award. Under section 20 of the Land Acquisition Act the Court has to determine the objection, i. e., the objection referred to in section 18 (2). The fact that only one notice was sent under section 12 and one objection filed under section 18 would prima facie indicate that there was only one award, the correctness of which had to be determined by the District Court. The fact that the award contained several items does not make it as many awards, for there is no reason why one single award should not decide many questions referred for decision. So far, therefore, as appellants were concerned, there was only one award which was referred under section 18 for the decision of the District Court. The fact that, in the arbitration proceedings before the District Court, the award was split up and amalgamated with other awards, which had reference to other claimants, ought not to be allowed to pre-judge the right of the appellants to treat their award as one, and they appear to be equitably entitled to consolidation.

A further objection is taken that the appeals cannot be allowed to be consolidated as there was no consolidation nor even a request for consolidation in the lower Court, and reliance is placed on Rakhal Chandra Tewary v. Manmatha Nath Mitter (7) and Janardan Kishore Lal v. Sib Prasad Ram (S). These are, however, appeals not from suits, but from arbitration proceedings [vide Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (9)], and in the lower Court there was no occasion for appellants to ask for consolidation. They had been furnished with only one award to which they objected and consequently there was only their objection to be disposed of, and it was disposed of in conjunction with other objections at one hearing and by one order. The splitting up of the award by the referring officer or by the Court may not even have been known to the parties, and in any case there was no occasion for the claimants to take any objection at the hearing, for all the cases were heard together. The splitting up of the awards, if made by the Land Acquisition Officer, was apparently not communicated to the parties under section 12 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act and consequently there was only one valid award, so far as the appellants are concerned, and they are entitled to appeal against it in one appeal. The petition is, therefore, allowed with costs.

Civil Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 2138 and 2139 follow the order in the petition. The time allowed for the payment of the costs is three months from this date.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), ss 82, 83, 39—Record of Rights, whether complete before notification under section 39—Ejectment, suit for, against recorded tenant—Burden of proof.

There is nothing in the Land Revenue Act to justify the view that a Record of Rights prepared by a Settlement Officer under section 82 of that Act cannot be considered complete until the Chief Commissioner has under section 39 declared the Settlement to be completed.

It, therefore, lies on a plaintiff, who sues to eject a person who has been recorded as a tenant and in whose favour a settlement parcha has been issued to prove that the defendant is not a tenant.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 13th December 1912, in Civil Appeal No. 276 of 1912.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In his plaint the plaintiff admitted that defendant was the recorded tenant, and the parcha had been issued in the defendant's name by the Settlement Officer who prepared the Record of Rights under section 82 of the Land Revenue Act. There is nothing in the Act to justify the view that the Record of Rights cannot be considered complete until the Chief Commissioner has under section 39 declared the settlement to be completed. Undoubtedly, therefore, the burden of proving that the defendant was not a tenant lay on the plaintiff, and there should have been an issue: "Is not the defendant the tenant of the field in suit?" While the District Judge recognised that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiff, he nevertheless really cast it on the defendant. The defendant's evidence cannot be said to disprove his tenancy, it is merely bad evidence in favour of tenancy. The presumption of section 83 is not sufficiently met by the admission that defendant was not the original tenant. As the record stands the plaintiff should fail, but he is entitled to an issue being framed as indicated above. As to joinder of the plaintiff's co-sharers, it is unnecessary to decide whether in every such case they would be necessary parties. But in view of the express pleadings of the defendant in this case they undoubtedly ought to have been joined as parties and must now be so joined.

The suit is remanded for re-trial by the 1st Court in view of the above remarks. I should add that history of the case deduced from the jamabandis by the District Judge is not in accordance with the pleadings of either parties. Costs will be costs in the suit.

No second appeal lies to the High Court against an order of the District Court in appeal remanding a suit instituted in the Revenue Court for presentation to the Civil Court. [p. 472, col. 2.]

Order XLIII, rule 1 (a), Civil Procedure Code, which gives the right of appeal against orders passed under Order VII, rule 10, is inapplicable to suits in Revenue Courts by virtue of section 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act. [p. 472, col. 2.]

The High Court has power to treat an appeal as a petition in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, especially when the question in issue is one of jurisdiction. Section 115, Civil Procedure Code, is not controlled by section 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act. [p. 473, col. 2.]

A suit for rent, based on the allegation of the land being a Ryoti land in which the defendant has occupancy rights, is cognisable by the Revenue Court notwithstanding plaintiff's admission that the defendant held at a favourable rent on condition of doing services which were discontinued and which discontinuance disentitled him to claim the reduction. Under the circumstances, the land cannot be said to be held on service tenure at the date of suit so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. [p. 472, col. 2.]

When the allegations in a plaint bring the case within section 77 of the Estates Land Act, the suit must be filed in the Revenue Court and the jurisdiction of the Court will not depend on any plea the defendant might raise. The fact that the Court will have to go into complicated questions will not affect the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court. [p. 473, col. 2; p. 474, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, Kistna, in Appeal Suit Nos. 110 and 116 of 1914, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Suits Deputy Collector, Ellore, in Summary Suit No. 1089 of 1913.

Mr. P. Nagabushanam, for the Appellants.
Mr. B. Narasimha Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The Receiver of the Nidadavole and Medur Estates, who is the appellant, sued the respondent in the Revenue Court to recover Rs. 323-11-7, arrears of rent for Faslis 1320 to 1322. The case for the plaintiff was that the lands were granted by the former Zemindar at low rent to defendants Nos. 1 to 8 who were performing washerman's services, that they ceased to do so and conveyed a portion of the land to the 9th defendant and that plaintiff was consequently entitled to recover the full rent claimed. Defendants Nos. 1 to 8 were ex parte. The 9th defendant pleaded inter alia that the lands were Ryoti lands, that he has been paying the rent reserved ever since his purchase, that plaintiff has no power under the Estates Land Act to enhance the rent and that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties. No question was raised as to the jurisdiction of the Court and at the trial plaintiff conceded that the lands were Ryoti lands and that the defendants had occupancy rights. The Suits Deputy Collector decreed Rs. 51-13-9 as the proper rent payable. The 9th respondent appealed, but not on the ground that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction. The grounds of appeal, on the contrary, proceeded on the footing that the Estates Land Act applied. When the appeal was argued before the District Judge, however, a preliminary objection was taken by the appellant in the District Court to the effect that the lands were service inams and that the plaintiff ought to have sued in a Civil Court, the Revenue Courts having no jurisdiction.

The District Court upheld the contention and directed the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court. The appeal before us is against the order of the District Judge.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the respondent that no appeal lies against the order of the District Judge as the order was passed under Order VII, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, 1908 (corresponding to section 57 of old Code), and Order XLIII, rule 1, clause (a), which gives the right of appeal against the order passed under Order VII, rule 10, is made inapplicable to suits in Revenue Courts by virtue of section 192 of the Estates Land Act, which specifies the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to suits, appeals and other proceedings under the Act and excludes Chapter XLIII of the old Code which corresponds to Order XLIII of the present Code. For the appellant it is contended that an appeal from the District Court to the High Court is not a proceeding under the Act but from one Civil Court to another and that Order XLIII applies to such appeals.

There can be little doubt that if the Suits Deputy Collector had returned the plaint presented to him under section 77, clause (1), of the Estates Land Act, no appeal would lie to the District Court.

The question, however, is whether a second appeal lies to the High Court where the order directing the return of the plaint is passed for the first time by the District Court, which is not a Revenue Court.

Section 189 provides that decrees and orders passed by the Revenue Courts shall be subject to appeal as provided in the schedule. No further appeals are specially given by the Act except to the Board of Revenue under section 190. The schedule to the Madras Estates Land Act gives the description of the suit and the Court to which an appeal lies. In respect of suits for rent under section 77 of the Act an appeal lies to the District Court. Section 190 gives a right of second appeal to the Board of Revenue against certain orders passed on appeal by the Collector. So far as appeals from decrees of the District Court are concerned a second appeal has, though not expressly given by the Estates Land Act, been held to lie by virtue of section 100 of the new Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and Chapter XLIII of the old Code which are not excepted by section 192. Vide, Ravi Veerarghavulu v. Bomma Devara Venkata (1), and Venkataramier v. Vythilinga Thambiran Avergal (2). As regards orders not coming within the definition of 'decree' in the Civil Procedure Code, section 192, clause (a), of the Madras Estates Land Act enacts that Chapter XLIII, which corresponds to Order XLIII and relates to appeals from orders, shall not apply to appeals or other proceedings under the Estates Land Act. It is argued that this section can only apply to appeals from the Revenue Courts to the District Court, because it is only such appeals as are appeals under the Act, and that for appeals from the District Court to the High Court we have to fall back upon the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, as appeals from orders of the District Court are not appeals or proceedings under the Estates Land Act. Reference has been made to Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (3) and it is argued that the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council (at page 624*) to the effect that when proceedings reach the District Court, that Court is appealed to as one of the ordinary Courts of the country, with regard to whose procedure, orders and decrees the ordinary rules of the Civil Procedure Code apply, would cover equally cases of appeals under the Estates Land Act. The Forest Act does not contain any provision analogous to section 192 of the Estates Land Act excluding the operation of certain sections and chapters of the Civil Procedure Code, and Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (3) can be distinguished on that ground. There is a great deal to be said for the contention of the appellant, but the matter is not res integra. The point is covered by authority and we think we are bound by the decision of this Court to the contrary when the question directly arose for determination.

In Appeals against Orders Nos. 349 to 353 of 1915 and Vilvanatha Mudaliar v. Mannar Naidu (4) it was held by Ayling and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., and by Ayling and Napier, JJ., that no second appeal lies against an order of remand under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code, and in Second Appeal No. 235 of 1917, Ayling and Phillips, JJ., held that no second appeal lies against an order dismissing a suit for default. The contention now raised by the appellant before us that the appeals from the District Court to the High Court are not appeals contemplated by the Estates Land Act and the question of the effect of the observations of the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (3) were not raised in the above cases, but, as already pointed out, there is nothing in section 10 of the Forest Act which excludes any of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code from its operation and second appeals have not been expressly excluded. It has been argued that section 190 of the Estates Land Act would render the decision of the District Judge, who returns a plaint to be presented to the Civil Court on the ground that the suit does not relate to an estate within the definition of the Act, res judicata in all subsequent proceedings and can only be set right by the High Court in second appeal from the decision of the Civil Court to which the plaint is presented under orders of the District Judge; that proceedings will then have to be begun de novo in the Revenue Courts and that it could hardly have been the intention of the Legislature that this circuitous course should be followed when an appeal from an order of the District Court to the High Court would be a quick and adequate remedy. We have to construe the plain meaning of section 192, however desirable it may be that the Legislature should amend section 192 by giving a right of appeal against orders of remand.

It is argued by the appellant's Vakil that if Order XLIII of the Code is not to apply to suits under the Estates Land Act, then the order directing the return of the plaint would be a decree within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code, as it would be an adjudication as to which no appeal would lie under Order XLIII by virtue of section 192 of the Estates Land Act. It is difficult to see how the definition of 'decree' in the Civil Procedure Code can be controlled by anything in the Estates Land Act.

The preliminary objections must, therefore, prevail.

We have been asked to treat the appeal as a revision petition under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. This section is not excluded by section 192 of the Estates Land Act, and we have power to deal with the appeal as a revision petition as the question in issue is one of jurisdiction.

The case for the plaintiff is that the land is Ryoti land and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 who are pattadars are liable to pay the rent claimed. The 9th defendant is treated as sub-tenant. It is open to the plaintiff under section 145 of the Estates Land Act to assent to the transfer of 5 acres and odd out of the 13 acres and odd held by defendants Nos. 1 to 8 in favour of the 9th defendant and we take it that the suit against the 9th defendant amounts to an assent. All that the 9th defendant pleaded was that the lands are Jirotya lands and that the rent was being paid for a long time. He also claimed occupancy rights. Defendants Nos. 1 to 8 raised no defence. At the trial plaintiff's Vakil admitted that the lands were Ryoti lands and that the defendants had occupancy right. The only question that remained for consideration was whether the rent due was at the rate claimed by the plaintiff or the rate admitted by the 9th defendant. Section 3 no doubt excludes lands granted on service tenure at favourable rent so long as the service tenure subsists, but in the present case it is not alleged by the defendants in the written statement that the lands are now held on service tenure and on the evidence the Deputy Collector finds that the service is no longer rendered. There is no particular formality or procedure prescribed by the Act for putting an end to service tenures or anything which the landlord has to do in case services are discontinued in order to make the lands Ryoti lands, in cases where lands which were once Ryoti lands are given to the occupancy Ryot on a favourable rent in consideration of services to be rendered. Under circumstances of this case it cannot be said that the lands must be deemed to be held under service tenure on the date of the suit. When the allegations in the plaint bring the case within section 77 of the Act, the suit must be filed in the

ANAND RAO V. GIRDHARILAL.

MANAKARI VENKAPPA CHARI V. HOLAGUNEL POMPANA GOWD.

Revenue Court and the jurisdiction of the Court will not depend upon any pleas the defendant might raise. The fact that the Court may have to go into complicated questions as to the right of resumption by the landlord or the continuance of the service on which lands were granted on favourable tenure will not affect the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court. [Vide, Polemera Thammis v. Godey Chitti (5).]

We are of opinion that, on the admission of the plaintiff and 9th defendant that the lands were at the date of suit Ryoti lands it must be taken that the lands in the possession of the 9th defendant were not held on service tenure on the date of the suit so as to bring the case within the exception to the definition of Ryoti land, in section 3. Whether lands continue to be held on service tenure is a question of fact which must be raised on the pleadings.

We set aside the decision of the District Judge and remand the appeal for disposal on the merits. Costs will abide and follow the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant's present contention is that Anandrao was benamidar for his father Ganpatrao and that the mortgagor and mortgagee, the brothers Jagannath and Ganpatrao, were tenants-in-common divided as between themselves in estate, though the absolute occupancy holding had not been divided by metes and bounds. The question is whether a mortgage of his half share in the ancestral holding by Jagannath in favour of Ganpatrao is binding on the landlord. It appears to me that the question is concluded by the ruling in Pancham Singh v. Nankoo Singh (1), to the effect that a tenancy, so far as the landlord is concerned, is indivisible and cannot be affected by an act to which the tenants alone are parties. As for this reason the mortgage is not binding on the landlord, it is idle to enquire whether section 41 (7) of the Tenancy Act, would be applicable, supposing the mortgage to be binding apart from the provisions of that sub-section. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Tenancy, whether divisible—Mortgage by one co-tenant in favour of another, whether binding on Malguzar.

A tenancy, so far as the landlord is concerned, is indivisible and cannot be affected by an act to which the tenants alone are parties. Therefore, a mortgage of his share by one co-tenant in favour of the other is not binding upon the landlord.

An irregularity in the conduct of a sale held under section 38 of Madras Act II of 1864 empowers the Collector to set it aside, but there must be other sufficient grounds for a Civil Court to interfere. [p. 475, col. 1.]

An agreement made between the purchaser and other persons after the sale to go in shares, a collusive agreement between the bidders not to bid against each other, the omission of any attempt to distrain the moveable properties of the defaulter or the crops on the land are not sufficient grounds to set aside the sale by a suit filed in the Civil Court. [p. 475, col. 2; p. 476, col. 1.]

The 'defaulter' referred to in section 25 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act who is entitled to notice or demand before attachment and sale is the ostensible registered proprietor. To plead that section the plaintiff must show that he is the defaulter. A person who owns the land but allows the patta to stand in another person's name and thus puts him forward as the ostensible owner, cannot claim the benefit of the section or complain that Government erroneously served the written demand on the latter. JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—This is an appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Bellary, setting aside a sale, for arrears of revenue, of certain land. The sale took place on the 20th May 1912 and the appellant, the 1st defendant in the suit, purchased it. The second defendant is the mortgagee, who apparently was in possession of the land at the time of the sale. The grounds on which the sale was sought to be set aside are set out specifically in paragraph 3 of the plaint, and made part of the issues at the time of the trial. It is clear that grounds (a), (b) and (c) would not be good grounds for a Civil Court to set aside the sale. The Collector has got power, if the sale is vitiated on account of any irregularity in the conduct of it, to set it aside.

But, it is contended, that the sale was bad, firstly, because it was fraudulently brought about. Supposing that, if made out, would be a sufficient reason for setting aside the sale, it is quite clear that it has not been shown that there was any such collusion or fraud as would make the sale liable to be set aside. The case of the plaintiff on this point rests on Exhibit C, which is an agreement entered into between the 1st and the 2nd defendant, that is, the purchaser and the mortgagee, on the 23rd May 1912, by which they agreed to divide the land among themselves in certain shares. That was after the sale had been held, and it is difficult to conceive how the Judge held that the agreement must be taken to amount to a fraud vitiating the sale. Even if there was an agreement among certain bidders before the sale that they would not bid against each other or that they would divide the property among themselves after the sale had been concluded, that would not be a sufficient ground for setting aside the sale. It is enough to refer for authority to Mahomad Mira Ravuthar v. Savvasi Vijaya Itaghnadha Gopalur (1), which is a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In fact here there was a number of bidders, at least 9, and it is not shown that there was any sort of understanding or collusion among them not to bid against each other.

Then it was suggested that the demand was not served on the plaintiff, the owner of the land, and, therefore, on that ground, the sale was bad. But the point does not appear to have been taken in the form of an issue before the lower Court and, so far as we can gather from the judgment of the learned District Judge, no such question was investigated by him. The validity of such grounds depends upon who was the defaulter within the meaning of the law, and whether the demand was not served on such defaulter in accordance with section 25 of the Revenue Recovery Act, II of 1864. That section says:—

"Such demand shall be served by delivering a copy to the defaulter, or to some adult male member of his family at his usual place of abode, or to his authorised agent, or by affixing a copy thereof on some conspicuous part of his last known residence, or on some conspicuous part of the land about to be attached."

MANAKARI VENKAPPA CHARI V. HOLAGUNEL POMPANA GOWD.

That the terms of this section were not satisfied there is no evidence to show. Then the plaintiff is alleged to have purchased the land from the widow of one Durvasappa, who had himself purchased it from one Balappa, in whose name the patta stood and who died sometime in 1907. It is alleged that the plaintiff had made an application for transfer of patta in his name, but even that is not borne out by the record, so far as our attention has been drawn to the evidence. It is sufficient to say that the question was not raised before the Court of trial and we are unable to hold that the procedure laid down by the Act was not followed on this point.

It may be pointed out that the learned District Judge has not really confined himself to the issues that arose before him. He proceeded on grounds which do not appear to have been raised by the issues and which do not come apparently within the purview of the Act; take for instance grounds Nos. (a) and (b), namely, 'no attempt was made to distrain the moveable properties of the defaulters which were more than sufficient to liquidate the arrears' and 'no attempt was made to distrain the crops on the land before the land was attached.' These would not be good grounds for setting aside the sale by a snit. Then he finds in paragraph 10 of the judgment: 'Further more there was combination among the bidders.' If any such case was relied upon by the plaintiff, it should have been taken distinctly in the issues. Beyond a general allegation that the sale was illegal, irregular and fraudulent, it was not alleged that there was any conspiracy among the bidders which would vitiate the sale.

I would set aside the judgment of the District Judge and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs here and in the Court below.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with my learned brother's conclusion, and desire only to say a few words with reference to the plaintiff's contention, that the sale is bad because he had no such notice of the attachment, as he was entitled to under section 25 of the Revenue Recovery Act, II of 1864. That section entitled a defaulter to notice of the attachment in the shape of a written demand served upon him; but in order to plead that section, the plaintiff must show that he is the defaulter. The facts are that the plaintiff had bought land about 2 years before the sale, which stood in the name of one Bellappa who was not his vendor and died before the sale and that the patta was never transferred, to plaintiff's name. The patta in fact is alleged to have remained in the name of Bellappa, notwithstanding his decease. The plaintiff, however, says that he had applied for transfer of patta on the date of the sale. But the only evidence as to such application is given by the plaintiff's 8th witness, the plaintiff's agent, and it does not show when the application he speaks of was made or granted or whether it was before the sale. The 1st defendant further denies that the application referred to by the witness related to the suit land and the evidence of the witness is not absolutely clear on the point. There is further the failure to examine the plaintiff's 2nd witness the Reddy regarding it. In the circumstances it does not seem to me to be proved that any application had been made when the sale took place.

Then it is contended that, even if there was no registration in plaintiff's favour and no application for any, he was the defaulter, because he owned the land, and had not paid the revenue. This can, I think, be answered by reference to Zamorin of Calicut v. Sitarama (2). There, no doubt, the patta stood in the name of a tenant, and the complaint was that there was no demand on the landlord. The decision, however, was: "By suffering the registry to stand in the tenant's name, the proprietor puts him forward as the ostensible owner, and as between him and the Government the service upon such tenant must be taken to be, in law, service upon the real owner. He cannot complain that the Government is in error in serving the written demand on the person whom he permitted to appear as the ostensible land-owner". I do not think that the plaintiff's position can be better than that of the proprietor referred to in Zamorin of Calicut v. Sitarama (2), when instead of allowing some one else to appear as the ostensible pattadar, his conduct has resulted in there being no ostensible pattadar at all. For these reasons, I think that the plaintiff's contention based on section 25 of the Act must fail even on his allegations of fact.

I agree further with my learned brother that the record indicates that the plaintiff did not think it worth while to press this contention at the trial, and that we ought not to allow him any opportunity to revive it now.

Minor and guardian—Compromise effected by guardian in consideration of settlement of disputed claim, whether binding upon minor—Claim under alleged Will, whether can form consideration for compromise where Will not genuine.

A mimanshapatra (deed of compromise) executed by a father on behalf of his minor son, by which the interest of the minor in an inherited estate is given up in consideration of the other party giving up a portion of their claim under an alleged Will, is not binding upon the minor, unless it is proved by the other party that there was in fact such a Will and that under that Will they had a claim which was made honestly and in good faith, though it is not incumbent upon them to prove the Will in solemn form after a long distance of time. [p. 478, col. 1.]

The position of a minor son is different from the position of the father who executes a mimanshapatra on his behalf; for though the father might not be able to avoid a mimanshapatra which he had executed for himself, the minor through his guardian can avoid a mimanshapatra executed on his behalf if his interest is not properly protected by his father in executing it. JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—This appeal is preferred by defendant No. 18 and arises out of a partition suit brought by Hemaja Sanker Nandi Mozumdar and others against a number of defendants for partition of a taluk known as Tilak Nandi Ram Mozumdar No. 2624 with a Sudder Jama of Rs. 27-12-0. Out of the same case arose Appeal No. 328 of 1914 which we decided last week. The dispute in the present appeal is between Krishna Chandra Dutta Roy—defendant No. 18—the minor son of Jagan Chandra Dutta Roy and his wife Promoda Moyi on the one side and the plaintiffs who are the descendants of Pran Shanker on the other. The relationship of the parties will appear from the following genealogical table. There is no dispute as to the share of the plaintiffs in this estate which they inherited from their ancestor Pran Shanker. They claim, however, in addition to that 5-annas 10-gundas share a portion of another 5-annas 10-gundas share which in ordinary course of inheritance would have devolved from Bimola Shanker upon his sister's son, the present appellant.

GOURI SHANKER.

The plaintiff's case is that by a mimanshapatra, dated 28th March 1903, Gagan Chandra Datta Roy acting as the natural guardian of his minor son relinquished in favour of the plaintiffs a part of the minors's share in the estate in consideration of the plaintiffs not pressing the claim which they had to the whole of that share under an alleged Will of Krishna Shanker Nandi Mozumdar. The only question before us is whether that relinquishment is binding on the minor appellant. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that there was such a Will as the plaintiffs allege, that the plaintiff's claim under it was honest and bona fide and that it accordingly formed a good consideration for the relinquishment.

The following facts are not in dispute. Krishna Shanker Nandi Mozumdar died on 10th March 1902, leaving him surviving his widow Bhuvan Moyi, an adopted son Bimola Shanker, and a daughter Promoda Moyi, the mother of the appellant. Bhuvan Moyi died about a year after her husband, sometime in 1909. Bimola Shanker at the age of 11 or 12 died on 11th March 1906. At that time the present appellant was only 2 or 3 months old. He was the next heir of his maternal grandfather. It was not till after Bimola Shanker's death that anything was heard of this alleged Will, but as soon as he had died the plaintiffs came forward with their claim. We have been taken through the evidence of both parties and have examined it minutely, and I think that the only possible conclusion on that evidence is that there was no such bona fide claim as the plaintiffs would have us believe. It was argued that the plaintiffs could not at this distance of time be expected to prove this Will on solemn form. I do not think that any such obligation lies upon them. It was, however, necessary for them to show that there was a Will and that upon that Will they had a claim which was made honestly and in good faith.

As to the contents of the mimanshapatra there can, of course, be no dispute. It was admittedly executed by Gagan at the time and under the circumstances alleged. The recital of that deed is important and runs as follows:—"Now we the first party" (that is the plaintiffs) "contend that the said Krishna Shanker Nandi Mozumdar deceased executed a Will on 18th Falgun 1308 and thereby provided that in the event of his adopted son dying unmarried the properties left by him should devolve in equal shares upon us, the Nandi Mozumdars, and that, therefore, the properties left by him have devolved upon us in equal shares and we claim those properties accordingly and I, Gagan Chandra Dutta Roy, father of the second party," (i.e., the appellant before us) "urge on his behalf that as the aforesaid Will is not found it is likely that he" (meaning Krishna Shanker) "set it aside and destroyed it and that, therefore, the second party Krishna Chandra Dutt Roy is entitled to succeed to those properties as the heir of his maternal uncle, the said Bimola Shanker Nandi Mozumdar deceased."..."It is apprehended that if the dispute continue for a long time and if litigation be carried up to the highest Court, both the parties will suffer much loss and injury and the properties which form the subject-matter of the dispute will go to rack and ruin. Moreover, no one amongst the co-villagers and relations of the late Krishna Shanker Nandi Mozumdar knows of the destruction or cancellation of his Will aforesaid and the said Will was executed in the presence of many respectable gentlemen whose names are given in Schedule (Ka) and they attested it as witnesses, and the Will after being read out in their presence was signed by the testator and was then signed by them in the presence of the testator as attesting witnesses. There is no certainty as to what the result will be if there be any litigation carried on in that connection and both the parties are nearly related to each other. So we both the parties, acting through the arbitration of friends, relations, well-wishers and lawyers and with their advice, settle the matter and the dispute amicably in the way stated below and execute this deed in this town of Nasariabad while in enjoyment of sound sense and composed mind of our accord and free will." Gagan Chandra Dutta Roy now says that he was threatened by Kali Kumar Chowdhury and thus induced to give up his son's property by the mimanshapatra.

In 1909, the mother of the appellant was appointed the guardian of his person and property and she represented him in this partition suit and is representing him in this appeal. The question appears to be not between Gagan Chandra Dutta Roy and the plaintiffs but between the plaintiffs and the minor. There is a considerable difference between the two as Gagan Chandra might not be able as a man of full age, and presumbably of intelligence, to go behind his deliberate deed. It by no means follows, however, that the minor son would be bound by his father's action. Several cases were cited to us by the learned Pleader for the plaintiff respondents with regard to family settlements. Those cases do not, however, assist us much in coming to a conclusion in the present case. There is no doubt as to law. The question is one entirely of fact. We were referred by him to the case of Miles v. Newzealand Alford Estate Co. (1). That case is certainly useful as showing what the law is in such matters. Cotton, L. J., said: "What I understand to be the law is this, that if there is in fact a serious claim honestly made, the abandonment of the claim is a good 'consideration' for a contract; and if that is the law, what we really have to now consider is whether in the present case there is any evidence on which the Court ought to find that there was a serious claim in fact made, and whether a contract to abandon that claim was the consideration for this letter of guarantee." He further quoted the dictum of Lord Blackburn, in Cook v. Wright (2), to this effect: "We agree that unless there was a reasonable claim on the one side, which it was bona fide intended to pursue, there would be no ground for a compromise; but we cannot agree that (except as a test of the reality of the claim in fact) the issuing of a writ is essential to the validity of the compromise." Bowen, L. J., whose remarks alone the learned Pleader quoted, also laid down the law to the same effect. He said: "We must treat the thing in a business way and draw an inference of fact as to what the real nature of the transaction was as between business men. But an attempt was made to show that the forbearance was worth nothing. Of course forbearance of a non-existing claim would not be forbearance at all". He then went on to point out that the mere fact that the success of the claim might be unlikely would not necessarily indicate that it was not a bona fide claim. Fry, L. J., also agreed in his statement of the law. In that case the learned Judges differed in their view as to whether the claim there was an honest and bona fide claim or not, Cotton, L. J., and Fry, L. J., thinking that it was not, while Bowen, L. J., took the opposite opinion. Applying that test to the facts before us, what do we find? In this case plaintiff No. 1, Hemaja Shanker Nandi Mozumdar, and five witnesses have given evidence on the plaintiffs' side. Against them Gagan Chandra Dutta Roy has been called; and his brother Shib Chandra Dutta Roy, one Haranath Ghose, a servant of Krishna Shanker, and Promoda Moyi have also given evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that there was in fact a Will as alleged by the plaintiffs, or at any rate, that the plaintiffs put forward an honest claim bona fide believing that Krishna Shanker Nandi Mazumdar had executed such a Will.

The learned Subordinate Judge has certainly in two instances found as facts proved what I have been unable to discover in the evidence as recorded. He says that Gagan admitted before the witness Babu Srinath Roy, a Pleader of that Court, that a Will was executed, but that it was destroyed by the testator. Now a perusal of the evidence of Babu Srinath Roy shows that Gagan did nothing of the kind, on the contrary the witness distinctly stated that Gagan denied the Will. In cross-examination he stated that he heard at a meeting prior to the execution of the mimanshapatra that the Will was annulled. When asked in re-examination, who told him this, he said that it was Gagan Roy. What he meant by the expression "the Will was annulled" is not clear. The Judge has taken it as equivalent to destruction by the testator; but that does not, in my opinion, follow. The second error of fact into which the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have fallen is when he states that Shyama Charan Babu, another Pleader, advised that it, was possible to obtain probate of a copy in the absence of the original Will, and that, in consequence, an application for probate was drafted. It does not appear from the evidence of Shyama Charan Babu or indeed from any of the other witnesses that he ever gave such advice. He was asked, it is true, but what his advice was has not been elicited. All that he says is "everything was settled," whatever that may mean. He does not even recollect that he prepared any draft of the application for probate.

The story of the plaintiffs, as they now put it before the Court, is that soon after the death of Bimola Shanker, Hemaja Shanker came to Mymensingh with a view to applying for probate of this Will. We are told that there was a draft or a copy of that Will which was shown to Shyama Charan Babu, that an attempt was made to take out probate of the Will and that an application for that purpose was drawn up. Hemaja states that probably Shyama Charan Babu drew it up, though the Pleader himself does not remember having done so. Then began the negotiations for an amicable settlement between the plaintiffs and Gagan Chandra, at which at least three Pleaders and several other persons assisted. These negotiations are said to have gone on for 8 or 10 days, when ultimately Gagan, on behalf of his minor son agreed to execute the mimanshapatra upon the plaintiffs' giving up any claim which they might have under the alleged Will.

The plaintiffs' story appears to me to be full of the most suspicious circumstances. In the first place, Krishna Shanker had died just four years before his son Bimola Shanker. In those four years nothing had been heard of any Will executed by him. Now Bimola appears to have been very sickly. It is difficult to believe that if a Will to the effect alleged really existed, the plaintiffs would not have taken prompt measures to establish their title under it as reversioners in case of Bimola's dying childless. The evidence, so far as it goes, of Krishna Shanker's state of health immediately before his death throws very grave doubt on his capacity, both physical and mental, to execute a Will. He was suffering, as appears from the evidence of Promoda Moyi and Hara Nath Ghose, from diabetes. He was troubled also with some cerebral affection, with the result that he was sometimes unconscious and sometimes delirious. He appears to have been in this state more or less for at least a month before his death. He died on 28th Falgun 1308 (10th March 1902) and the Will is said to have been executed on the 18th. It is more than doubtful whether he was in a condition to execute a Will. Directly the heir dies the plaintiffs come forward with an alleged Will, by which Promoda Moyi and her son are to be disinherited in favour of the cousins of the deceased. No one has ever seen this Will. In the mimanshapatra it is stated that the Will was attested by no less than 18 persons whose names are given in Schedule (Ka) to that document. It is not suggested that all these 18 persons have died or were not available for the purpose of giving evidence in this case. The only one who has been spoken of by any witness is Chandra Kishore Sarcar, who, no doubt, is dead. No one, however, of the remaining 17 witnesses was called before the Court to state that, as a fact, Krishna Shanker executed a Will and that they attested it. The plaintiffs are said to have come to Mymensingh with a draft or copy of the Will. The plaintiff Hemaja Shanker is a medical man and presumably a person of ordinary intelligence. He has not thought fit to state to the Court whether the document which he brought was a draft or a copy, still less has he vouchsafed to give the Court any explanation why the original Will, if it existed, was not produced, whether it had been destroyed or lost. This mysterious draft or copy is not forthcoming. Some of the witnesses speak to having seen it but no one says whether it was a copy or a draft. There is a considerable difference, of course, between the two. A draft does not necessarily imply execution by the testator. A copy, if it were a correct copy, would re-produce the whole Will, including the names of the testator and the witnesses. On a copy probate might be obtained if there was satisfactory evidence of the loss or destruction of the Will itself, not so of the draft. The witnesses state vaguely that an application for probate was drafted. There was no statement, who was the executor named in this Will, or, if no executor was named, whether the application was really for letters of administration with the Will annexed. This must have been within the knowledge of the plaintiff Hemaja Shanker. No draft or copy of this alleged application for probate has been produced. It is not stated whether it is in existence or not. It is impossible that these persons—the plaintiffs, the three Pleaders, the Am-Mukhtear Lakshan Chandra Laha and Kali Kumar Chowdhury, can all have forgotten all the matters of importance, which they should have spoken to in this connection. The story as it is now put forward by the plaintiff is entirely inconsistent with the evidence which Hari Shanker Nandi Mozumdar, plaintiff No. 2, gave on 30th May 1910 in Suit No. 2341 of 1909. There he stated that the Will was with his jethi, i. e. Bhuban Moyi, that after Bimola's death they wanted to take out probate of the Will and searched for it but it could not be found, and that Hemaja then attempted to take out probate on verbal proof of the Will. He admitted then that he had never seen the Will and that they had got a draft of the Will either from Ambica Charan Roy of Banagram or Iswar Roy of their own village when they made a search for it. "The draft," he said, "may be with us." Then he said, "probably it is not with us now." That presumably would be the draft which was taken to Mymensingh for the purpose of the application for probate. The witness Hara Nath Ghose, who was called on behalf of defendant No. 18, but who appears to have been gained over to the plaintiffs' side, gave a version as to the execution of the Will which is also wholly inconsistent with the plaintiffs' case. In cross-examination by the plaintiffs he stated: "I have heard Krishna Shanker Mozumdar executed a Will. I heard of it before the death of Krishna Shanker Mozumdar, probably 5 or 6 days before his death. I heard it from Chandra Sarkar. He got a written piece of paper and asked me to raise Krishna Shanker Mazumdar to a sitting posture. We both raised him and made him sit. He signed it and then Chandra Sarkar took away the paper. He said that it was a Will." Later he said, "I cannot say who attested it." Apart from the facts that this witness had already stated in examination-in-chief that Krishna Shanker Mozumdar had become almost unconscious for 5 or 6 days before his death, this evidence is entirely inconsistent with the fact of the Will having been attested by the 18 witnesses named in the mimanshapatra. It is impossible if such a thing had happened that this witness should not know about it, as he was in Krishna Shanker's service and in close attendance upon him till he died. He states that he was continuously in the bari of Krishna Sankar Roy from 10 to 15 days before his death. The evidence of Shib Chandra Dutt Roy, who is brother of Gagan and a Muktear, does not carry the matter any further. He admits having advised Gagan to settle the matter, but he admits that he never saw the Will or knew anything about it. On this evidence it appears to me to be impossible to come to the conclusion, either that there was a Will at all, or even that the plaintiffs ever thought that there was. There was no honest and bona fide claim put forward by them but merely a sham claim with a view to inducing Gagan Chandra to give up some of the property in their favour. If this be the case, it is obvious that the minor cannot possibly be bound by the act of his father. There was no consideration for the agreement even had the parties been of full age, still less in the case of a minor could his property be thus bargained away.

It was urged upon us that Gagan after the execution of this document acted upon it; and we were shown a case in which registration of names was effected and another case in which he had brought a suit in his son's name for a portion of the property. We are not concerned in this matter with what Gagan did. It may well be that having executed the document he felt that he had no alternative but to act upon it. His subsequent acts, however, cannot bind his minor son if his initial act in executing the document is invalid against him. How Gagan came to execute this document there is not sufficient evidence before us to determine. Whether he was, as he now says, threatened or cajoled into signing it, I cannot say. It appears, however, probable that considerable pressure was brought to bear upon him. He is a man in a lowly position of life, merely a copyist in a Civil Court in more or less temporary employ. It may well be, when the plaintiffs assisted by three Pleaders, all of whom it may be noted are relations of the plaintiffs, recommended him to avoid possible litigation by entering into this agreement, that he consented. It does not appear to me to be the act of a man of ordinary intelligence. One would at least have expected that he would ask to see the Will, make enquiries of the witnesses, and most probably take advice of some independent Pleader. It is clear that he did nothing of the kind. That the settlement was not for the minor's benefit cannot be disputed. It was directly contrary to his interests. About half his share in the property was given up in exchange for what, in my opinion, was a sham claim on the plaintiffs' part. In these circumstances, I hold that the mimanshapatra is not binding on the infant and that his share, which he inherited from Bimola Shanker, cannot be said to have been conveyed away by that document.

It was said that it was Gagan Chandra who was now putting forward this plea on his son's behalf. There does not appear to be any foundation for that though, no doubt, he has given evidence more or less in favour of his son's contention. His wife Promoda Moyi is her son's certificated guardian. She may possibly have been assisted by her husband. What we have to consider, however, is not who is now representing the minor, but what are the minors' interests in this matter, have they been properly protected, and if not, what should this Court now do in his behalf? It is just as though the minor had attained his majority and was himself seeking to impugn his father's action. It is clear that he could not be held bound by it.

I think that the decree of the Subordinate Judge, so far as it relates to the dispute in this appeal, must be set aside and that it must be declared that the plaintiffs are entitled only to a 5-annas, 10-gundas share while the defendant No. 18 is entitled also to a 5-annas 10-gundas share in the property in question. This will necessitate a revision of the allotments. Plaintiffs must pay the costs of defendant No. 18, both in the Court below and in this Court.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree that this appeal must be decreed in the manner indicated by my learned brother. Before stating my reasons for coming to this conclusion, I wish to refer to the two points on which the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have misstated the evidence, both points of some importance one particularly so. He says in his judgment that Gagan admitted before Srinath Roy, the Pleader, that a Will had been executed but destroyed by Krishna Sanker. In Srinath Roy's evidence there is no allegation of an admission by Gagan. I presume the learned Judge is referring to two statements, which are as follows: "I heard in the sittings that the Will was annulled;" and in re-examination, "I heard from Gagan Roy that the Will was annulled." Possibly the learned Judge is right in interpreting the word "annulled" as meaning "destroyed by the testator." But even so, I cannot treat these two sentences as disclosing an admission by Gagan that a Will had been executed. They are equally consistent with a suggestion by him that the Will had been destroyed assuming, while not admitting, the allegation of the plaintiffs to be true, that one had in fact been executed. Nor can I find any trace of any admission by Gagan elsewhere in the evidence that any Will had ever existed. Evidence will naturally be somewhat vague when the witnesses speak to what happened eight years previously; but the rest of the evidence, such as it is, suggests the contrary. Kali Kumar says, "Plaintiffs said that there was a Will of Krishna Sanker and Gagan Roy denied it." Revati Sankar Roy says, "Gagan could not positively say if there was or was not any Will." Lakshan Chandra Laba says, "Gagan Babu said the Will was missing." I think it would be straining language to find in any of these statements an admission by Gagan that Krishna Sanker had in fact executed a Will.

The other misstatement is that the Pleader Shyama Charan advised that it was possible to obtain probate in the absence of the original Will. Shyama Charan does not say so, nor does the plaintiff Hemaja. Syama Charan no doubt says he saw a paper purporting to be a draft or copy of a Will and made a draft of an application for probate, but he was not asked if he advised that probate could be obtained without the original. Hemaja does not even say that he consulted Shyama Charan. The Pleaders whom he consulted were Mohendra Babu and Mohim Roy Babu. I think it may be inferred that Syama Charan was consulted even if not by Hemaja, but from the mere fact that he prepared the draft of the application for probate, if indeed he did prepare it, for he does not remember doing so, it cannot be presumed that he advised that probate might be obtained. Nor are we told that any other Pleader gave such advice.

Not a single witness has been called on behalf of the plaintiffs to speak to the fact that Krishna Sanker did execute a Will, though a number of persons are named in the compromise as having witnessed such execution. And it has been reiterated in argument that the plaintiffs were not bound to prove execution of a Will. No doubt that is true, and it is equally true that primarily all that it was necessary for them to prove was that they had a bona fide claim, even though it may have been a weak one, which they intended to litigate, for where that is the case, withdrawal from litigation is ordinarily a sufficient consideration and the party supporting a compromise is not called upon to prove the quantum of the consideration against the party impugning it. That they alleged a claim there is no doubt and that they would have attempted to litigate it is not improbable, considering the value of the property. But to prove that the claim was a bona fide one there could hardly have been better evidence than that of persons who had seen Krishna Sanker execute a Will, especially if coupled with evidence that the plaintiffs obtained legal advice that they had a good fighting claim. Not that it was necessary for them to show even that they had a strong claim or one likely to succeed, for as Bowen, L. J., said in Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Company (1): "It is a mistake to suppose it is not an advantage, which a suitor is capable of appreciating,

Lakshan no doubt says he came to know of the Will the day after it was executed and Hemaja speaks of hearing of it 3 months after Krishna Sanker's death. But none of the witnesses ever saw the Will, and no attempt appears to have been made to take probate of it till Bimola died some years later, or even to see that it was kept in safe custody. There is no doubt a suggestion in Hemaja's evidence that Gagan had taken the Will, with the implication that he made away with it, but the suggestion was never put to Gagan, who with the other witnesses for the defendant was examined after plaintiffs' second witness and before Hemaja.

It is strongly contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that as regards the execution of a Will they need do nothing more than refer to Gagan's own statement in the mimanshapatra that a Will had been executed, and it was repeatedly urged that even now Gagan does not deny that one was executed. As regards the latter point Gagan's evidence is perfectly clear that he had never heard of the Will before Bimola's death and has no personal knowledge of there ever having been a Will. To the first point there are two answers; the argument identifies Gagan with the minor and thereby begs the question at issue, and in fact Gagan in the mimanshapatra does not admit execution of a Will. What is stated in the document is that the first party alleged execution of a Will while Gagan urged that the disappearance of the alleged Will pointed to its destruction, but there is no admission by Gagan that a Will had been executed. Nor do I think that such an admission can be spalled out of the following sentence, that certain persons named in the schedule were witnesses to the Will.

Now while, on the evidence before us, there is every reason for doubting whether Krishna Sanker did ever in fact execute a Will, apart from the question of his having subsequently destroyed it, what we have mainly to look to is the facts before the parties at the time of the compromise, and to ascertain whether the compromise was for the benefit of the minor, and the test of the minor's benefit is no whether he got a good bargain out of the compromise but whether the guardian, who acted for him, acted as a prudent man would have acted in arranging his own affairs. The minor will not be bound by the guardian's act, if there has been a concealment of material facts or if the facts necessary to enable the guardian to correctly appreciate the minor's interests have not been disclosed.

Gagan says he was induced to enter into the compromise by threats, the threats being to the effect that plaintiffs would litigate the matter up to this Court and that the property would be ruined by the litigation. He says, seeing that the property was of small value, he realised that litigation would ruin it and so consented. It is argued by the plaintiffs, and it was so found by the learned Subordinate Judge, that Gagan knew that the value of the property was considerable, certainly much more than he chooses to admit that he understood it to be. I think that finding to be correct, though the fact that Gagan's own house was near Gachihata is not, considering that Gagan was employed in the Civil Court, in my opinion, a good reason for coming to that conclusion. He had, however, assisted in the management of the property after Krishna Sanker's death and must have had a fair idea as to the value of it. But that very knowledge should have told him that there was not the same fear of ruin of the property from the threatened litigation as there would have been in the case of a smaller estate. Facts which might justify compromise where a small estate is at stake, might not justify compromise in the case of a large property.

Now, what was the position? The minor would succeed to the whole estate in the absence of a Will. Litigation was threatened on the ground that Krishna Sanker had executed a Will, but admittedly no Will could be found and Gagan knew it. Gagan was in a strong position. One would have expected some evidence as to the course which the deliberations took, to show how Gagan was persuaded that compromise was in the minor's interest. After such a lapse of time the evidence might not be very definite as to details but the broad features might have been indicated. There is no such evidence. There is no suggestion that any of the persons who are said to have been witnesses to the Will told Gagan of what they knew. It is not alleged that Gagan was shown the draft or copy on the strength of which the plaintiffs were threatening to apply for probate. It was not even suggested to Gagan that he had ever seen that paper. It was not suggested that the plaintiffs were ready with an explanation for the disappearance of the alleged Will. In fact the deed of compromise negatives the idea that they had any explanation.

Possibly Gagan was overwhelmed by the Pleaders who were advising compromise as friends of the parties. An indication that their advice was not altogether disinterested is to be found in the evidence of Ravati Sanker Roy. He says: "in the sitting of execution we did not raise any question about Will as the matter was going to be compromised between the parties. We rather asked him not to do anything which would give us the trouble of depositing in a Court. We did not raise any question about any term of the solehnama lest the compromise would fail". Ravati does not remember giving any help in bringing about the compromise. His evidence rather suggests that he took no part in it beyond attesting the document. He was, however, according to his evidence given to understand that the Will was in existence, and his evidence that at the time of execution they asked Gagan to do nothing which would bring them into Court as witnesses suggest that even at the eleventh hour Gagan was oppressed with doubts.

It does not appear that Gagan consulted any Pleader. It is argued that he had the advice of his brother Sib Chandra Roy, a Mukhtear. That is true and Gagan says that Sib Chandra advised him to compromise. Sib Chandra admits that he did so, but also admits that he made no enquiry whether any Will had been executed. He says his first impression was that the Will was in existence. That impression was apparently corrected later, though we do not know when it was first corrected, for he says, "it was said that the Will had been missing." At the time of execution of the compromise, he says Lakshan Hemaja and Hari Sanker said the Will was missing. The information given to Ravati, to which I have already referred, as to the Will being in existence shows at least a suppression of the truth and to that extent corroborates Sib Chandra's evidence that he at first believed the Will to be in existence and that belief might be sufficient to cause him to advise Gagan to compromise. One would have expected that advice to be withdrawn when Gagan told him, as one cannot but imagine he must have, that no Will was to be found. However, it is at least doubtful whether Sib Chandra was in possession of the full facts when he advised compromise, there is certainly no evidence that when he did so he knew the plaintiffs were basing their claim to probate on what has been described as a copy or a draft of a Will but the real character of which is unknown.

That Gagan subsequently acted on the deed of compromise as evidenced by applications for registration of the minor's name and the kabuliyat Exhibit 8, is not surprising whatever view may be taken of Gagan's conduct in the compromise.

The conclusions, to which I come on the evidence are that it is extremely doubtful whether the plaintiffs had a bona fide claim, for even the filing of an application for probate would not necessarily indicate that the claim was bona fide, and that the compromise was certainly not for the benefit of the minor. Gagan did not act as a prudent man would have acted in his own interests. Whether he was careless or over-timid, it is clear that he acted without a proper appreciation of the facts and that the minor's interests suffered in his hands.

Appeal decreed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 352 of 1916.

December 21, 1917.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.

MYLAPPA CHETTIAR AND ANOTHER—

PLAINTIFFS NOS. 1 AND 2—APPELLANTS

versus

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY, LIMITED, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 2 AND PLAINTIFFS NOS. 3 TO 5—RESPONDENTS.

Carriage of goods—Non-delivery of goods, action for—Landing agent or carrier, liability of—Privity of contract—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 31, applicability of.

In the case of continuous carriers the authorities establish (1) that when goods have to be carried with the aid of different transport agencies in order to arrive at the destination to which they are booked, the carrier with whom the contract is made at one end is, in the absence of any contract limiting his liability to his own transport system, liable for the loss or destruction of the goods on portions beyond his own system or in consequence of acts or default of persons other than his own servants; (2) that in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the consignor cannot hold the company with whom he does not contract liable for damages when all that can be complained of is non-feasance, though such company may be liable in tort for breach of duty arising from the mere fact that it has undertaken the liability of carrying goods or property belonging to another; (3) when there is an agreement between two companies the effect of which is to constitute one company the agent of the other and the traffic is carried for the joint benefit of both the companies, either company may be sued at the option of the consignor. [p. 487, cols. 1 & 2.]

The 'carrier' in its general sense means a person or company who undertakes to transport the goods of another person from one place to another, for hire. [p. 487, col. 1.]

Article 31 of the Limitation Act is not restricted in its application to common carriers. It applies to carriers who come within the above definition. [p. 487, col. 2; p. 486, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Original Suit No. 55 of 1914.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarma Sastri, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, N. M. Malim Sahib and T. S. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—A case somewhat similar to this case came before the Courts in the British India Steam Navigation Co. Ltd., v. Hojee Mahomed Esack and Co. (1), where it was held that the stipulation for a claim for short delivery being made on the shipowner at Calcutta within a month was not reasonable. This appears to be a sufficient answer to the claim against the British India Steam Navigation Company.

(1) 3 M. 107; 1 Ind. Des. (N. S.) 631.

MYLAIPA CHETTIAR v. BRITISH STEAM NAVIGATION CO. LTD.

As regards the Madura Company, the second defendant, who was the agent, Sir Charles Turner, C. J., and Innes, J., observe in the course of their judgment as regards Ramanujulu and Sons, who were in the same position as the Madura Company here, that "they were the agents of the appellants (The British India Company) to retain the goods, receive freight and give delivery; they were also the agents of the respondents (the consignees) to land the goods, but they were not the agents of the appellants to receive claims for compensation for the non delivery of goods."

This passage recognises, I think correctly, the existence of a contractual relation between the landing agents and the consignees who paid them for their services. This appears to me to be one of those cases in which privity of contract is readily inferred from the well-known course of business according to which the landing agents are paid by the consignees and from the necessities of the case. Compare the cases referred to by my learned brother in the recent Full Bench case, Jaldu Venkatasubba Rao v. Asiatic Steam Navigation Co. (2), and also the cases as regards carriage of goods over Railways having continuous lines; Gill v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Co. (3), Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. v. Radhakrishna Khushaldas (4).

The proper inference appears to be that, as in these cases, the final stage of performance including carriage from the ship's side which at Negapatam is a matter of some miles and delivery is performed by the 2nd defendant. The suit as against the 1st defendant is barred under Article 31 according to the Full Bench ruling in Jaldu Venkatasubba Rao v. Asiatic Steam Navigation Co. (2), and I see no reason why the 2nd defendant should not also be considered a carrier for the purposes of the Article. It would be anomalous if a different Article were applicable to the shipowner and to the landing agent in respect of what are successive stages in the performance of one transaction, the carriage of the goods and delivery to the consignees. The appeal is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The plaintiff, who was the consignee of certain timber consigned from Rangoon through the British India Steam Navigation Company under bills of lading setting forth the terms and conditions under which the British India Steam Navigation Co. undertook to carry the goods, sued to recover Rs. 2,417.12.0 alleged to be due in respect of timber consigned but not delivered. The 2nd defendant, which is a firm engaged inter alia in landing goods from the steamers of the British India Steam Navigation Co., is sought to be made liable as they are landing agents at Negapatam in respect of all goods that arrive at the port in the vessels belonging to the British India Steam Navigation Co. and levy and receive from plaintiff separate charges for their undertaking to land and deliver goods.

Various defences were raised but it is only necessary to consider the grounds on which the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, namely, the question of limitation so far as the 1st defendant was concerned and want of privity of contract as regards the 2nd defendant.

The bill of lading provides that "the Company is to have the option of delivering the goods or any part thereof, into the receiving ship, or landing them at the risk and expense of the shipper or consignee, as per scale of charges to be seen at the agents' office and is also to be at liberty until delivery to store the goods or any part thereof in receiving ship, godown or upon any wharf, the usual charges whereof being payable by the shipper or consignee.....In all cases and under all circumstances the liability of the Company shall absolutely cease when the goods are free of the ship's tackle and thereupon the goods shall be at the risk for all purposes and in every respect of the shipper or consignee."

It seems to me that the bill of lading provides that goods are to be conveyed from Burmah and landed at Negapatam by two agencies, one carrying the goods up to the port and the other from the ship's tackle to the godowns on the shore and that the agreement limits the liability of the Company to the period when the goods pass from the ship to the landing agent.

Mr. M'Conechy of the 2nd defendant's firm, who is the only witness called in the case, deposes that the 2nd defendant collects landing charges from the merchants to whom the goods are consigned through the 1st defendant Company, which has nothing to do with the 2nd defendant's charges though the charges are subject to the 1st defendant's sanction. He states that the 2nd defendant Company owns a number of boats and that it is bound to unload goods from all the steamers of the 1st defendant Company and has the option of refusing to unload goods of others. He also states that merchants cannot engage the services of any other boat agency to land goods from the 1st defendant's steamers.

The case is, therefore, one of continuous carriage of goods, the 1st defendant Company making arrangements for the carriage though limiting its own liability to one stage of the transit.

There can be little doubt that the 2nd defendant Company are carriers, though not common carriers within the meaning of the Carriers Act of 1865. The word 'carrier' in its general sense means a person or company who undertakes to transport the goods of another person from one place to another for hire (Wharton Law Lexicon), and the 2nd defendant falls within the definition.

I do not think that the 2nd defendant Company can, on the facts proved in this case, escape liability on the ground of any want of privity between itself and the plaintiff.

In the case of continuous carriers the authorities establish (1) that when the goods have to be carried with the aid of different transport agencies in order to arrive at the destination to which they are booked, the carrier with whom the contract is made at one end is, in the absence of any contract limiting his liability to his own transport system, liable for the loss or destruction on portions beyond his own system or in consequence of acts or default of persons other than his own servants: Muschamp v. Lancaster and Preston Junction Railway Co. (5), Bristol and Exeter Railway Co. v. Collins (6), Foulkes v. Metropolitan District Railway Co. (7) Aldridge v. Great Western Railway Co. (8); (2) that in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the consignor could not hold the company with whom he did not contract liable for damages when all that could be complained of was non-feasance, though such company may be liable in tort for breach of duty arising from the mere fact that it has undertaken the liability of carrying goods or property belonging to another: Foulkes v. Metropolitan District Railway Co. (7); (3) when there is an agreement between two companies the effect of which is to constitute one company the agent of the other and the traffic is carried for the joint benefit of both the companies, either company may be sued on the option of the consignor. Gill v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Co. (3) Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. v. Radhakisan Khushaldas (4).

If, however, the 2nd defendant Company are carriers, and I think they are, it is clear that Article 31 of the Limitation Act would apply equally to them. It is not necessary for the purpose of Article 31 that they should be common carriers.

Whatever doubt may have existed as to the applicability of Article 31 in cases of failure to deliver goods where the action was laid ex contractu, the matter has been set at rest by the Full Bench decision of this Court in Jaldū Venkatasubba Rao v. Asiatic Steam Navigation Co. (2). It is, therefore, unnecessary to refer to the various conflicting prior decisions on the point referred to by Mr. Venkatarama Sastri.

It was admitted before the Subordinate Judge that if Article 31 applies, the suit is barred by limitation as the claim arose more than a year before suit. There is nothing in the records to show that there was any acknowledgment of liability so as Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806, s. 8—Mortgage by way of conditional sale—Foreclosure proceedings—Notice, service of—Evidence—Redemption.

In order to prove that the equity of redemption of a mortgage by way of conditional sale has been extinguished by proceedings taken under section 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806, the mortgagee must establish that he caused the mortgagor or his legal representative to be served with a copy of his own written application for foreclosure and also with a notice or pervana under the seal and official signature of the District Judge, warning him that the mortgage would be finally foreclosed in the event of his failing to redeem within a period of one year. [p. 488, col. 2.]

The records of the proceedings taken under the Regulation cannot be accepted as prima facie proof of the fact of service of notice. [p. 488, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated 19th April 1916.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai and Lakshmi Narain Tewari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit in which the plaintiffs claim redemption of a mortgage by conditional sale effected on the 27th of December 1866. The plaintiffs are the son and grandsons of the original mortgagor, and the defendants are the sons and grandsons of the original mortgagee. The fact of the mortgage is admitted, and we find that it was never pleaded that the said mortgage, if redeemable at all, was redeemable only for a larger sum than that tendered by the plaintiffs. The defendants, however, contended that the equity of redemption had been extinguished by reason of certain proceedings taken in the year 1876 by the mortgagee under section 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806. Both the Courts below have found in favour of the defendants on this point and have added a finding that the present suit is barred by limitation. This latter finding, as it stands, is difficult to accept. The suit was one for redemption and was brought within the statutory period of limitation. Either the equity of redemption has been extinguished, or it has not. Of course if it has been extinguished, the suit fails not by reason of any bar of limitation, but because the plaintiffs have failed to prove their cause of action, namely, a subsisting right to redeem. If, on the other hand, the equity of redemption has not been extinguished, the suit is obviously within time. The essential question for determination is whether the proceedings taken by the mortgagee in the year 1876 had the effect of extinguishing the equity of redemption. This must depend in the first instance upon whether the mortgagee caused the mortgagor, or his legal representative, to be served with a copy of his own written application for foreclosure and also with a notice or pervana under the seal and official signature of the District Judge, warning him that the mortgage would be finally foreclosed in the event of his failing to redeem within a period of one year. The evidence by which it is sought to prove this fact consists of certain records of the proceedings of the Court of the District Judge of Gorakhpur. There is abundant authority to support the proposition that such records cannot be accepted as prima facie proof of the fact of service. It has been contended before us on behalf of the respondent that most of the decisions on the point were pronounced in cases in which the mortgagee had come into Court asking for a decree for possession, or a decree declaring his proprietary title, after he had taken the requisite proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806. There is, however, a Bench decision of this Court in which the same principles have been applied to a suit for redemption exactly on all fours with the suit now before us. We refer to the case of

KARAKKATTITATHIL RAYARAPPA v. KOYOTAN CHABLE VEETIL.

Badal Ram v. Taj Ali (1). We have been asked to re-consider the decision in that case; but we do not ourselves see any adequate reason to dissent from it, and in any case we prefer to follow it on the principal of stare decisis. The evidence relied upon by the learned District Judge, as proving that the equity of redemption was extinguished by reason of the proceedings taken in 1876, was not evidence which could be accepted as establishing the facts sought to be proved on behalf of the defendants, and the decision of the District Judge on this point is based upon an erroneous view of the law and is open to interference by this Court under section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We may note that the Bench case to which reference has already been made was also decided in second appeal. This consideration is sufficient to dispose of the present appeal. We set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and in lieu thereof we give the plaintiffs a decree for redemption to be drawn up in the form prescribed by Order XXIV, rule 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure, allowing redemption of the property in suit on payment of the sum of Rs. 393-1-0 (rupees three hundred and ninety-three and anna one only) on account of principal and interest within three months from this date. The plaintiffs will be entitled to their costs in all three Courts.

Decrees set aside.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, North Malabar, in Original Suit No. 16 of 1913.

Mr. Chamier, for the Appellant.

Mr. Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff, as the Karnavan of his Tarwad, sues to recover possession from the defendants. His case is that his Tarwad is the jenmi of the properties in suit, that its title was recognised by the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 142 of 1868 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Kavvayi (under the Zilla Court of Tellichery), and that the 1st and other defendants who are Anandravans of the defendant's Tarwad hold the property under a Kanom from the plaintiff's Tarwad. The plaintiff further stated that a sum of Rs. 400 was paid towards the Kanom and that the defendants are bound to surrender on the receipt of the balance. The defendants contended that the jenmi title belonged to their Tarwad and not to the plaintiff's Tarwad.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has appealed. A preliminary objection is taken by the respondent that the appeal filed in this Court is barred by limitation. The original valuation of the suit was below five thousand rupees; the plaintiff first presented an appeal to the District Court which admittedly was in time. Objection was there taken that the appeal should be preferred to the High Court. Upholding this objection, the District Judge returned the appeal for presentation to this Court on the 24th of January 1916, and it was filed on the 31st January 1916.

KARAKKATTATHIL RAYARAPPA v. KOYTAN CHABLE VEETIL.

Mr. Menon contended that the filing of the appeal in the District Court was due to an error of law and that section 5 of the Limitation Act is not applicable to such a case; and he relied on Ramjiwan Mal v. Chand Mal (1). That and other decisions were considered by the Judicial Committee in Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (2), where it was pointed out that it is not the rule that delays due to an error of law are not within section 5 of the Limitation Act. We hold, therefore, that we have power to excuse the delay. As regards the interval between the return of the plaint and its presentation in the High Court, having regard to the fact that a fresh rakalat had to be obtained from the parties and to the distance between Madras and Tellicherry, we do not think there was any negligence. We, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits the facts are these. The property in suit admittedly belonged to a Devaswom. The plaintiff claimed that he acquired the trusteeship as well as the right to be in possession of the properties of the temple from the Uralam. He has produced no documents in support of the claim, excepting the razinama decree to which we shall presently refer. The defendants also trace their title to the Devaswom. They base their title on an alleged Saswatham grant from a person who at one time called himself the Samudayee but who defendants assert was really the Uralam of the temple.

Exhibits I and III are the title-deeds. It is not necessary to examine the respective titles of the parties any further as the basis of the present litigation is the compromise decree passed in the Kavvayi Court. The parties to that litigation were the then Karnavan of the plaintiff's Tarwad, the present 1st defendant and the assignor of that defendant. The plaintiff's Tarwad then contended that the property was in their possession for a long time and that the defendants who claimed through a Samudayee were not entitled to it. It is said that before the written statement was filed, the parties entered into a compromise which was embodied in the decree of the Court. The result of that compromise was to recognise the title of the plaintiff's Tarwad to the property and to grant a Kanom in favour of the defendants' Tarwad. This was in the year 1868. The present suit is to enforce the terms of that compromise. The main contention of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was that the compromise which gave up the rights of their Tarwad was not binding on them.

The Subordinate Judge bases his judgment upon three conclusions, (1) that the compromise did not confer any rights to the property and was not receivable in evidence for want of registration; (2) that as there were no doubtful rights to be settled the compromise was not binding upon the Tarwad; and (3) that the defendants have been in adverse possession. As regards the 1st contention reliance was placed upon the absence of an exemption for registration in favour of decrees of Court in the Registration Act of 1866. Under that Act the Court passing a decree for property over a hundred rupees in value was directed to send that decree to the Registering Officer for registration. See sections 41 and 42. Under section 17 of the same Act, documents executed by the parties for similar properties were compulsorily registrable. The contention of the learned Counsel for the respondents is that the provisions of the Act of 1877 which exempted decrees from registration should not be applied retrospectively, and that as at the time of the compromise the decree could not confer any title to immoveable property, it was not receivable in evidence. In the first place, it must be noted that parts III and VIII of the old Registration Act dealt with two different classes of cases, sections 17 to 21 which are in part III dealt with documents inter partes. Section 41 referred to documents sued upon being superseded by a decree of the Court, section 42 to decrees otherwise declaring rights in immoveable property. In section 49 the reference was not to documents mentioned in part VIII but to documents referred to in section 17. It is clear, therefore, that the validity of a decree was not dependent upon registration under the old Act. The provision in part VIII is only to complete the Record of Rights by the Registration Department. If it was intended by the Legislature that a decree should not confer rights of property unless registered, it would have been included in the prohibitory section 49. We hold that the compromise decree did confer title on the plaintiff's Tarwad, notwithstanding non-registration. The decisions in Purnanand Das Jiwardas v. Vallabdas Walljee (3) and in Raju Balu v. Krishnarav Ramchandra (4), although they related only to the admissibility in evidence and not to the conferring of rights contain observations which support our view. There can be no doubt that the document is receivable in evidence as well.

The next point for decision is whether the compromise is not binding upon the defendant's Tarwad. The 1st defendant having been a party to it, it is not open to him to dispute it. The main contention on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 is that, prior to the compromise, the defendants' Tarwad had been successful in every litigation against the plaintiff's Tarwad, that the former were in possession of the properties, that there was no doubt as to their paramount title at the time and, therefore, the Karnavan, the 1st defendant, was not justified in surrendering the rights of the Tarwad and in accepting in lieu thereof the subordinate right of a Kanomdar. As to this, the materials which influenced the 1st defendant in consenting to the compromise have not been placed before the Courts; the evidence of the 1st defendant does not show that in agreeing to the decree he was acting in fraud of the Tarwad or that he was unduly influenced by the plaintiff.

Mr. Menon for the respondents argued with great insistence that as the decree was passed against the 1st defendant not as Karnavan but in his individual capacity, it is not binding on the Tarwad. He relied upon the observations of Shephard, J., in Vasudevan v. Sankaran (5). The Full Bench in that case held that the Karnavan of a Malabar Tarwad honestly defending a suit in his representative capacity will bind the Tarwad. From this judgment, the learned Counsel argued that the converse of the proposition, namely, that if the decree is not passed against the Karnavan in his representative capacity, it is not binding on the Tarwad, follows. It was conceded (by Mr. Chamier for the appellant and by Mr. Menon for the respondent) that there is no decision which establishes this converse proposition. In the Full Bench judgment Mr. Justice Shephard says: "One negative proposition is clearly established by the cases to which I have referred—a decree made against a Karnavan is clearly not binding on the Tarwad unless he sued or was sued in his representative character." The learned Judge does not say, as was contended before us, that the Karnavan should be impleaded as such. We do not understand from the above quotation that, although in effect the suit was against the Tarwad, yet if the Karnavan is not specially impleaded as Karnavan the Tarwad will not be bound. Under Hindu Law if a suit is brought against a manager of a Hindu family, although he is not impleaded as such in the suit, the result of the litigation will bind the other co-parceners. See Subbanna Bhatta v. Subbanna (6), Baldeo Sonar v. Mobarak Ali Khan (7), Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kun- war (8). It is not the form of the suit that is essential; but the question in each case will be whether in substance the person suing or sued conducted the litigation for his own benefit or as representing the family of which he was the head. We see no reason for not applying this principle to cases governing Malabar Tarwads.

On examining the compromise we find that the rights secured were not for the individual benefit of the 1st defendant but for the Tarwad, and not that of the individual defendant. We are satisfied upon the evidence of the 1st defendant and upon a perusal of the razinama that the 1st defendant was sued as representing his Tarwad and that he agreed to the compromise in his representative capacity.

On the question whether it was a bona fide settlement of a disputed claim, the burden is on the defendants to show that the compromise was not honestly come to. In Pulliah Chetti v. Varadarajulu Chetti (9) it was held that it is for the party who impeaches the compromise to prove that it was illegal or void. As regards Gun'eshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh (10), which was strongly relied on by the respondents' Counsel, it is enough to say that the finding of the Judicial Committee in that case showed that one of the parties to the litigation possessed information which he withheld from the other party and induced that party dishonestly to agree to the terms of the compromise. In the present case there is nothing to show that both parties were not equally cognisant of all the facts which led up to the compromise. There is no evidence that the then plaintiff wrongfully induced the 1st defendant to accept the compromise to which he was not a willing party. The compromise has stood unquestioned for nearly half a century. We must, therefore, hold that it is binding on the defendants.

We agree with the Subordinate Judge that it has not been satisfactorily proved that any portion of the Kanom amount was paid by the plaintiff's Tarwad to the defendants. The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed and a preliminary decree for redemption must be passed in favour of the plaintiff.

There is an issue as to improvements which has to be decided before accounts are taken and the final decree is passed in the case. Costs hitherto incurred will be provided for in the revised decree.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 90—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), ss. 74, 76—Razinamas and kabuliyaats, whether evidence of transfer—Registration.

Per Beaman, J.—Although razinamas and kabuliyaats are not in themselves documents of transfer, they are fairly conclusive evidence that a transfer has in fact been made. [p. 493 col. 1.]

Razinamas and kabuliyaats executed between a mortgagor and his mortgagee extinguish the equity of redemption. [p. 493, col. 1.]

Quere.—Whether in proper cases governed by the Bombay Land Revenue Code, razinamas and kabuliyaats stand in need of registration at all?

Per Heaton, J.—It is quite possible that kabuliyaats are exempted from registration in consequence of the provisions of clause (b), section 90, of the Registration Act, as they appear to evidence assignments by Government of an interest in land. [p. 493, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—In this case one Venkaji mortgaged four survey numbers in four lots, that is to say, a quarter of each to each of four mortgagees. The learned Judge of first appeal, it is true, doubts whether these facts are proved, but it is on that footing that the appellant has argued the case and it seems to be the view most favourable to him. I shall, therefore, assume that the facts were as I am now setting them forth, and that after these four mortgages, the mortgagor executed a Razinama in respect of each of the four survey numbers to each one of the four mortgagees, the said mortgagees in turn executing complementary Kabuliyats. The effects of these as Razinamas and Kabuliyats have frequently been discussed and to more than one judgment on the subject I have been a party. The latest case, Imam Ibrahim v. Bhau Appaji Jadhav (1), was decided by Scott, C. J., and myself. The learned Chief Justice gave a very exhaustive analysis of the legal contents of the matter then in dispute. But I am again in some doubt whether we did not exaggerate our difficulties. I am speaking now of the theoretical difficulties generally, because probably on the facts of that case the provisions of the Land Revenue Code, read with section 90 of the Indian Registration Act of 1908, would not have been of much assistance. It may well, however, be doubted whether in proper cases governed by the Land Revenue Code, Razinamas and Kabuliyats stand in need of registration at all. If they do not, although I agree that they cannot in themselves be documents of transfer, they would always, I think, be fairly conclusive evidence that the transfer had in fact been made, and so I might work back to the position I took when deciding a case of this kind [Venkaji Narayan Kulkarni v. Gopal Ramchandra (2)] with my brother Hayward, where we held that Razinamas and Kabuliyats executed between (and to use somewhat loose language) a mortgagor and his mortgagee extinguish the equity of redemption. For if in fact an occupancy holder mortgaged his holding and thereafter agreed with the mortgagee to relinquish his occupancy right in favour of the latter, pursuant to which agreement he handed in his Razinama and the mortgagee tendered his Kabuliyat, the result would carry out the intention of the parties to extinguish any further right the original mortgagor had in the equity of redemption. In effect, we understand that the learned Judge below has found that the possession of the defendants, which de facto at any rate seems to have commenced after the mortgagor had handed in his four Razinamas, was taken in respect of the quarters of the three survey numbers from the new Kabuliyatdars. And on that footing he has held that the possession was taken from the true owners and that the mortgagor had no further right subsisting. As regards the fourth number, that of which the defendant himself became the Kabuliyatdar or occupancy-holder, the learned District Judge says that it is not disputed that the mortgage was extinguished as regards that land. Probably because the learned Judge was much more conversant with the facts than we were when the case was opened, we found some difficulty in understanding his judgment. But we have little doubt that in the result his finding is right and that there was no equity of redemption outstanding in 1912, when the descendant of the original mortgagor purported to convey it to the plaintiff. If that be so, then the plaintiff has no right upon which he can ask the Court to be allowed to redeem and his suit must fail.

We think that this appeal should be dismissed with all costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. We are settling this case on certain representations made by the Pleader for the appellant, and accepting those representations as the correct presentment of the facts, the conclusion evidently is, in my opinion, that stated by my learned brother. As certain cases have been referred to, the judgments in which deal with this matter of Razinamas and Kabuliyats, I should like to refer to a judgment of my own in the case of Motibhai Jijibhai v. Desaiabhai Gokalbhai (3) in which I find, as a result of the argument before us, I think nothing that I need change, the only thing I would like to add being that possibly I exaggerated the supposed difficulty arising from the circumstance that Kabuliyats unlike Razinamas are not exempted from registration. For, I think, it is quite possible it will be found that they are exempted from registration in consequence of the provisions of clause (b), section 90, of the Indian Registration Act, as they appear to evidence assignments by Government of an interest in land. However that may be, I do not doubt that in this case the decree of the lower Appellate Court is correct and should be affirmed.

Valuation of suit—Suit for declaration that property attached is not liable to sale, value of—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63.

The value for purposes of jurisdiction of a suit for a declaration that a certain property attached in execution of a decree is not liable to sale, is the value of the decree sought to be executed, and not the value of the property attached.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares.

Mr. Narmadeshwar Upadhyaya (with him Dr. Surendra Nath Sen), for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff sought a declaration that certain property was not saleable in execution of a certain decree. It appears that the principal defendants had a decree against the plaintiff's husband. In execution of that decree they attached certain property, alleging it to be the property of their judgment-debtor. The decree was for in or about Rs. 2,000. The plaintiff in the present suit objected to the attachment. The objection was overruled and the plaintiff had to bring the present suit. The Court of first instance dismissed her claim holding that the property was the property of the judgment-debtor and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has now preferred this second appeal. The first and main objection urged is that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal because the value of the property was over Rs. 5,000. This objection does not come very well from the plaintiff, considering that it was she herself who preferred the appeal to the District Judge. If the argument held good, it would mean that the judgment of the Court of first instance had become final and the probabilities are that no Court would allow an appeal now to be presented from the judgment of the first Court. We think, however, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit and the appeal was below Rs. 5,000. What the plaintiff claimed was a declaration that the property was not saleable in execution of the decree, that is, for the realisation of the amount of the decree. The defendants were only concerned to the extent of the amount due under their decree. They did not care whether the plaintiff could keep the property after their decree had been satisfied. This very point was decided in the case of Khetra Pal v. Mumtaz Begam (1). We have been referred by Mr. Upadhyaya to the case of Radha Kunwar v. Reati Singh (2). This ruling, it seems to us, supports the view that we take in the present case. There it was held that though the mortgage decree, which was sought to be satisfied, was far above Rs. 10,000, the value of the property to the decree-holder and to the judgment-debtor was below Rs. 2,000, and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that this must be taken to be the value of the subject-matter of the appeal. We consider that the appeal lay to the District Judge. It was for that Court to decide questions of fact and we think that the findings arrived at conclude the present appeal. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The words "period of limitation proscribed" in section 48 of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act control and modify the period of time allowed for execution of a decree by section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, so that a decree-holder is entitled to exclude from the period of limitation allowed by the latter section the interval of time occupied in obtaining a conciliator's certificate. [p. 495, col. 2.]

The intention of the Legislature in enacting section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was to secure that the judgment-creditor, compelled by the new Act to approach the conciliator for a certificate, was not to be damaged by any lapse of time before the conciliator gave him the certificate. [p. 495, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 386 of 1914, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Bail-Hongal, in Darkhast No. 254 of 1913.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondents Nos. 2 to 4.

JUDGMENT.

BACHELOR, Ag. C. J.—This is an appeal in execution, and the only question involved is whether the application to execute is barred by time. The decree was obtained on the 28th October 1899, and was followed by three Darkhasts, all of which must, for the purposes of this appeal, be taken to have been made within the time allowed. The fourth and present Darkhast is dated the 23rd August 1913, that is, more than twelve years after the decree. The delay, however, is sought to be excused in this way. The suit was governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and on the 1st of July 1911, the appellant, the judgment-creditor, applied for a conciliator's certificate as under the Act he was then bound to do. He did not get the certificate till the 29th March 1913, and the only question to be answered in the appeal is whether under section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, he is entitled to exclude this interval of time occupied in obtaining this certificate.

The learned Judges below have both held against the judgment-creditor, but the only ground for their decision is the ruling of this Court in Dayaram v. Laxman (1). If that case, however, be read with attention, it will, I think, be recognised that it has no bearing whatever upon the question now in controversy. For the only point in Dayaram's case (1) was whether the phrase "the period of limitation prescribed" in section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act could cover not only the period of limitation expressly mentioned in an Article of the Limitation Act, but also an added section of that Act, namely, section 31, under which a special temporary concession was allowed to mortgagees. The Court held that the words "the period of limitation prescribed" in section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act must refer only to the period expressly prescribed in the Limitation Act, and could not include the exceptional concession subsequently allowed. With all that, however, we have nothing to do here, where the question which confronts us is totally different, and is this, whether the words "the period of limitation prescribed" in section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act can control or modify the period of time allowed, not in the Statute of Limitation at all, but in section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is necessary for the judgment-debtor to contend for the negative, but it appears to me clear that the affirmative is the correct answer. In the first place, if it had been the intention of the Legislature to enact that the period of limitation in section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, should be exclusively the period of limitation to be found within the Limitation Act, nothing would have been easier than to express that intention clearly. So far from this being done, we have a complete omission of any reference to the Limitation Act, and the words are general and comprehensive, namely, "the period of limitation prescribed for any suit or application." That, I take it, means the period of limitation prescribed in any law for the time being in force, and it seems to me clear that the intention of the Legislature in enacting this section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act was to secure that the judgment-creditor, compelled by the new Act to approach the conciliator for a certificate, was not to be damaged by any lapse of time before the conciliator gave him the certificate. But unless the judgment-creditor's argument is to be allowed in this case, it is manifest that grave injustice must often ensue. For, if we suppose that a week before the expiration of the twelve years, the judgment-creditor approached the conciliator for a certificate, and the conciliator then, as he did here, slept over the matter for the space of two years, the judgment-creditor must inevitably be out of time through no fault of his own. This result, it appears to me, it was the precise intention of the Legislature to avoid by section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. And our present case is little less strong than that which I have put, for on the 1st July 1911, when the application to the conciliator was made, it was admitted in time. This view of the case seems to me to receive direct support from the language employed by the Legislature in Articles 181 and 182 of the Limitation Act of 1908, for those Articles deal with applications provided or not provided for "by section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Clearly, therefore, in the mind of the Legislature section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided a period of limitation, and I can see no reason for thinking that the period of limitation thus provided falls outside the general words employed by the Legislature in section 48 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. On these grounds I am of opinion that the appeal must be allowed, the lower Court's decree must be reversed and the Darbhast must be proceeded with as being in time. The appellant to have his costs. It will be open to the respondents, if so advised, to raise the point of limitation as to the earlier Darbhasts.

No co-sharer landlord can put an end to a tenancy unless he represents the entire proprietary body. Any co-sharer can sue to eject a trespasser from the entire area covered by a trespass, but only the full landlord can sue to eject a tenant.

A man who is put on the land as a tenant by a co-sharer and who remains with his status undisputed for many years, is prima facie a tenant who has been accepted as such by the proprietary body.

There can be no such thing as a partial ejectment of a tenant to the extent of the share of the cosharer claiming joint possession, nor can there be joint possession by the landlord with the tenant.

Semle.—There can be created no tenancy by prescription.

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated the 6th of February 1912, in Appeal No. 198 of 1911.

Mr. R. B. Gadgil, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants have no case, and never had any in this litigation. Ramlal is the recorded tenant of the fields in dispute, and has been so for over 12 years. I am clear that no co-sharer can sue to put an end to the tenancy unless he represents the entire proprietary body. Any co-sharer may sue to eject a trespasser from the entire area covered by the trespass. Only the full landlord can sue to eject a tenant. A man who was put on the land as a tenant by any co-sharer, and who has remained thus with his status undisputed as in this case for many years, is prima facie a tenant who has been accepted as such by the proprietary body. There can be no such thing as the partial ejectment of a tenant to the extent of the share of the co-sharer claiming joint possession, nor can there be joint possession by landlord and tenant. The lower Appellate Court's decree as regards plot No. 19/5 is erroneous but no appeal has been made against it. The whole suit should have been dismissed. On the plaintiff's allegation that Ramlal is a trespasser, his suit is barred as to the other plots. If the lower Appellate Court found that Ramlal is an ordinary tenant by prescription, the finding is wrong: Kanhayalal v. Dularsingh (1). On the facts found, however, Ramlal is an ordinary tenant and so no co-sharer can sue to eject him without the consent of the whole proprietary body. If the plaintiffs are not content to abide by the opinions of the majority of the shareholders in this matter, their remedy lies in partition.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs without notice to the other side.

Appeal dismissed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 13—Evidence of child witness—(Omission to administer oath, effect of—Evidence, weight of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 118—Witness, competency of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Murder—Punishment—Capital sentence, when not to be passed.

Per Shah, J.—The evidence of a witness of tender years, though taken without any solemn affirmation in the prescribed form, is admissible by virtue of the provisions of section 13 of the Oaths Act. Such evidence, however, must be received with due care and caution. [p. 498, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is necessary that before proceeding to examine such witnesses the Court should satisfy itself that the witness is competent to testify, that is, is capable of understanding the questions put to him and of giving rational answers to those questions. Thereafter the Court should proceed to administer an oath or affirmation as required by the Oaths Act. [p. 498, col. 1.]

If the witness is found to be incapable of understanding the obligations of such an oath or affirmation, he may be examined without an oath or affirmation, provided he is found to be a competent witness. These facts may be noted, so that the record may show that before taking the statement of a witness of that character, the trial Court had ascertained that the witness was a competent witness under section 118 of the Indian Evidence Act and that the omission to administer an oath or affirmation was due to his want of understanding the obligations of an oath. [p. 498, cols. 1 & 2.]

The ignorance of a child on such a matter as the nature of a solemn affirmation is not necessarily equivalent to an inability to understand ordinary questions and give rational answers. [p. 498, col. 2.]

There is a certain degree of reluctance on the part of Judges to pass a capital sentence, when the substantial part of the evidence which the prosecution rely upon is evidence recorded without an oath or affirmation as required by the Oaths Act. [p. 499, col. 1.]

Criminal confirmation case with appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, Ahmednagar.

Mr. Velinkar (with him Mr. Pilgamkar), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case the accused was charged with committing the murder of a boy named Vishwas on the 13th of August last, the murder having been caused by drowning the boy in a river. He was tried by the Sessions Judge of Ahmednagar, who, in agreement with the assessors, has found him guilty. He has been sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court.

We have heard full arguments in this case. The case for the prosecution depends mainly upon the evidence of the witnesses Daji and three boys, Babaji, Parya and Bhika, and upon certain circumstances.

It will be convenient at the outset to deal with the point about which we felt some difficulty and on which we invited arguments at the Bar. That relates to the admissibility of the evidence of these three boys. Two of them are seven years old and one of them is nine years old, and we find it stated in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge that "an oath was not tendered to the boys as they appeared to be too young to understand it but they promised to speak the truth." The original record of the depositions of these boys in Marathi does not show that no oath was administered. But the notes of evidence in the Judge's own hand-writing show that the boys were not examined on oath but were examined on simple affirmation to speak the truth. In the diary of the case the boys are stated to have been examined like other witnesses on solemn affirmation. Though we had some difficulty in determining in this case as to what actually happened, I think the statement in the judgment makes it clear that the boys were examined not on oath, i. e., as I understand, no solemn affirmation in the form prescribed by the High Court was administered as required by the Indian Oaths Act.

This raises the question as to whether the omission to administer an oath or affirmation as required by the Indian Oaths Act to a witness of tender years renders his evidence inadmissible. The answer depends upon the meaning to be attached to the word "omission" in section 13 of the Indian Oaths Act. Several cases have been cited to us on this point, and it is clear that there is a difference of opinion on the question. So far as I can see, however, in this Presidency the view taken by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Queen v. Sewa Bhogta (1) is accepted, as would appear from the judgment of Mr. Justice Jardine in Queen-Empress v. Shava (2) and from Emperor v. Kusha Yamaji Sutar (3).

I am conscious of the considerations in favour of the other view which have been set forth in the dissenting judgment of Jackson, J., in the Full Bench case to which I have referred, in the judgment of Mahmood, J., in Queen-Empress v. Maru (4) and in the judgment of Collins, C. J., in Queen-Empress v. Viraperumal (5). But on the whole it seems to me that the view consistently adopted by this Court should be adhered to. I, therefore, hold, following the view accepted in this Presidency, that the evidence of these boys, though taken without any solemn affirmation in the prescribed form, is admissible in virtue of the provisions of section 13 of the Indian Oaths Act.

I desire, however, to add that it is necessary to follow the procedure pointed out by this Court in the cases above referred to in recording the evidence of witnesses of tender years. It is necessary that before proceeding to examine such witnesses the Court should satisfy itself that the witness was competent to testify, that is, was capable of understanding the questions put to him and of giving rational answers to those questions; and that thereafter the Court would proceed to administer an oath or affirmation as required by the Indian Oaths Act. If the witness is found to be incapable of understanding the obligations of such an oath or affirmation, he may be examined without an oath or affirmation, provided he is found to be a competent witness. These facts may be noted so that the record may show that before taking the statement of a witness of that character, the trial Court had ascertained that the witness was a competent witness under section 118 of the Indian Evidence Act and that the omission to administer an oath or affirmation was due to his want of understanding the obligations of an oath.

I wish to make it clear that, as pointed out in the case of Emperor v. Kusha Yamaji Sutar (3), the ignorance of a child on such a matter as the nature of a solemn affirmation is not necessarily equivalent to an inability to understand ordinary questions and give rational answers.

I am satisfied in this case that the evidence of the boys is admissible. The weight, however, to be attached to this evidence is quite a different matter and it is obvious that evidence of witnesses of such tender age must be received with due care and caution.

The case for the prosecution is that there was a dispute between Baburao, the father of the deceased boy, and the accused and his father with respect to certain land, that there was a decree in respect of the land in August 1916, that the possession of the land was to be handed over to the father of the deceased boy on the 13th of August last, and that possession was in fact handed over at about 11 o'clock that morning. The accused was not present at the time of handing over the possession to Baburao. He was seen going towards the place where the deceased boy and his other companions were playing when Baburao and other persons were going towards the field. Soon after this the accused took away the boy on the pretext of giving him big thorns to play with and at once threw him into the river, which was very near the place where these boys were playing. He jumped into the river after throwing the boy in it. This is said to have been seen by the three boys and the witness Daji. The complainant Baburao, the father of the deceased boy, was at once informed of this fact when he returned from the field and he immediately gave information to the Patil. Both the information given to the Patil and the report made by the Patil to the Sub-Inspector refer to the accused Hari as the person who threw Vishwas into the river. The Sub-Inspector arrived at night on that very day and he examined the boys and the witness Daji on the following day, i. e., on the 14th of August. This evidence has been subjected to critical examination by the learned Counsel for the accused, and after considering all that has been said in favour of the accused, I see no reason to disbelieve the evidence either of Daji or of the boys. I am satisfied that these boys and the deceased Vishwas were playing together on that day and that the deceased Vishwas was taken away by the accused and thrown into the river. There is really no good reason to distrust the evidence of Daji. It appears from his evidence that Hari, that is the accused, was taken out of the water and made to stand there at the time. This evidence, coupled with the fact that the information was immediately given, leaves no doubt in my mind that the prosecution case is true.

There is a further circumstance about the foot-prints. So far as it goes, it is in favour of the prosecution case; but I do not attach much importance to it, because there is no means of testing whether the foot-prints tallied as deposed to by the Panch in this case.

There can be no doubt, in my opinion, about the correctness of the conviction.

The murder was undoubtedly brutal and the boy murdered was an innocent boy who had given no offence whatever to the accused. Under these circumstances ordinarily I should think that the capital sentence would be appropriate. At the same time I notice a certain degree of reluctance on the part of Judges from the reported cases to pass a capital sentence, when the substantial part of the evidence which the prosecution rely upon is evidence recorded without an oath or affirmation as required by the Indian Oaths Act. I do not wish to be understood as laying down any general rule applicable to all such cases. But taking that into consideration along with the circumstances of this case, I am of opinion that the sentence of transportation for life would not be inappropriate.

I would, therefore, commute the sentence of death to one of transportation for life.

MARTEN, J.—Despite Mr. Velinkar's able arguments, the only difficulty I have felt in this case is as to the admissibility of the evidence of the three children. If I thought the conviction depended on their evidence, the proper course, in my opinion, would be to call for a report from the learned Sessions Judge as to the precise steps he took before allowing these children to give evidence: Cf. Queen-Empress v. Shava (2), and as to what precisely he means by "affirmed not sworn because of age" and "on affirmation to speak the truth, not on oath" with reference to their evidence. It may be too that in that event I should, speaking for myself, have thought the point to be one fit for a Full Bench having regard, amongst other things, to the conflicting decisions in the various Indian Courts. But it is only fair to the learned Judge to add that the point in question was never taken before him, and that before us Counsel for the prisoner admitted in his reply that having regard to Emperor v. Kusha Yamaji Sutar (3) he could not rely on the point.

In my opinion, however, the conviction ought to stand even if one eliminates, as I do, the evidence of the three children. I believe the evidence of the alleged eye-witness Daji, and it is in keeping with the surrounding circumstances in evidence. The prisoner's statements I regard as a tissue of lies; and it is noteworthy that he called no evidence—not even his brother—in support of his statement that he was ploughing with his brother one and-half miles off at the time the boy was drowned. His statement must, therefore, be disregarded. This still leaves the prosecution with the obligation to succeed on the strength of its own evidence and not on the weakness or want of evidence for the defence. In my opinion the prosecution has discharged that obligation.

I would accordingly confirm the conviction. As regards the sentence I concur with my learned brother in thinking that having regard to the special circumstances of the case and the course which has been adopted in several of the authorities cited to us, it would be proper to reduce the sentence of death to that of transportation for life.

Sentence commuted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 437—Charge framed in warrant case—Plea of not guilty—Discharge of accused, effect of—Further enquiry, order for, legality of.

In a warrant case after a charge had been framed against the accused he was called upon to plead, and he pleaded not guilty. The Magistrate thereupon wrote a judgment and 'discharged' the accused. This order was set aside by the District Magistrate, who ordered further enquiry under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, that the only order which the Magistrate could have passed, after a charge had been framed against the accused and he had pleaded to the charge, was either an order of acquittal or an order of conviction and as he was not convicted he must be deemed to have been acquitted and not 'discharged' and that being so the District Magistrate was not competent under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code to order further enquiry and the order made by him, therefore, for such enquiry was illegal. Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Chhote Lal, the applicant, was charged with having rescued his father, who had been arrested under the orders of the Revenue Court in execution of a decree passed by that Court. The Magistrate who tried him recorded the evidence for the prosecution, framed a charge against him and called upon him to plead. The record shows that the accused pleaded not guilty but refused to call witnesses. A date was fixed for the hearing of the case after the charge had been framed and the plea of not guilty had been entered; and on that date, for reasons stated in the judgment, the Magistrate trying the case passed an order of "discharge." This order was set aside by the District Magistrate and a further enquiry was ordered. The present application has been filed against the order of the District Magistrate directing a further enquiry by another Magistrate.

It is contended that the order of the Magistrate who tried the case, though it is in terms an order of discharge, is in substance and reality an order of acquittal, and that, therefore, the District Magistrate was not competent under section 437 to order further enquiry. Under the section last mentioned the Magistrate of the district is authorised to order further enquiry in a case of dismissal of a complaint under section 203 or section 204 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or in a case in which the accused has been discharged. The real question, therefore, in this case is whether the order of the trial Magistrate passed on the 18th of June 1917 was an order of "acquittal," because if it was an order of "acquittal," further enquiry could not be ordered by the District Magistrate. Section 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that if upon taking all the evidence and making such examination of the accused as the Magistrate thinks necessary, he finds that no case against the accused has been made out, which if un rebutted would warrant a conviction, the Magistrate shall discharge him. It is thus clear that an order of discharge should be made before a charge has been framed. Section 254 provides for the framing of a charge if the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence with which he is charged. The present case was a 'warrant case' and, therefore, section 253 and the following sections applied to the case. Under section 255, the Court is required to ask the accused after a charge has been framed and read out and explained to him, whether he is guilty or has any defence to make. In the present case it appears from the record that after the charge had been framed, the accused was called upon to plead and he pleaded not guilty. The only order which the Magistrate could have passed after the accused had pleaded to the charge was either an order of acquittal or an order of conviction. In the present case the accused was not convicted. Therefore, he must be deemed to have been acquitted under section 258. It is true that the Magistrate in his judgment used the word "discharged," but that was a misuse of the word. The only order which he could have passed, if he did not convict, was an order of acquittal, and, therefore, the order passed on the 18th of June 1917 must be deemed to be an order of acquittal. This being so, the District Magistrate was not competent under section 437 to order further enquiry and the order made by him for such enquiry is illegal. I accordingly set aside the order of the District Magistrate, dated the 14th of August 1917.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 517, 520—Acquittal by First Class Magistrate—Order for disposal of property—Sessions Judge, whether can interfere with order—Court of Appeal.

A Court of Appeal, within the meaning of section 520 of the Criminal Procedure Code, is the Court to which an appeal lies in the particular case, and not the Court to which appeals would ordinarily lie from the Court deciding that particular case. [p. 501, col. 2.]

A First Class Magistrate, who tried the accused on a charge of theft of certain cattle, acquitted them and directed the cattle to be given to one of the accused. The complainant applied to the Sessions Judge, who directed that the cattle be returned to the complainant.

Held, that the accused having been acquitted the Sessions Judge was neither the Court of Appeal nor the Court of Revision with respect to the case and had, therefore, no power to make an order under section 520 of the Criminal Procedure Code regarding the disposal of the cattle. [p. 501, col. 2; p. 502, col. 1.]

Criminal application for revision against an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Ahmedabad, modifying the order passed by the First Class Magistrate at Dhandhuka.

Mr. Setalvad (with him Mr. G. N. Thakor), for the Applicant.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaonkar, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case the accused were charged with the theft of certain cattle. The First Class Magistrate, who tried the accused, acquitted them and directed the cattle to be given to the accused No. 1

Khima Rukhad. The complainant applied to the Sessions Court at Ahmedabad as regards the order relating to the disposal of the property. The learned Sessions Judge modified the order of the trial Court and directed that the cattle be returned to the complainant. The present application is made to this Court to revise the order of the Sessions Judge.

It is contended on behalf of the applicant that the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction in this case under section 520, Criminal Procedure Code, to modify the order of the trial Court. The argument is that the Court of Session is neither a Court of Appeal nor a Court of Revision in this case within the meaning of section 520, Criminal Procedure Code. In my opinion it is not a Court of Appeal, as an appeal from the order of acquittal would lie to this Court and not to the Court of Session. The Court of Appeal within the meaning of the section is the Court to which an appeal lies in the particular case, and not the Court to which the appeals would ordinarily lie from the Court deciding that particular case. This view is supported by the observations of Heaton, J., in In re Laxman Rangu (1), though the point that we have to consider did not arise in that case. The decision in Queen-Empress v. Ahmed (2), to which our attention has been drawn by Mr. Mulgaonkar, is opposed to this view. After giving my best consideration to the judgment, with all respect to the learned Judge, I am unable to agree with the interpretation of the section accepted by him. It is not essential that the appeal allowed should be preferred to the Court of Appeal; but the Court indicated is one to which the appeal lies in that case. The fact that the appeal against an acquittal can be preferred at the instance of the local Government and by nobody else does not make any difference on this point.

I am unable to see how in such a case the Court of Session can be treated as a Court of Revision within the meaning of section 520. Assuming, without admitting, that the complainant having no right of appeal, there was no Court of Appeal so far as he was concerned within the meaning of the section, I think that the Court of Revision in such a case would be the High Court and not the Court of Session for the purpose of section 520, Criminal Procedure Code.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the Court of Session had no power to make the order complained of.

On the merits also, it seems to me that having regard to all the circumstances, the proper order would be to restore the cattle to the person in whose custody they were at the date of their seizure.

It is hardly necessary to add that this order will be without prejudice to the civil rights of the parties.

I would, therefore, set aside the order made by the Sessions Judge and restore that made by the trial Magistrate with reference to the cattle.

MARTEN, J.—I agree. In my judgment the decision of the learned Sessions Judge cannot be upheld either on the question of jurisdiction or on the merits.

As regards Queen Empress v. Ahmed (2) the decision appears to have been that of a single Judge in a case where the parties were unrepresented, and where consequently the Court did not have the benefit of any argument from Counsel. Be that as it may, I respectfully prefer the view taken by my brother Shah in the judgment he has just delivered to that expressed by Mr. Justice Brandt in Queen-Empress v. Ahmed (2). The disputed agreement Exhibit 18/1 is a curious one, for it purports to treat the cattle in question as a security for the return of the wife of accused No. 1 or alternatively as damages for her non-return. If this agreement be established, the rights of the parties under it can best be determined in a Civil Court. The complainant can, therefore, now do what he could have done in the first instance, viz., have his rights ascertained in a Civil Court instead of attempting to steal a march upon his opponents by instituting criminal proceedings against them for theft of the cattle, the subject of the agreement Exhibit 18/1, charges which the trial Magistrate has held to be unfounded.

I accordingly agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Order set aside.

MAHMUD ALI—COMPLAINANT.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), s. 1—Dealer in stones, whether artificer, workman or labourer.

Accused who dealt in stones took an advance from the complainant under an agreement to supply the latter with stones from time to time according to the terms of an agreement entered into between the parties. Accused failed to supply the stones and complainant made an application under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act:

Held, that the contract was not a contract by an artificer, workman or labourer nor was the money advanced on account of work to be performed by an artificer, workman or labourer and that, therefore, the provisions of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act had no application to the case. [p. 501, col. 2; p. 503, col. 1.]

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Banda.

JUDGMENT.—Bhagwan Din is alleged to have taken an advance of Rs. 20 from Mahmud Ali, upon an agreement to supply him with certain stones from time to time according to the terms of a contract entered into by him with Mahmud Ali. He having failed to supply the stones, an application was made to a Magistrate under Act XIII of 1859 and the Magistrate made an order against Bhagwan Din. The learned District Magistrate is of opinion that the Act did not apply to a case like the present and has accordingly referred it to this Court with the recommendation that the order of the Magistrate be set aside. I agree with the view taken by the learned District Magistrate. The Act, as the preamble shows, is an Act for the granting of relief for fraudulent breach of contract on the part of artificers, workmen and labourers who have received money in advance on account of work which they have contracted to perform. Section 1 of the Act clearly shows that it applies to cases where an artificer, workman or labourer has received money from a master or employer and has wilfully and without lawful or reasonable excuse neglected or refused to perform or get performed any work which he has contracted to perform or get performed. In the present case the contract was not a contract by an artificer, workman or labourer. The money was not advanced on account of work to be performed by an artificer, workman or labourer, and the person by whom the money was advanced was not his master or employer. The present case was that of an ordinary contract by a person who dealt in stones to supply certain stones to another person. The Act has, therefore, no application in a case of this kind and the learned Magistrate who tried the case was, in my opinion, wrong in holding the Act to be applicable. I accept the recommendation of the learned District Magistrate and set aside the order of the Magistrate of the First Class, dated 26th November 1917. Any sum which may have been paid in pursuance of the said order should be refunded.

Bombay District Municipalities Act (III Bom. of 1901), ss. 113, 122—Bye-laws of Surat City Municipality, Ch. XIV, Bye-law 10 (3), whether ultra vires—Municipality, power of, to charge fees for shop-boards projecting over public street.

Under section 113 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act it is open to a Municipality to prescribe the extent to which and the conditions under which shop-boards may be allowed to project over public streets. Bye-law 10, sub-clause (3), of Chapter XIV of the Bye-laws framed by the Surat City Municipality, therefore, which provides that projections over public streets may be permitted on payment of a prescribed fee, is not ultra vires of the Municipality. [p. 503, col. 2; p. 504, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Surat, in Criminal Revisional Application No. 33 of 1917, confirming the conviction and sentence passed by the Honorary First Class Magistrate at Surat.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The point raised in support of this application is that the putting up of the shop-board by the applicant was duly authorised under sub-section 1 of section 113 and was, therefore, exempt from punishment either under section 122 or under section 113 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act of 1901. It is argued that it was duly authorised under section 113 as it was in accordance with bye-law 8 of Chapter XIV of the Bye-laws of the Surat City Municipality.

The board put up is in accordance with bye-law 8. But the applicant has clearly contravened bye-law 10, sub-clause 3, which requires that the owner shall duly pay in advance the fees prescribed by rules under section 46 (i). It is an admitted fact that the prescribed fee was not paid. It is urged, however, that this bye-law 10 is not applicable to such a projection, and even if applicable, it is ultra vires of the Municipality to levy any fees. The bye-law provides that projections may be permitted only on the conditions which are laid down in the three sub-clauses, and under section 113 it is open to the Municipality to prescribe the extent to which, and the conditions under which, shop-boards may be allowed to project over public streets. The bye-law, therefore, in my opinion, is clearly applicable to the projection such as we have in this case.

I do not see how it is ultra vires in view of the power which the Municipality has under the section to prescribe the extent to which and the conditions under which such projection may be allowed. I do not see any reason to think that the power to prescribe the conditions does not include the power to levy fees before the projections are permitted. Section 70 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act was referred to as showing that the power to charge fees was limited in the manner stated in that section. But it seems to me that under the terms of the section when permission is given for putting up any projection, the Municipality may charge a fee for such permission. There is nothing in the words of the section to justify the applicant's contention that the word "permission" there means "written permission" as contemplated by the first part of section 113, sub-section 1, or that it means permission given in each specific case and not a general permission subject to certain conditions. I feel clear that the fee which is prescribed by bye-law 10 is within the powers conferred on the Municipality by the Bombay District Municipalities Act, which provides that when permission is given for putting up any projection, the Municipality may charge a fee for such permission. Here the permission granted is general subject to the payment of the prescribed fee. I am, therefore, of opinion that the contention that this part of the bye-law is ultra vires must be disallowed. No other point has been urged on behalf of the applicant. I would, therefore, discharge the Rule.

MARTEN, J.—We have here the advantage of a clear judgment from the learned Sessions Judge, Mr. Murphy, with which I entirely agree. In the first place it is clear, I think, that the Municipality have purported to prescribe the payment of certain fees as a condition under which the projecting shop-boards are to be allowed under Chapter XIV, bye-law 8. Those conditions are specified in bye-law 10, which begins: "Projections may be permitted only on the following conditions", one of which viz., condition (iii) is that the owner shall duly pay in advance certain fees prescribed by rules under section 46 (i). Then if one turns to the rules, which are in another lengthy volume, one finds in rule 236 that the annual fees for shop-boards shall be as shown in Schedule F; and at last in Schedule F one discovers that these fees are 8, 6 or 4 annas per running foot according as the public street in question is class 1, 2 or 3.

It was contended before us that the "projections" referred to in bye-law 10 did not include the projecting shop-boards mentioned in bye-law 8. This contention appears to me untenable. Bye-law 10 refers to projections generally, and sub-section 3 incorporates by reference the above rules of the Surat Municipality, and it is clear from these rules and in particular from rule 236 already mentioned that the Municipality require fees for shop-boards. Therefore, by erecting his shop-board without first paying those fees I think the applicant broke the condition which the Municipality purported to impose on such erection.

The next point taken by the applicant is that if bye-law 10 does cover projecting shop-boards, it is ultra vires as the Municipality had no power to prescribe the payment of fees as a condition under section 113 of the Act. But when one turns to section 113, one finds that the Municipality may prescribe the extent to which and the conditions under which shop-boards may be allowed to project.

The condition which they have imposed inter alia is that certain fees should be paid in advance. In my opinion they are entitled to impose a monetary condition, and this view is borne out by section 70 of the Act. I accordingly think that the Rule should be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Dr. S. Swaminadhan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. R. Ramunatha Shenai, for the Government.

ORDER.—The convictions in these cases are under section 26 of the Madras Forest Act and the rules and regulations framed thereunder. The land with reference to which this section has been applied admittedly belonged to the Devastanam and is Inam land. The Zemindar of Kadavur is the manager of the Devastanam. His estate and also the management of the Devastanam have been taken charge of by the Court of Wards under the Madras Court of Wards Act. Then an application was made for the use of the pasturage and of the natural produce of this land being regulated under Chapter III of the Forest Act. This chapter deals with the protection of land at the disposal of Government not included in reserved forests and says: "subject to all rights now legally vested in individuals and communities the Governor in Council may, for any district or portion of a district, make rules to regulate the use of the pasturage or of the natural produce of land at the disposal of Government and not included in a reserved forest. Such rules may, with respect to such land, regulate or prohibit the cutting of grass and pasturing of cattle, and regulate the payments to be made for such cutting or pasturage" (clause c).

It is first of all argued that the land, being in the Devastanam and not part of the Zemindari of Kadavur, was not properly included within the scope of section 26 of the Madras Forest Act. But it is found by the Appellate Magistrate, and it is not disputed here, that the land is within the limits of the Kadavur estate, though it is part of the Devastanam Inam. The notifications relate to the entire estate and the Court of Wards took up management of the land in question under those notifications. We do not think, therefore, that this objection has any force.

The second point, which is the more substantial, raises the question whether section 26 contemplates that the Government can, under that section, prohibit the use of land which is dealt with under Chapter III of the Forest Act for pasturage or prevent persons claiming right to cut trees for fuel and doing similar acts from doing so. The section begins by saying that the prohibition or the regulation shall be subject to all rights now legally vested in individuals and communities. In this case it is alleged that the petitioners, who are the villagers living in the vicinity, have a right to graze their cattle and goats on the land in question and also to cut trees for the purpose of fuel and to take the produce of the trees in the forest. If the claim is well founded, it could not be said that under section 26 the Legislature empowered the Government to prohibit these persons from exercising the rights already vested in them. If that were its intention, what the Legislature would have said was that notwithstanding any rights which any person may claim as to pasturage or produce of the land, the Government can prevent and prohibit the use of the land for such purposes. The language of the Legislature seems to us clearly to mean just the reverse. They did not intend to empower the Government to regulate the use of the land which is dealt with under this chapter to the detriment of any rights existing in individuals and communities. This becomes still clearer when we refer to sections 10 and 11 of the Act. Section 10 lays down the procedure with reference to rights claimed in land other than rights of way, pasturage, water course or forest produce. The procedure with regard to dealing with those rights is laid down in section 11. These sections deal with the procedure for reserved forest. Chapter III deals with land not included in reserved forest, and it seems to us that the wording of the section is clear enough to show that as in the case of reserved forest so also with respects to lands not included in reserved forest, the Legislature did not mean to interfere with the existing rights of the people. There is a decision of this Court to the same effect recorded in Rangadu, In re (1).

(1) 42 Ind. Cas. 724; (1917) M. W. N. 682; 22 M. L. T. 211; 6 L. W. 428; 18 Cr. L. J. 996.

HARIBHAI DADA v. EMPEROR.

The petitioners' claims were put forward before the 2nd class Magistrate who originally tried these cases, but he apparently ignored the question altogether. Then on appeal the Sub-Divisional Magistrate thought that the question had been finally disposed of by the decision of the Collector in another proceeding. The present petitioners were not parties to that proceeding and the Appellate Magistrate in these circumstances ought to have dealt with the question as to the right claimed by the petitioners, before coming to a conclusion on the question whether the acts imputed to them made them liable to the penalties prescribed by the Act. On these grounds, therefore, we set aside the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in appeals and remand the appeals to him for disposal according to law. If the parties desire to adduce fresh evidence on this question, they will be at liberty to do so before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

Order set aside; Case remanded.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 90, 360, 363—Kidnapping from British India—Consent of person kidnapped—Offence.

A person who kidnaps a girl over twelve years of age from British India with her consent is not guilty of an offence under section 360 of the Penal Code. [p. 503, col. 2; p. 507, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, Ahmedabad.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The appellant, accused No. 3, along with the other accused, was charged in the lower Court with having conspired and kidnapped the girl Pashi, a minor under sixteen years of age, from the guardianship of her father into the Baroda territory in order that she might be seduced to illicit intercourse, under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code. With the other charge we are no longer concerned. All the accused except the appellant were acquitted, and it was definitely found by the trial Judge that Hari had nothing to do with the kidnapping, that is kidnapping from lawful guardianship. It is clear from the evidence relating to the movements of this girl that she first left her father's house on the 25th of January and that she was taken to different places at Napa and Vadtal. She was taken to Asodar by Shankar to Hari's house on the 6th February. Shankar, Haribhai and the girl left Asodar for Baroda and they were arrested in the Baroda territory on the 7th of February. It is not suggested that Hari had anything to do with, and had any knowledge of the movements of, the girl before she was brought to him on the 6th February.

The learned Sessions Judge has convicted the present appellant on the charge of kidnapping Pashi from British India. This girl is found to have been nearly fifteen years old at the date of the offence charged. In order to establish the charge of kidnapping from British India, it is essential for the prosecution to prove that she was conveyed by the appellant beyond the limits of British India without her consent. Having regard to the provisions of section 90 of the Indian Penal Code and to the fact that Pashi was more than twelve years old at the time, she would be competent to give her consent. It is clear from the judgment of the lower Court that under the circumstances it cannot be said that she was conveyed without her consent. All along in her movements from place to place she seems to have been a consenting party and there is absolutely nothing to show that when the party left Asodar, the girl was in the slightest degree unwilling to go to Baroda, i. e., out of British India. The girl is described by the Judge as "obviously a loose girl, discontented with and not inclined to live with her husband and anxious to find a well-to-do husband of a superior class." Further on, the learned Judge observes that "Pashi may have walked straight over to the house of Shankar or Soma and asked them to fix matters up for her." That is, even as regards her having been taken out of the custody of her father the Judge is not satisfied that the girl was not a consenting party. The consent of Pashi as regards kidnapping from lawful guardianship would not be material, but on the question of kidnapping from British India, her consent would be very material. I am quite satisfied that on the findings of the learned Sessions Judge the charge of kidnapping from British India cannot be sustained.

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the accused to be acquitted and discharged.

MARTEN, J.—As we are differing from the learned Sessions Judge, I should like to add this. He says at page 59 as follows:—"The case, therefore, splits up into separate parts. First, the kidnapping from lawful guardianship, and secondly, the kidnapping from British India, and that being so, there really should have been separate trials of the various offenders as they were connected with distinct offences." Stopping there, I think it is a great pity that the learned Sessions Judge did not take that course, for the conviction of the present accused may well be due to a confusion as to the effect of the Indian Penal Code, arising from the single trial of the various offenders for separate offences. Then at page 62 he goes on: "The next question is as to Haribhai (accused No. 3). There is no question that he had nothing to do with the kidnapping." And then finally the learned Judge at page 63 says: "Disagreeing with the assessors I find Haribhai Dada guilty of the offence charged, viz., of kidnapping Pashi from British India."

Now the offence with which he was charged was what I may call a double-barrelled offence. It was that of kidnapping this girl "from the guardianship of her father into Baroda territory." That included both kinds of kidnapping defined in section 359, viz., kidnapping from British India and kidnapping from lawful guardianship. In the view I take, I think the learned Judge only meant to convict this particular accused of the crime of kidnapping from British India, namely, under section 360, Indian Penal Code. That must be without the consent of the person alleged to be kidnapped. But if one looks at the earlier sections of the Indian Penal Code, namely, section 90 it appears that the consent of a child is only invalidated if the child be under twelve years of age. In the present case the child is over twelve and it is not shown that she was taken out of British India without her consent. The evidence indeed is all the other way, viz., that she consented. The learned Sessions Judge has not dealt with this point in his judgment and I am satisfied that it is fatal to the conviction.

If on the other hand the learned Judge intended to rely on the other kind of kidnapping, viz., kidnapping from legal guardianship under section 361 there are other legal difficulties involved there, and I think that on the facts of the case and on his own finding, the conviction would be improper under that section too. But I am satisfied that he did not intend to convict under section 361.

Under these circumstances I agree with my learned brother that the appeal should be allowed and the conviction set aside.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—This is an application to set aside a sanction to prosecute petitioner-appellant for an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code; but the only point argued is the admissibility in evidence of petitioner's (appellant's) deposition. This deposition was properly recorded by the District Munsif, but was read over to the witness by a clerk in a room next to the Court room at a distance of 30 feet from the Munsif's seat. There were two clerks sitting between the place where the deposition was read and that where the Munsif sits. Under Order XVIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, a deposition shall be read over in the presence of the Judge and the witness, and the first question that arises is whether the deposition before us can be deemed to have been read over 'in the presence of the Judge.' From the evidence on record it does not appear whether the Munsif could actually see the witness and the clerk while the deposition was being read over; but I am satisfied that the provisions of the rule would be adequately complied with if the deposition were read over in a place within the sight of the presiding Judge and from which the witness could draw the attention of the Judge to any mistakes or omissions discovered by him. The reading over of the deposition is primarily intended for the purpose of securing a correct record, and in order to secure this, the witness is given an opportunity of drawing attention to mistakes. The presence of the Judge is required in order to ensure that such an opportunity is really afforded to the witness. Under the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the deposition had to be read over 'in the presence of the parties or their Pleaders' as well as of the Judge and the witness. According to Boddam, J., in Kamatchinathan Chetty v. Emperor (1), "the Vakils are required to be present, that they may call the attention of the witness to any statement appearing in the deposition which may or may not require correction." The omission of this safeguard in the new Code leads one to suppose that the Legislature was satisfied that the presence of the Judge was a sufficient safeguard to ensure the correct record of the deposition, for the witness is the best and really the only person who can say that what he had said has been correctly recorded. When, therefore, the deposition has been read over in such a place that the witness can invoke the aid of the Judge to enable him to make any corrections that may be necessary, I think that the requirements of Order XVIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, are satisfied. It is clear to my mind that the Judge is not required to do more than exercise a general supervision over the reading over of the deposition, for in many cases the deposition is interpreted to the witness in a language which the Judge does not understand. I am supported in this view by a judgment of this Court reported as Muthukumara Reddy, In re (2) to which my learned brother was a party.

Assuming, however, that it has not been proved that the deposition was read over in the manner and circumstances referred to above, we have to consider whether the deposition is or is not admissible in evidence. Such a deposition was held to be inadmissible in Kamatchinathan Chetty v. Emperor (1) and also in Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor

(1) 28 M. 308; 2 Cr. L. J. 756.

ABAS MIRZA V. EMPEROR.

(3), but a different view was taken in Bogra, In re (4)

The view taken in Kamatchinathan Chetty v. Emperor (1) by Boddam, J., was that the document, though purporting to be a deposition, had been read over and signed without the requirements of the law being complied with and was, therefore, not a deposition and should not have been admitted as such. In Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor (3) it was held that "the deposition under section 91 of the Evidence Act was the only evidence admissible in proof of those statements (i. e., the statements in the depositions), and under section 80 of the same Act it is admissible only if it was taken in accordance with law." With all deference I am unable to see any provision in section 80 which declares such a document to be inadmissible in evidence, for section 80 only refers to certain presumptions which a Court shall make when a document purporting to be a deposition taken in accordance with law is produced before it. If it is proved that such deposition is not in all particulars what it purports to be, the presumption would be rebutted; but I can see no authority in section 80 for holding that such a document would be wholly inadmissible in evidence. Under section 91 of the Evidence Act, "in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given of such matter except the document itself." In this case the statement of the witness has been reduced to the form of a document as required by law, and the document itself has been produced. There appears to be nothing in section 91 which prohibits the admission of such a document in evidence merely because some of the formalities prescribed by law have been omitted in recording it. Undoubtedly any irregularities in making the record may be considered in determining the value of the document as evidence; but that is not sufficient ground for shutting it out altogether. This was the view taken by Miller, J., in Bogra, In re (4). In Rakkhal Ohandra Laha

v. Emperor (5) a deposition which was read out in the presence of the Pleader for only one out of 27 accused persons was held to be admissible in evidence in a prosecution for perjury against the deponent, the ground being that it would undoubtedly have been admissible as against the one accused, in whose Pleader's presence it was read over. As, however, it was a deposition in a case against 27 persons, it ought to have been read over in the presence of all under section 360, Criminal Procedure Code, and the omission to do so would apparently invalidate the deposition according to the view in Kamatchinathan Chetty v. Emperor (1) and in Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor (3). I think, therefore, that the case in Rakkhal Ohandra Laha v. Emperor (5) goes to support the view taken by Miller, J., in Bogra, In re (4), a view with which I respectfully agree. In another case, Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (6), the learned Judges, while referring to certain cases [presumably Kamatchinathan Chetty v. Emperor (1) and Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor (3)] were careful not to express either assent or dissent and consequently the case is of little value here. I would, therefore, hold that the petitioner's (appellant's) deposition in this case is admissible in evidence and dismiss the appeal.

It is a rash or negligent act for a person to drive a motor car without wearing spectacles if his eyesight is really defective. But an omission to wear spectacles at the time of driving the car in every case where a driver may properly use spectacles would not necessarily render the driver liable under section 336 of the Penal Code. It must depend upon the nature of the defect in the eyesight and the necessity for using spectacles in each case. [p. 510, col. 2; p. 511, col. 1.]

A licensed driver, who was required by his license to wear spectacles when driving a car, was found driving without spectacles. It was found that the defect in his eyesight was not very great, and that it would not appreciably interfere with his efficiency as a driver even though he drove without spectacles.

Criminal application for revision from convictions and sentence passed by the Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. P. N. Godinho, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case the accused was originally charged under section 279 of the Indian Penal Code with driving a motor car on a public way in a manner so rash or negligent as to endanger human life; but the learned Magistrate finds that the evidence shows that the accused was not to blame for the collision which in fact occurred and that the charge under section 279 cannot be sustained. He, however, proceeded against the accused with the charge of doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others under section 336, Indian Penal Code.

The act complained of here is that the accused drove his car without wearing his spectacles which he was required to wear by the license under which he drove the car. The learned Magistrate has come to the conclusion that under the circumstances his omission to wear the spectacles at the time of driving the car was sufficient to endanger human life. From the finding recorded by the trial Magistrate and from the course which the proceedings took before him, it seems to me that to a certain extent he has been unconsciously influenced in his conclusion by the fact that there was a serious accident. But for the purposes of this case, the fact of there having been an accident, for which on the evidence the accused is found not to be responsible, must be left out of consideration. It would clearly be a rash or negligent act for a person to drive a motorcar without wearing spectacles if his eyesight was really defective. But an omission to wear the spectacles at the time of driving the car in every case, where a driver may properly use spectacles, would not necessarily render the driver liable under section 336. It must depend upon the nature of the defect in the eyesight, and the necessity for using spectacles in each case.

In the present case there is the evidence of an oculist which has not been disbelieved by the trial Magistrate. That evidence shows that the defect in the eyesight of the accused is not very much and that it would not appreciably interfere with his efficiency as a driver, even though he drove without spectacles. It is true that the accused was required by his license to use eye-glasses at the time of driving the car. But the circumstance must be considered along with, and in the light of, the medical evidence. Having regard to the evidence, it seems to me that on the facts of this case it is not made out that the present accused, if he drove his car without wearing spectacles, would be acting so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or the personal safety of others.

On these grounds I am of opinion that the accused is not guilty under section 336 of the Indian Penal Code. In the present case we are not concerned with the effect of the omission on the part of the driver to comply with the condition of his license and I express no opinion as to what effect such omission might or ought to have on the license.

I would set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

MARTEN, J.—As we are differing from the learned Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate, I should like to add this. The want of spectacles had nothing whatever to do with the accident. The Magistrate finds that the accused was not responsible for the accident. Secondly, no question about the license arises here. Whether that should be or should not be renewed is a matter for other people to decide. Nor must it be thought that our decision amounts to this that short sighted people can drive their cars in Bombay without their spectacles. Speaking for myself my opinion is indeed entirely the other way.

Now in the present case we have got to see what is the evidence as to this man's eye sight. The finding of the learned Judge is that an oculist (who was called as a witness by the accused) says that the defect is not very much and that it would not appreciably interfere with his efficiency as driver, even though he drove without spectacles, but the oculist admits that it would make some slight difference if he drove without spectacles. That evidence, in my opinion, is not sufficient to make the conduct of the accused amount to a criminal offence under section 336 of the Indian Penal Code.

Under these circumstances I agree in thinking that the conviction should be set aside and the fine, if paid, refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 438—Acquittal—Revision by complainant—Reference by Sessions Judge for re-trial to High Court—Delay, effect of.

Eleven persons were tried by a Magistrate of the First Class for offences under section 147 read with section 347 of the Penal Code and were acquitted on the 14th of December 1916. No appeal was preferred by the Government, but the complainant filed a revision in the Court of the Sessions Judge who, observing that the Magistrate had not said in what respect he considered the prosecution story to be exaggerated, held that the case was one which should be re-tried and by his order of reference to the High Court, dated 4th January 1918, recommended that the case should be re-tried:

having regard to the long lapse of time between the order of acquittal and the order of reference.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur.

FACTS.—Eleven persons were charged with and tried of offences under sections 147 and 347 of the Penal Code by a Magistrate, who came to the conclusion that the case against the accused was very doubtful one and that the prosecution story was exaggerated. He accordingly acquitted the accused on 14th December 1916. The Local Government did not appeal against the acquittal, but the complainant filed a revision before the Sessions Judge. The latter, observing that the Magistrate had failed to point out on what ground and in what respect he considered the prosecution evidence to be exaggerated, referred the case to the High Court by his order, dated 4th January 1918, recommending that a re-trial should be ordered.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that eleven persons were tried and acquitted for offences under section 147 read with section 347 of the Indian Penal Code. The order of acquittal is dated as far back as the 4th of December 1916. Government did not appeal against the order of acquittal and I think having regard to the long lapse of time that it would be inadvisable to open up the matter now. I accordingly direct that the record be re-tried.

Record returned.

107—Bonds for appearance before Police—Forfeiture—Applicability of s. 514 of Code.

Bonds taken under sections 106 and 107 of the City of Bombay Police Act for appearance before the Police are not bonds taken under the Code of Criminal Procedure or for appearance before a Court and such bonds cannot, therefore, be dealt with under section 514 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. [p. 512, col. 2.]

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. P. N. Godinho, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The order, the legality of which we have to consider, relates to two bonds taken under the City of Bombay Police Act of 1902. These bonds were taken under sections 106 and 107 of the Act, whereby one Clegg undertook to appear at a certain Police station on a certain day and on subsequent days as directed, and the applicant before us stood surety for him in respect of both the bonds. The learned Presidency Magistrate has found that Clegg absconded from Bombay and that the bonds were broken. On that footing he has made an order directing a partial forfeiture of both these bonds.

The question of law which arises on this application is whether the Court of the Presidency Magistrate had any jurisdiction to direct these bonds to be forfeited under section 514, Criminal Procedure Code. It is common ground that that is the only section, under which, if at all, the Magistrate would have jurisdiction. It is also common ground that these bonds are not taken under the Code of Criminal Procedure and that they are not "bonds for appearance before a Court." They are bonds taken under the City of Bombay Police Act for appearance before the Police. The question is whether section 514 of the Code applies to such bonds.

The learned Magistrate has come to the conclusion that these bonds can be dealt with by him under section 514. After a careful consideration of the arguments addressed to us, I am of opinion that such bonds cannot be dealt with under section 514. "Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court by which a bond under this Code has been taken, or of the Court of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First Class, or when the bond is for appearance before a Court, to the satisfaction of such Court, that such bond has been forfeited," the Court can deal with the matter as provided in the section. It is urged on behalf of the Crown that the words "such bond" must be liberally construed so as not to defeat the object of section 514, and that if so construed they would include not only a bond under the Code of Criminal Procedure or the bond for appearance before a Court but also such bonds as we have in the present case. I am in full sympathy with the arguments that the words should be construed as far as possible so as not to defeat the obvious purpose of section 514; but I am unable to interpret these words as including the bonds in question. They are admittedly not bonds under the Code and they are not bonds for appearance before a Court. I do not see how by any straining of the words "such bond" it could be said that the bonds, though not falling under either of the two categories, can still be dealt with under section 514.

It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to express any opinion as to whether the bond "for appearance before a Court" can include within its meaning a bond not taken under the Code. I have assumed for the purpose of this case that a bond though not under the Code, if it be for appearance before a Court, may be within the meaning of the expression used in the second paragraph of sub-section 1 of section 514. Even on that footing I do not see how a bond not taken under the Code and not for appearance before a Court can be treated as being within the scope of the section. It may be, as the learned Magistrate points out, that the intention of the Legislature was to include even such bonds within the scope of section 514; but we are concerned with the meaning of the words used. I am satisfied that the words are not susceptible of the construction put thereon by the Magistrate. If necessary, the section can be amended by the Legislature so as to give power to the Presidency Magistrates to deal with such bonds as we have in the present case.

BHAGWANA v. EMPEROR.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct any forfeiture of these bonds and that his order must be set aside as having been made without jurisdiction. Though this application is made by the surety only, having regard to our conclusion we must exercise our powers under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, and set aside the order not only as regards the present applicant but also as regards Clegg.

I may add that our order will be without prejudice to the rights and remedies, if any, of the Crown in respect of these bonds. The only point that is decided is that the remedy sought in the present proceedings under section 514 is not open to the Crown.

Before leaving this case, I desire to express my disapproval of the reference made to the opinions of the Public Prosecutor and the Advocate-General by the learned Magistrate in his judgment. In my opinion no reference to these opinions should have been allowed by him.

The amount, if paid, must be refunded.

MARTEN, J.—I agree. As regards the intention of the Legislature I think, speaking for myself, that we can only ascertain that intention from the Code itself. With every desire to give a wide construction to the Code, I am quite satisfied that the bonds in question do not fall within section 514. As regards the argument that the words "the bond for appearance before a Court" include a bond taken under the City of Bombay Police Act for appearance before a Court, I agree with what my learned brother has said, viz., that it is unnecessary for us to decide that point, for the bonds in question were not for appearance before a Court. I also agree that no reference should have been made in the learned Magistrate's judgment to certain opinions taken on behalf of the prosecution. The question of jurisdiction was for the Magistrate to decide, and Counsel's opinion, whether correct or not, was irrelevant.

Mr. S. N. Sinha, for the Accused.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused has been convicted under section 457 of the Indian Penal Code read with section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act. The accused beyond all question belongs to a criminal tribe. He has been twice previously convicted of dacoity. From the evidence on the record there can be no doubt that the accused in the present case entered a dwelling-house and proceeded to steal clothes and utensils belonging to certain students. He removed some of the articles preparatory to taking them away, but before he actually got away the alarm was given and he was caught. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that under section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act he had no option except to sentence the accused to transportation for life. Mr. Sinha on behalf of the accused argues that on the facts proved the accused was not guilty of an offence punishable under section 457. He contends that on the assumption that the accused is guilty at all, he is only guilty under section 380. Section 380 is not one of the sections referred to in section 23 of the schedule attached to the Criminal Tribes Act. Section 457 provides that whoever commits "lurking house-trespass by night" or "house-breaking by night," has committed an offence under that section.

Lurking house-trespass is committed when a person enters premises of the nature described in section 442 having taken precautions to conceal such house-trespass in the manner mentioned in section 443. There does not appear to be any evidence that the accused in the present case took any such precautions. The evidence is that he was found by one of the students who was awakened by the noise in removing the articles. House-breaking is defined by section 445. There does not appear to be any evidence that the accused effected his entrance into the house in any of the six ways mentioned in the section. On the other hand it is quite consistent with the evidence that he found the door open, walked into the house, went upstairs to where the students were sleeping, and commenced to steal. We think under these circumstances the accused could not be properly convicted under section 457, and that his conviction ought to have been under section 380 and therefore the Sessions Judge was not bound to sentence the accused to transportation for life.

The accused is evidently a dangerous man. We have already mentioned that he has been twice previously convicted for dacoity. We alter the conviction from a conviction under section 457 read with section 23 of the Criminal Tribes Act to conviction under section 380 read with section 75 and we reduce the sentence from a sentence of transportation for life to a sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment with effect from the date of his original conviction.

Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence under section 25 (i) of the Forest Act. [p. 515, col. 1.]

Criminal application for revision from conviction and sentence passed by the Third Class Magistrate, Bhiwandi.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The accused in this case has been convicted under section 25, clause (i), of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878). He is found to have successfully tracked and shot a tiger without a license in a reserved forest to which the rules made by the Local Government under section 25 (i) and section 31, clause (j), have been duly applied.

The case for the accused was that some of his cattle were killed by a tiger and that with a view to prevent further injury to his property he wanted to trace the tiger in the forest. Both the lower Courts have proceeded on the assumption that the accused's cattle were killed by a tiger; and from the arguments before us, it is clear that the accused's cattle were killed by a tiger and that his object in going to the forest and shooting the tiger was to prevent further injury to his property.

In dealing with the question of self-defence, the learned Magistrate in appeal seems to me to have taken a somewhat narrow view of its scope. It may be, as the learned Magistrate points out, that the accused went in search of the tiger and shot the animal, not to avert the attack by the animal on him but probably because he wanted to kill the animal. The point as to whether the accused shot the tiger to avert the attack by the animal on him or whether he found it, does not seem to me to be of any importance for the purpose of this case. Broadly speaking it is a case in which the accused, with a view to protect his property, went to the forest, tracked and shot the tiger. He did this, however, without a license as required by the rules to which I have referred, and the whole point in the case is whether the prohibition under rule 3 (a) against hunting and shooting without a license is absolute. After a careful consideration of the rules, it seems to me that under rule 3 (a) hunting and shooting are prohibited except under a license to be obtained from the conservator of forests. Such a license was not obtained.

Whether it is necessary, for the purpose of strict conservation or for the preservation of animals which are becoming rare or for both these purposes, to prohibit hunting and shooting in a reserved forest except under a license, so as to prevent a person from hunting and shooting without a license a tiger or any other wild animal even for the protection of his property or person, is a question which the Local Government have to consider and decide. It is really a question of policy under the Indian Forest Act upon which I express no opinion.

I feel clear, however, that without a license, even under the circumstances under which the accused is found to have acted, he cannot hunt or shoot in a reserved forest to which these rules have been made applicable. I am, therefore, of opinion that the conviction under section 25 (i) must be affirmed.

Having regard to the fact that the accused acted in a manner in which a person, whose cattle were killed by a tiger, would naturally act, I think that a nominal sentence would be sufficient in this case. Accordingly I reduce the fine to one rupee and direct the excess, if paid, to be refunded.

I see no reason to disturb the order relating to the skin.

MARTEN, J.—I think the accused here has committed a technical offence for which a nominal penalty of fine is adequate. He committed an offence, namely, that of hunting and shooting in a reserved forest, because he deliberately went into this forest in search of this tiger which he eventually shot. Whether at or about the actual moment of shooting, the tiger attacked him or he attacked the tiger seems to me irrelevant. Personally I rather read the Magistrate's observations as to self-defence to refer to a hypothetical case, where a man is walking in a reserved forest quite innocently though possibly armed with a gun and is then suddenly attacked by a wild animal which he has no license to shoot. Even in such a case the Magistrate raises the doubt whether technically an offence would not be committed under this Act. But turning to the facts of the present case, I call it a technical offence because this man, viz., the accused, did not go into the forest in the more ordinary sense of hunting and shooting, viz., for sport. He went for the protection of his property, for it appears to be uncontradicted that he had already suffered very serious loss in his cattle and other animals by the attacks of this particular tiger. I do not know how much longer he can reasonably be supposed to go on suffering these losses, and under all the circumstances of the case, I think the justice of the case will be met by reducing the fine to one rupee.

The order as regards the skin of course stands.

Sentence reduced.

be sent for trial or inquiry to an Honorary Magistrate having no experience of criminal trials, and the mere fact of the Magistrate making unnecessary adjournments in the inquiry or trial of such a case is a sufficient ground for the transfer of the case from his Court.

Criminal miscellaneous application for transfer from the Court of an Honorary Magistrate, First Class, Allahabad.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT—This is an application presented to this Court under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I am asked that the case of Magan Lal versus Ganesh Prasad now pending in the Court of Raja Partab Bahadur, Honorary Magistrate, first class, Allahabad, be either directed to be committed for trial to the Court of Session, or transferred for trial to some other competent Magistrate. From the affidavit filed in connection with this application it appears that Magan Lal was tried in the Court of the Joint Magistrate of Allahabad on the complaint of Ganesh Prasad charging Magan Lal with offences under sections 409 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code. Magan Lal was acquitted after trial by the Joint Magistrate. He then obtained sanction from the Joint Magistrate's Court to prosecute Ganesh Prasad for having falsely charged him with offences under sections 409 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code. The case was transferred by the Joint Magistrate of Allahabad to the Court of Raja Partab Bahadur, Honorary Magistrate, first class, Allahabad, and came to his Court on the 21st of August 1917. It has been, therefore, pending for about four months and is still incomplete. The ground urged for transfer or for the order prayed for is inter alia that the learned Honorary Magistrate does not know the English language and the applicant deponent is put to trouble and expense in being made to file translations from English judgments into Urdu, and that there have been already several unnecessary adjournments due to the fact that the learned Magistrate begins his sittings between 3 and 4 P. M. A further contention is raised in the affidavit that the Honorary Magistrate has kept the case for trial in his Court, although he has no jurisdiction to try it. I have examined the statement made by the complainant Ganesh Prasad when he first made his complaint. There is no doubt that he did charge Magan Lal with offences under sections 409 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code. It is alleged that that complaint was a false one. If so, it was a false complaint of these specific offences, and was, therefore, a false complaint falling within the second paragraph of section 211 of the Indian Penal Code. Criminal proceedings were instituted upon a complaint of an offence punishable with transportation for life or imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years. If the complaint was a false one, of course it is clearly to be understood that I commit myself to no opinion of any kind as to whether the charge was true or false, the charge and the criminal proceedings ensuing therefrom were of a very serious nature. It is a case which ought to be tried either by a Court of Session or at any rate by a Magistrate of considerable experience, and it is not a case of the kind that should have been sent for trial to an Honorary Magistrate who does not appear to have had much experience in the trial of criminal cases. I say this because on looking to the order-sheet I find adjournments and cross-examinations allowed which are never intended by law and which should never be granted by any Magistrate of experience. I find that the complainant was cross-examined on four different occasions, and this is a mere sample of the kind of procedure which received the sanction of the Honorary Magistrate. The mere fact that the enquiry or so-called trial has lasted for nearly four months calls for the case being removed from the Court of the Honorary Magistrate and tried by some one of experience in these matters. I understand that all the evidence for the prosecution has been taken, and I direct that the case be now committed for trial to the Court of Session on the charge of instituting or causing to be instituted a false charge of offences under sections 409 and 420 of the Indian Penal Code and, therefore, falling within the second clause of section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, a case which is triable by a Court of Session. Let the record be returned.

Record returned.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 677 OF

RESPONDENTS.*Criminal Procedure Code Act (V of 1898), ss. 247, 259—Summons case and warrant case tried together —Dismissal of case for default of prosecution, effect of —Procedure—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss.

On the day fixed for the hearing of a complaint under sections 352 and 504, Indian Penal Code, the complainant was absent and the Magistrate passed the following order: 'Complainant absent. Accused discharged'.

Held, that as there was only one case before the Court, the Magistrate must be deemed to have acted under section 259, Criminal Procedure Code, and that the order did not operate as an acquittal of the accused even in respect of the offence under section 352, Indian Penal Code. [p. 518, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where there are two offences complained of, one of which is triable as a summons case and the other as a warrant case, both arising out of the same transaction, the Court cannot separate the two, applying two kinds of procedure, but should adopt the procedure relating to the graver charge, i. e., the warrant case. [p. 518, col. 2.]

Per Napier, J.—Unless the Court chooses to separate the two offences and take them up, one as a warrant case and the other as a summons case, the fact that one of the offences complained of and tried by him is punishable by six months' imprisonment or less does not make that part of the trial a summons case. [p. 518, col. 2; p. 519, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the 3rd Presidency Magistrate, George Town, Madras, in Calendar Case No. 15911 of 1917.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. N. Aiyangar (for Mr. M. Narasimham), for the Petitioner, argued that the lower Court was wrong in treating the order as an acquittal under the lesser charge. Both the offences were to be tried together and the order must be deemed to have been passed with reference to the graver charge. The Magistrate could not, and did not, intend to split up the charges at that stage.

Mr. W. V. Rangasami Aiyangar, for the Accused, contended that as it was in the Magistrate's option to try them as two separate charges, it must be presumed that he did so and so far as the offence under section 352 was concerned, there was an acquittal.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—A complaint was made under sections 352 and 504, Indian Penal Code, before the 2nd Presidency Magistrate. On the date fixed for the case the complainant was absent and the Magistrate discharged the accused. Then a fresh complaint was lodged with reference to the same transaction before the 3rd Presidency Magistrate and he held that so far as the offence under section 352, Indian Penal Code, was concerned, the order of the 2nd Presidency Magistrate operated as an acquittal and that the case should be proceeded with only with reference to the offence under section 504, Indian Penal Code. We are asked to consider whether the order of the 3rd Presidency Magistrate that there has been an acquittal within the meaning of the law with respect to the charge under section 352 by reason of the previous order of the 2nd Presidency Magistrate, is right.

The case relating to an offence under section 352 is a summons case, inasmuch as the punishment for such an offence is not more than 6 months' imprisonment, while the case relating to section 504, Indian Penal Code, is a warrant case, the punishment under this section being more than 6 months' imprisonment. It has been ruled in Rajnarin Koonwar v. Lala Tamoli Bait (1) that where there are two offences complained of, one of which is triable as a warrant case and the other as a summons case, the proper procedure to be followed is that relating to the greater charge, namely, that of a warrant case. There is no express provision in the Criminal Procedure Code with reference to this matter. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court apparently proceeded on a general principle that the procedure to be followed should be that laid down with reference to the major charge and not the more summary procedure with reference to the minor offence. Now the Magistrate under section 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code is empowered, where more than one offence has been committed by a person by a series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, to try all the offences at one trial or separately. Here the transaction in which the two offences are alleged to have been committed was undoubtedly one and the same and the Magistrate could, therefore, try both the offences at one trial.

Then the question is whether he treated the case before him as a summons case or a warrant case, or as two cases, one a summons case and the other a warrant case. It seems to me that if he wanted to try the two offences together, the case would be one and not two separate cases; and the punishment which could be awarded against the accused in such a case would be more than 6 months' imprisonment and that would bring it within the definition of a warrant case. It has been pointed out by the learned Pleader for the accused that the complainant was absent when the case was taken up and he argues that it was open to the Magistrate at that stage to separate the two charges and try them as two different cases, one a summons case and the other a warrant case, and that we must presume that he did so and, therefore, his order of discharge must be taken to amount to an acquittal with reference to the offence under section 352. But the Magistrate passed only one order, "complainant absent. Accused discharged." If he was, as suggested by the learned Pleader for the accused, treating the matter for trial before him as two separate cases and wanted to deal with the charge under section 352, Indian Penal Code, under section 247 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the proper order for him to pass would have been one of acquittal. But he did not pass any such order. The order he passed was one of discharge, which would be the proper one if he treated the case before him as a warrant case coming under section 259, Criminal Procedure Code, which authorises him, in the absence of the complainant in a warrant case, to discharge the accused if the offence complained of was compoundable. It would prima facie be unreasonable to suppose that where there are two charges arising out of the same transaction the Magistrate would think of separating the two, applying thereto two kinds of procedure. There was one transaction in the course of which the two offences are alleged to have been committed and in such a case the proper procedure, ordinarily speaking, is to have one trial; and then, as laid down in Rajnarin Koonwar v. Lala Tamoli Kaut (1), the case ought to be treated for purposes of procedure to be followed as a warrant case having regard to the graver charge. This rule has been followed in Kallabandi Sobhanadri, In re (2) by a learned Judge of this Court sitting singly and also in Hossein Sardar v. Kalu Sardar (3). It is also mentioned with approval in Samsudin, In re (4). I would, therefore, set aside the order of the 3rd Presidency Magistrate in so far as it holds that the order of the 2nd Presidency Magistrate dated the 27th August 1917 amounts to an acquittal of the offence under section 352, Indian Penal Code.

NAPIER, J.—I agree. In my opinion there was no summons case before the 2nd Presidency Magistrate at all. The Magistrate took the complaint on his file, a number was given to it and he was prepared to hear it. The complainant was absent and he passed an order which was undoubtedly intended to be an order under section 259 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is therefore, clear to me that he was trying the whole case as a warrant case. The definition section does not speak of summons offences and warrant offences but of summons cases and warrant cases, and has reference to the case before the Court. Where the Code deals with offences it divides them into cognizable and non-cognizable, but where it is dealing with procedure then it speaks not of offences but of cases. I am, therefore, satisfied that, unless the Magistrate chooses to separate the two offences which are complained of and take them up, one as a warrant case and the other as a summons case, the fact that one of the offences complained of and tried by him in one case is one punishable by 6 months or less does not make that part of the trial a summons case. In this view it seems to me that the Magistrate had no option but to pass an order under section 259 if he decided to dispose of the case and that it was not open to him to apply the procedure which is only applicable where he is in fact trying a summons case, namely, the procedure under section 247. For these reasons I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No 873 OF 1917.

February 26, 1918.

Present:—Justice Sir George Knox, Kt., and Mr. Justice Walsh.

MAHA RAM AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872), ss. 3, 68—'Professing Christian religion', meaning of—Act, scope of—S 68, applicability of—Christian marrying according to Hindu rites—Offence—Interpretation of Statutes—Estoppel, doctrine of, whether applies to Criminal Law.

Per Knox, J.—The Christian Marriage Act has to be so construed that no case be held to fall within it which does not fall both within the reasonable meaning of its terms and within the spirit and scope of the enactment. No violence must be done to its language in order to bring people within it, but rather care must be taken that no one is brought within it who is not within its express language. [p. 520, col. 1.]

It is not competent to a Court to extend the words of an enactment by construction. [p. 520, col. 1.]

The interpretation to be placed upon the words of section 68 of the Christian Marriage Act must be one which harmonises with the context and promotes in the fullest manner the policy and object of the Legislature. [p. 520, cols. 1 & 2.]

The word 'means' in section 3 of the Christian Marriage Act is an inclusive term and, therefore, no one except a person who professes the Christian religion, comes within the purview of section 68 of the Act. [p. 520, col. 2; p. 521, col. 1.]

A person is not a 'person professing the Christian religion' within the meaning of Act XV of 1872, simply because he is baptised as an infant, when he has no possibility of saying to the world what is the faith to which he belongs, nor can any importance be attached to the fact that he attends a Christian school. The dressing as a Christian, especially in the Bhangt class, is not conclusive on the point either. [p. 522, cols. 1 & 2.]

A person cannot be said to profess the Christian religion if at the time of his marriage he performs devi ka puja. [p. 522, col. 2.]

Quere.—Whether section 68 of Act XV of 1872 was intended to penalise marriages other than those intended to be or purporting to be marriages under the Act. [p. 522, col. 2.]

Per Walsh, J.—A person, who on the eve of his marriage resists all pressure and persuasion to be married as a Christian by a Christian ceremony and who, having by birth and connection other religious associations, deliberately decides to marry a sweeper according to sweeper rites and does public worship to Hindu gods in the presence of his relatives and friends, is not 'a person professing the Christian religion' within the meaning of section 3 of the Christian Marriage Act. [p. 522, col. 2.]

The principle of estoppel has no place in the criminal law and the idea of a Christian by estoppel is a contradiction in terms. [p. 523, col. 1.]

The object of Act XV of 1872 is not to prevent people marrying as they wish, but to enable them to protect themselves and their posterity by a lawful and binding marriage if they wish to be married as Christians. [p. 523, col. 1.]

There is no express prohibition preventing a professing Christian from doing violence to his faith and marrying a non-Christian by a non-Christian ceremony. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Section 68 of the Christian Marriage Act does not make it criminal for a professing Christian to marry by a ceremony which is void under section 4 of the Act. [p. 523, col. 2.]

It refers to a class of persons who solemnize or profess to solemnize a Christian marriage under the Act not being authorized by section 5 to do so. [p. 524, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 17th September 1917.

Messrs. Nihal Chand and Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. E. Ryves (Government Advocate) and R. K. Sorabji, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

KNOX, J.—Maha Ram, who described himself as son of Kallu, by caste a sweeper, Mangli son of Sunder, sweeper, and Bashhan son of Laiq, sweeper, have been convicted of an offence under section 68 of Act No. XV of 1872. In the case of Maha Ram section 109 of the Indian Penal Code is to be read with section 68 of Act No. XV of 1872.

The case for the prosecution is that Maha Ram is a Christian; that on the 3rd of MAHA RAM V. EMPEROR.

June 1917 he was married to the daughter of one Shib Lal a Bhangi and that Bachhan and Mangli were "Mans" or so-called priests of the sweeper class who solemnised the marriage according to Bhangi rites. The assessors gave it as their opinion that Maha Ram was not a Christian and that therefore no offence under section 68 of Act No. XV of 1872 had been committed. The learned Sessions Judge, however, was of a different opinion. He found the accused persons guilty and sentenced them each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a term of one year. The appellants have been represented in this Court by learned Counsel. The contention on behalf of the appellants is that section 68 of the Christian Marriage Act does not apply; that Maha Ram was not a Christian at the time of his marriage; and that it is not proved that Bachhan and Mangli solemnised the marriage. The first point, therefore, that arises for consideration is whether Maha Ram was at the time of the marriage a Christian.

Act No. XV of 1872 (and specially the section concerned, a section imposing what may amount to a very severe punishment) has, under the well-known rules for construction in such cases, to be so construed that no case be held to fall within it which does not fall both within the reasonable meaning of its terms and within the spirit and scope of the enactment. No violence must be done to its language in order to bring people within it, but rather care must be taken that no one is brought within it who is not within its express language: London County Council v. Aylesbury Dairy Company (1). As Abbott, C. J., pointed out in Proctor v. Mamwaring (2), it is not competent to a Court to extend the words by construction.

Now Act No. XV of 1872 was an Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the solemnisation in India of the marriages of Christians. This was the legislative intent, and it will have to be seen that the interpretation placed upon the words in this section is one which harmonises with the context and promotes in the fullest manner the policy and object of the Legislature.

The term "Christian" is interpreted in section 3 of the Act and runs as follows: "The expression 'Christians' means persons professing the Christian religion." The use of the word "means" in this passage shows that the definition is a hard and fast definition and that no other meaning can be assigned to the expression than is put down in the definition: Gough v. Gough (3) and Bristol Trams & Carriage Co. v. Bristol Corporation (4). In several sections of the Act, as for instance, sections 23, 37, etc. another term is used, namely, "Native Christians," also there is a part of the Act which is entitled "Marriage of Native Christians" and which extends from section 60 to section 65 of Act No. XV of 1872.

Section 3 interprets the expression "Native Christian." The meaning given to this latter expression is different from the meaning given by the Act to the expression "Christian". It includes the Christian descendants of natives of India converted to Christianity as well as such converts. If the Legislature had contemplated applying section 68 to a Christian, i. e., a person professing the Christian religion and had wished to comprehend within it a Christian descendant of a native of India, it would have been easy to provide for this in section 68. That no such provision was made confines section 68 strictly to persons who at the time of marriage were persons professing the Christian religion. It is important to notice this, as occasionally in the argument on behalf of the prosecution an attempt was made to contend that section 68 applied not only to a Christian but also to a Native Christian. I am unable to accept this contention and I hold that the issue which I have to decide is whether Maha Ram at the time when he was married to the daughter of Shib Lal was or was not a person professing the Christian religion. Again I repeat the word "means" which is to be found in section 3 is an inclusive term and, therefore, no one except a person who professes the Christian religion comes within the purview of section 68.

This drives me back upon the necessity of deciding who is a person who professes the Christian religion.

I have not been referred to, nor have I been able to find, any precedent which lays down clearly what meaning is to be attached to the words "profession of Christianity".

Murray in the Oxford Dictionary, Volume VII (1909), interprets it thus:—

"To affirm or declare one's faith in or an allegiance to; to acknowledge or formally recognise as an object of faith or belief (a religion, principle, rule of action, God, Christ, a saint, etc.)."

In the case before us we have not to deal with a person of an immature age or one who for any reason is unable to give a reasonable account of the faith that he holds, e. g., an orphan of tender years in a school, etc. For several years Maha Ram has been a grown up lad mixing in village in school life. There must have been many opportunities for observing and noting what he acknowledged or formally recognised as an object of faith or belief, and I should expect to have been referred to abundant evidence on this point. He is the son of one Kallu.

Regarding Kallu the evidence is that he was elected to the position of elder in the Presbyterian Church; that he was ordained by the Presbytery; that he can under certain circumstances administer sacraments; that he is a moderator every year; that he has been confirmed; that he sits upon session as sir punch of a local church; that he was an officiating elder up to and after the marriage of Maha Ram; that he was an outspoken preacher; that he prayed and preached Christianity; that he taught Christianity in his own village and in adjoining villages; that on one occasion when a Thanedar said he would not believe Kallu to be a Christian unless he prayed, Kallu offered up prayers in public. All this is strong prima facie evidence of his having been a person who professed the Christian religion.

The same might be said of evidence given regarding Bachhan and Mangli. It does go into as many details, but it gives specific instances where these men "professed" the Christian religion. I have searched in vain for similar definite and specific information in the case of Maha Ram. There is evidence which points the other way, for whatever it is worth. It seems to me of very little value and so I do not go into it.

The evidence upon this point given by the Crown consists of evidence given by:—

(1) The Rev. A. W. Moore, a Minister of the Presbyterian Church and a Missionary in charge of the Mission at Mainpuri;

(2) Isa Das, the own brother of Maha Ram;

(3) Sunder, who says that he became a Christian some five years ago;

(4) Behari;

(5) The Rev. W. T. Mitchell, Missionary at Mainpuri;

(6) Madan Lal, a petition-writer.

The evidence of the Rev. A. W. Moore is to the effect that Maha Ram is a Christian and that Bachhan and Mangli are also Christians. When cross-examined as to the meaning of this word Mr. Moore says: "We call a man Christian though not confirmed or professing the Christian religion;" further on, while saying that Bachhan and Mangli had both to his knowledge professed Christianity, he does not make the same statement regarding Maha Ram. All that he says about Maha Ram is that his name was entered in the Baptismal Register, which sacrament was apparently administered at the time when Maha Ram was a babe 3 years old, that he never up to the time of his marriage told the witness that he was not a Christian, and that though he has seen him since his marriage he has not denied that he is a Christian. When the witness on one occasion said to him that judging by the clothes he wore no one would take him for a Hindu, he laughed and said "no". The witness got Maha Ram entered in the Industrial School at Farrukhabad to learn carpentry. He was at the school up to within 2 or 3 days of the wedding. The school is for Christian boys only and witness sent him there as a Christian. This is all upon the point. It does not appear then from the evidence of this witness that Maha Ram ever took part in Church ceremonies such as prayers and the like.

The next evidence in point of importance is that of Rev. W. T. Mitchell. He baptised Maha Ram when he was 3 years old. In his examination-in-chief this witness says that Maha Ram when he was in the school at Mainpuri professed to be a Christian ; that he took part in church ritual a little before March 1915, but the witness does not specify what part or what particular ritual. In cross-examination this witness says that while all the brothers and sisters of Maha Ram had been baptized they have, with the exception of one brother the witness Isa Das, been married according to Bhangi rites. They have not strictly adhered to the tenets of Christianity.

Isa Das the brother of Maha Ram gave it as his deposition that Maha Ram is a Christian. He never knew that Maha Ram had renounced Christianity. In cross-examination he had to admit that he lived apart from Maha Ram and that one of his sisters was married according to Bhangi rites.

The rest of the evidence for the Crown is of little importance. It is, however, abundantly apparent from it that Maha Ram had given it out that he intended to have his marriage solemnised according to Bhangi rites. Much attempt was made to dissuade him and his father from doing this, but the persuasions were in vain and it appears from the evidence of Mr. Moore that in a marriage solemnised according to Bhangi rites idolatry takes place and devi ka puja or the worship of the goddess devi is gone through.

In brief then it would appear from the above evidence that no distinct "profession" of the Christian religion is attributed to Maha Ram beyond the fact that he dressed as a Christian, that when he was at the school at Fatehgarh he wrote one or more letters in which he called himself Mahbub Masih. He had never been admitted to sacrament and according to the witness Moore such admission depends upon a confession of faith. This Maha Ram has never been shown to have made. His brothers and sisters with the exception of Isa Das are all persons who have been married with Bhangi rites and at such a marriage an open profession of idolatry is made before witnesses.

I am not prepared to hold that a person is a person professing the Christian religion within the meaning of Act XV of 1872 simply because he is baptised as an infant, when he has no possibility of saying to the world what is the faith to which he belongs, nor do I attach any particular value to the fact that he attends a Christian school,

The learned Counsel for the Crown wished me to hold that a person who took the advantages supplied by a Christian school was estopped by his conduct from professing that he was not a Christian. The dressing as a Christian seems also to me very far from being conclusive on this point especially in a class of persons who belong to the Bhangi class. The furthest point urged in this direction by the prosecution is perhaps the writing of letters under the title of Mahbub Masih; but no letter was produced nor was it shown that letters so written were at all of a public nature. On the other hand we have undoubtedly a profession in the case of his performing devi ka puja at the time of his marriage. That act was undoubtedly a profession, an act entirely inconsistent with I might add repugnant to, the view that the person performing it was a person professing the Christian religion. I am not satisfied, therefore, that at the time when this marriage was solemnised Maha Ram was a Christian.

Holding as I do that Maha Ram was not a Christian at the time of this marriage, it follows that no offence under the Act was committed on the 3rd of June 1917, either by the so called principals Managli and Bichhan or by the abettor Maha Ram.

I do not consider it necessary to go into the question whether section 68 of Act No. XV of 1872 was intended to penalise marriages other than those intended to be or purporting to be marriages under the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872. It seems extremely doubtful whether it was so, but as I have said before the question does not arise for decision in this case.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. I should hold, apart altogether from the general history of Maha Ram to which my brother has referred, that when a person on the eve of his marriage resists all pressure and persuasion to be married as a Christian by a Christian ceremony, and, having by birth and connection other religious associations, deliberately decides to marry a sweeper, according to sweeper rites, and does public worship to Hindu gods in the presence of his relations and friends, he is not "a person professing the Christian religion."

MARA RAM V. EMPEROR.

Mr. Sorabji contended that Maha Ram was "estopped" from denying his Christianity. Apart from the fact that the principle of estoppel has no place in the criminal law, the idea of a "Christian by estoppel" is a contradiction in terms.

The wider question, as to the real ambit of section 68 of the Indian Christian Marriage Act of 1872, is really involved in what we have decided and I propose to state my views about it for the following reasons. The case for the prosecution was argued mainly upon that ground; the learned Sessions Judge who decided this case obviously did not like it, but felt himself bound to follow the decision in Kolandai Velu v. Dequidt (5); there has already been a division of judicial opinion on the subject; the question is one of public importance; I entertain no doubt upon it, and I think that prosecutions like the present should be discouraged.

It is important to consider the scope and object of this legislation. It is a consolidating and amending Act, replacing the English Acts of 1818 and 1851 relating to marriages in India, and the Indian Acts of 1852, 1865 and 1866 dealing with the same subject. These were enabling Statutes providing special conditions appropriate to the special circumstances and difficulties which are likely from time to time to confront those in India who wish to be married by Christian marriage. The history of the legislation shows that doubts had arisen as to the validity of certain marriages, and it was clearly intended to facilitate such marriages and to validate them and at the same time to guard them by strict requirements. The legislation is not unlike the Foreign Marriages Act in England. The object of the Act is not to prevent people marrying as they wish, but to enable them to protect themselves and their posterity by a lawful and binding marriage if they wish to be married as Christians. The Act is to be called the Indian Christian Marriage Act, and, in my opinion, it deals with Christian marriages and Christian marriages alone. In future such marriages can only be lawfully effected under this Act. If they are not solemnized by one of the persons described in section 5, they are made void by section 4. The Act does not prohibit even a professing Christian from marrying otherwise than under the Act if he wishes to do so.

We, therefore, start with this that there is no express prohibition preventing a professing Christian from doing violence to his faith and marrying a non-Christian by a non-Christian ceremony. His marriage may not be valid by English Law as a Christian marriage in India, but it is not forbidden to him. It would be a startling result of this Act, if such a person being free to choose and not prohibited from marrying otherwise than by a Christian marriage, should find himself liable to transportation for abetting the person who marries him.

An analysis of Part VII of the Act, which deals with penalties, shows that such penalties are in the main directed against the offence of either one party or the other, or the officiating celebrant, or the official who may lawfully authorize the celebrant, wilfully and falsely doing some act in pretended pursuance of the Statute which probably would, and certainly might, render the whole proceeding invalid. Omitting section 68 for the moment, every other offence dealt with is an act done which the Act requires to be done, and which is done either by a person lawfully authorized but by unlawful means, or by lawful means by an unauthorised person.

Turning to section 68 it is to be noted that the section does not make it criminal for a professing Christian to marry by a ceremony which is void under section 4.

It is confined solely to the persons who solemnize the marriage, and the Act makes it criminal for a person to solemnize a marriage who is not authorized by section 5 to do so. But section 5 only authorizes persons to solemnize Christian marriages, and nobody can solemnize Christian marriages in India who is not authorized by that section. Section 5 itself uses the word "Marriages" in the widest possible sense. "Marriages", it enacts, "may be solemnized in India," by certain specified persons. But this does not mean that no other marriages may be solemnized in India. That would be an impossible contention. It must, therefore, mean "Marriages under this Act," or in other words "Christian marriages". I read section 68 therefore as referring to a class of persons, namely, those who solemnize or profess to solemnize a Christian marriage under this Act, not being authorized by section 5 to do so. I cannot believe that the Legislature could have intended to sweep into the net of the criminal law, through an indirect piece of legislation by reference, not only every professing Christian who chooses not to be married as a Christian, but every non-Christian whom such persons might marry, and every non-Christian who took part in the solemnisation or celebration. This would be contrary to the ordinary mode of interpretation of a Statute, and would produce far-reaching and almost ludicrous results. I do not think the question turns upon the word "solemnize" so much as upon the object and scope of the Act. The case of Queen-Empress v. Paul (6) decided in 1896 turned on the word "solemnize". The Sessions Judge had acquitted on the ground that the part taken by the Hindu priest did not amount to solemnisation. He seems to me to have been feeling for a way of evading the construction of the Act now contended for and to have seized on the word "solemnisation". The Appellate Court disagreed, but I think their minds were diverted from the real difficulty. They went on to hold that the contracting parties themselves ought to have been convicted, of abetment. As I have said, this is a startling result, and satisfies me that there must be a fallacy in the reasoning which reaches it. I have carefully considered the recent case of Kolandai Velu v. Dequidt (5) decided by the Chief Justice and two Judges on a reference by Mr. Justice Napier. I cannot agree with it. I see no answer to the reasoning in Mr. Justice Napier's referring order, while the Chief Justice slips into an apparent error. "Section 68," he says "merely provides a penalty for solemnizing or professing to solemnize such a marriage contrary to the provisions of the Act." This is not so. It provides a penalty for any person who does under section 5 what he is not authorized to do, namely, solemnize a Christian marriage.

Mr. Sorabji urged that the intention of the Legislature was clear. They did not want the country flooded with void marriages with all the incidental evils as to illegitimate children and questions of property and inheritance. This result would be equally produced by a state of concubinage not regularized by any form of marriage, and the interpretation contended for might be said rather to encourage concubinage. On the other hand, as was pointed out by the Government Advocate who appeared at our request so that the view of Government might be presented to us, the Madras High Court in 1910 held that such a marriage as the present may be valid by Hindu Law if a custom is established governing such marriages. See Muthusami Mudaliar v. Masilamani (7). In that case the bride was a Roman Catholic. She removed the cross from her neck, and her forehead was smeared with holy ashes by a Brahman priest. The trial Court spoke of "the prevalence of the practice of Hindus marrying Christian girls according to Hindu rites and such girls after their marriage following the Hindu religion". The validity of the marriage was upheld by the Madras High Court. This seems to me an additional ground for differing from the decision of the so-called Madras Full Bench in Kolandai Velu v. Dequidt (5). The result seems that, at present according to the law in Madras, a valid Hindu marriage may be a criminal offence, both on the part of the principals and on the part of those who celebrate it. I cannot accept this consequence, which illustrates very forcibly the importance of holding to the principle which my brother Knox has reiterated, of not straining a criminal enactment beyond what is included in its express terms.

BY THE COURT.—We admit this appeal. We find Mangli and Bachhan not guilty of the offence charged, i. e., an offence under section 68 of Act No XV of 1872, and Maha Ram of abetment of the aforesaid act and direct that they be released. We understand they were permitted to give bail; if they did give bail, the bail-bonds will be discharged.

Appeal allowed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Press and Registration of Books Act (XXV of 1867), s. 6—Refusal of District Magistrate to authenticate declaration—Proceedings, whether judicial—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

A District Magistrate, in acting or purporting to act under section 6 of Act XXV of 1867, cannot be said to exercise jurisdiction as a Court, Criminal or Civil, nor can his proceedings be said to be in any sense judicial. [p. 527, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a District Magistrate refused to authenticate a declaration under section 6 of the Act:

Held, that the proceedings of the Magistrate were purely ministerial and the Chief Court had no power to interfere with his proceedings. [p. 527, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Lahore, dated the 7th August 1917, refusing to accept the declaration made by the petitioner under sections 5 and 6 of the Press and Registration of Books Act of 1867.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Husain (with him Mr. Ghulam Rasul), for the Petitioner, said the Observer Press was originally started at Ludhiana in 1894 and Khwaja Ahad Shah was keeper of the press from the very beginning. In 1895 the press was removed to Lahore and Khwaja Ahad Shah continued to be the keeper, but the printer was another man who was also the manager. In 1917, the services of this manager were dispensed with. Section 3 of Act I of 1910 provided that if the keeper of a press became the printer, it was not necessary for him to deposit a security. Khwaja Ahad Shah, in making the recent declaration before the District Magistrate of Lahore described himself as keeper of the press and Counsel contended that under Act XXV of 1867 the Magistrate had no business to refuse to authenticate his declaration.

Counsel proceeding, said the Magistrate's function was a 'judicial' one.

[RATTIGAN, C. J., asked if Counsel had any authority on the point. So far as was apparent, the Act itself did not say so specifically.]

That might be so, but was it likely that the Legislature should have intended that a valuable right vesting in the keeper of the press should be taken away by the executive, and there should be no authority to look into their action?

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—The question was whether the High Court had any jurisdiction.]

Act XXV of 1867 having made a provision that a "Magistrate" shall authenticate a declaration, would the Legislature leave the matter to his pleasure? The later Acts had not left the control entirely in the hands of the executive. Was it likely that as far back as 1867 the Legislature should have omitted to make any such provision?

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—The question was one of fact. There was the Seditious Meetings Prevention Act, for instance, under which power was vested in the District Magistrate to prohibit meetings and there was no provision to enable the High Court to revise that order.]

The penalty came only under section 6 of that Act, where a judicial check was provided.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—But if a meeting was stopped the Court could not interfere.]

[Mr. Petman, for the Crown, said the Act vested the authority in the District Magistrate, a Magistrate of the First Class and the Commissioner of Police.]

Mr. Fazl-i-Husain said the Magistrate was a judicial officer. His only doubt was regarding the Commissioner of Police.

Mr. Petman.—The Magistrate was the equivalent in the mofussil of the Commissioner of Police who acted in the Presidency Towns.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—That was exactly the point—whether the Court had the power to revise the order or must leave it to the executive authorities.]

Mr. Petman.—The Court had no jurisdiction.

Mr. Fazl-i-Husain said he was afraid it was rather the executive way of looking at the matter. If that was so, the executive could close down every press.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—That might be so in theory, but in practice it was almost unthinkable that the executive would take the responsibility of shutting down every press.]

Counsel said it was a very important point.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—There were no authorities on the point.]

There were.

[RATTIGAN, C. J., said the point Counsel took up was that the word 'Magistrate' imported that the proceedings were judicial.]

That was so. What he urged was that here the enactment gave no discretion to the Magistrate but was imperative that the Magistrate "shall" authenticate the declaration.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—But the question was whether this Court had jurisdiction to interfere in this case or not. The difficulty was there were no authorities on the point.]

[Mr. Petman said the Court had no jurisdiction and the case could not go on.

There were no direct authorities but there were some which had a bearing on the matter.

Counsel said the question was whether the function to be exercised by the Magistrate was a judicial or an executive one. The test as to whether the proceedings were judicial was laid down in Chanan v. Emperor (1), where it was held that "judicial proceedings" were proceedings in which evidence might be legally taken on oath.

Counsel referred to the proceedings then going on in Madras in connection with the "New India" newspaper, where Mr. Telang who was alleged to have severed his connection with the journal as its printer had been summoned to make an affidavit.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—The action taken in Madras was not binding on the Punjab Chief Court.]

This was true but their Lordships could consider the fact.

Counsel next referred to Ilam Din v. King-Emperor (2), wherein it was held that sections 435, Criminal Procedure Code, did not limit the revisional jurisdiction of the Chief Court to judicial proceedings, so in the present proceedings the Court had power to revise the order of the District Magistrate of Lahore as it was the order of a 'Magistrate.'

Counsel next cited Queen-Empress v. Tulja (3), wherein it was held that an inquiry was judicial if the object was to determine a jural relation. The very fact of authentication by a Magistrate created a jural tie between him and the community, as the very fact of authentication made the declarant prima facie liable to the community for all that appeared in his paper. Counsel said there were two parties between whom the matter was to be settled, the keeper of the press and the State.

Mr. Petman, Government Advocate, for the Crown, said the history of the case was interesting and had an important bearing on the matter. The printer was one Nizam-ud-Din, who left the press. Then Barkat Ali, Editor of the paper, applied for declaration and he was required to give security. It was to get over this that Ahad Shah came forward to say: "I am the printer." He had always lived at Ludhiana. He knew nothing of printing and did not know the language in which the paper was printed.

[Mr. Fazl-i-Husain.—Mr. Petman was going on the merits.]

Mr. Petman said that the merits had a bearing.

[Mr. Fazl-i-Husain.—Mr. Petman could not go beyond the file.]

The facts could be easily proved. The record in the Deputy Commissioner's Court would bear him out.

[Mr. Fazl-i-Husain.—Let that record be brought in by all means but reference could not be made to it without putting it in.]

He asked if Mr. Petman admitted the jurisdiction of the Chief Court.]

[RATTIGAN, C. J., asked if the Government Advocate admitted the jurisdiction.]

Mr. Petman said there was no question regarding the exercise of functions by the Officiating District Magistrate of Lahore, but he did not admit the jurisdiction of the Chief Court. The case-law not exactly on this point but having a bearing on it was to be found collected under section 435 in Sohoni's Criminal Law. The act of authentication was merely an executive or ministerial function which the Government had vested in an officer, who thus exercised civil functions and not magisterial. For instance, a Magistrate might be authorised to issue dog licenses, but here he had nothing to decide. It was not a judicial function at all. The applicant made no attempt to go to the Commissioner or the Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. Fazl-i-Husain, in replying, said Mr. Petman had contended that the authentication of the declaration was merely a civil function. Section 7 showed that the declaration was to be kept in the custody of the Court and a copy thereof was to be furnished when required with the stamp of the Court. The Magistrate's position as 'Court' was recognized by the Act itself.

[RATTIGAN, C. J. said the Act provided that one copy of the original was to be kept by the High Court or the principal Court of civil jurisdiction and another by the Magistrate.]

He did not think either the Chief Court or the District Judge's Court kept these copies. Besides the copy was to be authenticated with the official seal of the Court. What did it mean, he asked, but that the seal was the seal of the Magistrate as such?

Counsel said he wanted to explain why they did not go up to the Commissioner or the Lieutenant-Governor. The reason was that they then believed, as they still did, that it was not an executive matter at all; otherwise they would have had no hesitation to go up to those authorities.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—We understand it was because you believed that the Magistrate was exercising judicial functions and that consequently the High Court had power to revise.]

Mr. Fazl-i-Husain said it was so.

[RATTIGAN, C. J., asked Counsel to leave the difficult point to them for decision.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of the District Magistrate, Lahore, dated 7th August 1917, refusing to accept a declaration by Khwaja Ahad Shah, which was tendered by him to the District Magistrate under section 4 of Act XXV of 1867.

In the grounds for revision it is stated that on the 20th June 1917 the petitioner made and subscribed a declaration as the printer and publisher of the "Observer" periodical, Lahore, and that the District Magistrate acted in contravention of the express provisions of section 6 of Act XXV of 1867 by refusing to accept a declaration which under that section he was bound to authenticate by his signature and official seal.

It is objected that this Court has no power to revise the said order, inasmuch as it was one passed by an executive officer in his executive capacity. In our opinion this objection must prevail. It cannot be said that the District Magistrate in acting or purporting to act under section 6 of the Act was exercising jurisdiction as a Court, criminal or civil, or that his proceedings were in any sense judicial. It may be that under section 6 of the Act the Magistrate has no power to refuse to accept a declaration made and subscribed in the manner provided by sections 4 and 5, but if his proceedings were merely ministerial and not judicial, the fact that he acted in excess of his jurisdiction or that he wrongly refused to exercise powers which he was bound to exercise upon application made to him, would not give this Court power to interfere with his proceedings. Our conclusions are supported by the judgments delivered by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in Annie Besant v. Emperor (4). We accordingly hold that we have no jurisdiction to entertain this petition which is, therefore, rejected.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of Session of the Trichinopoly Division, passed in the Criminal Appeal preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Trichinopoly, in C. V. No. 94 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. E. L. Thornton, for the Petitioner, argued that though there was no right of appeal for his client under section 413, Criminal Procedure Code, yet the effect of the Appellate Court's decision in the case of the co-accused who were convicted of the same offence and were given an appealable sentence should enure for his benefit as well. Petitioner had a right that the evidence against him should be examined. The argument was sought to be supported on the analogy of proviso (b) to section 408.

Mr. P. R. Narayanasami Ayyar, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown, argued that the language of section 413 was express and mandatory and debarred a right of appeal in cases covered by it.

ORDER.—The first contention of Mr. Thornton is that, though in this case the sentences of the petitioners are such that no appeal would lie in their behalf, by reason of the fact that they were tried with some other persons who received appealable sentences and preferred an appeal therefrom to the Sessions Judge, he was bound to examine the case of the petitioners also, as if an appeal lay in their case as well. We do not think that there is any support in the Criminal Procedure Code for such a contention. Section 408 says that when a person has been convicted by a First Class Magistrate, he may appeal to the Court of Session, but section 413 lays down that there shall be no appeal by such a person if the sentence passed is imprisonment not exceeding one month or a fine not exceeding Rs. 50. Mr. Thornton's argument is based upon proviso (b) to section 408 which says "when in any case an Assistant Sessions Judge or a Magistrate specially empowered under section 30 passes any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years, or any sentence of transportation, the appeal shall lie to the High Court." It is contended that in such a case an appeal would lie not only on behalf of the persons who have received the sentences mentioned in proviso (c), but also on behalf of other persons who were tried along with them, though the sentence passed in their case might be less than that specified in the proviso. We are not at all satisfied that this is what is meant by the proviso. But supposing it is, we do not see how it bears out the proposition put forward in this case. The language of section 413 is express and perfectly clear to show that in the cases covered by it, there shall be no appeal, and the first paragraph of section 408 which specifies the Courts to which the appeals of certain convicted persons will lie does not speak of any 'case', but of the persons convicted. No ruling of this Court or of any other High Court has been cited to us which bears out the contention on behalf of the petitioners. On the other hand there are rulings of this Court reported as Venkatkrishnayya, In re (1) and In re Uruma Mudali (2), which support the contrary proposition. The interpretation of the law in those cases is also in accordance with the practice of this Court, and so far as we are aware of the other High Courts as well. See Reg. v. Muliya Nana (3) and Reg. v. Kalubhai Meghabhai (4), which are referred to in Venkatkrishnayya, In re (1).

The only other contention raised before us relates to the sentences of the accused Nos. 3 and 9. They have been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a month each of the offences of which they were found guilty, namely, criminal trespass, rioting and hurt. We are unable to say that the sentences are too severe. The petition is dismissed. The accused, if on bail, will surrender to their bail and serve out the remaining portions of their sentences.

March 6, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball and Mr. Justice

MITHAN LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

CHHAJJU SINGH—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Mortgage, usufructuary—Lease given by mortgagor—Sale of equity of redemption—Ex-proprietary rights—Rent, liability to pay—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 10—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 36.

The defendant gave a usufructuary mortgage of his zaminadari to the plaintiff, who on the same date gave a lease of the same, to last during the term of the mortgage, to the defendant, who remained in possession as thekadar paying rent to the plaintiff under the lease. The rent having fallen into arrears, the plaintiff sued defendant, obtained a decree and caused the equity of redemption to be sold in execution. The plaintiff's mortgage was notified at the time of sale. No application for mutation of names was made and the record stood as it was at the date of the mortgage. The plaintiff again sued the defendant for arrears of rent for a period partly prior and partly subsequent to the date of the sale of the equity of redemption. The defendant denied his liability for the latter period on the ground that as his equity of redemption had been sold, he had become an ex-proprietary tenant and that as no rent had been fixed by the Collector under section 36 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, he was not liable to pay any rent in respect of that period.

Held, that so long as the mortgage subsisted, the defendant was a thekadar under his lease and as such liable to pay the rent stipulated for in the lease, whether or not he also became an ex-proprietary tenant of the zaminadari. [p. 530, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Meerut, modifying that of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Balandshahr.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh (with him Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai), for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The facts out of which it has arisen are briefly as follows:—The defendant was the owner of a certain zaminadari share, the area of which was some 13 bighas odd. On the 23rd of July 1908, he gave a usufructuary mortgage of this zaminadari to the plaintiff. On the same date the plaintiff gave him a lease of the same zaminadari share on payment of a sum of Rs. 70 14-0 per annum plus Rs. 23-11-0 Government demand, &c. The defendant remained in possession as thekadar paying his rent to the plaintiff under the lease. On the 26th of June 1912, the plaintiff sued him on the basis of that agreement for arrears of rent and obtained a decree and in execution of his decree for the arrears of rent due under the lease, he attached and put to sale the defendant's equity of redemption. This was sold on the 20th of March 1913, and was purchased by one Bhuttu Mal. At the time of the sale the plaintiff's mortgage and one other mortgage were also notified. The price paid for the property at the sale was Rs. 40. Bhuttu Mal did not apply for mutation of names and the Government record still stands as it was on the date of the original mortgage. The plaintiff has now, on the basis of the lease, sued his thekadar, the defendant, for the rent for a period which commenced prior to the 20th of March 1913 and runs up to a date subsequent to that date. The defendant in his written statement merely pleaded that he was liable for the rent up to the 20th of March 1913, but that for the period subsequent to that he was no longer liable under the lease because his equity of redemption had been sold and purchased by Bhuttu Mal. The Court of first instance in the course of its judgment made the remark that "the mortgagor's right to redeem had been put to auction by the plaintiff-decree-holder who had purchased it for Bhuttu Mal on the 20th of March 1913." It is quite clear that the defendant had nowhere pleaded that Bhuttu Mal was the benamidar of the plaintiff or that Buttu Mal had purchased the property for and on behalf of the plaintiff. There was no issue on this point. There was no allegation or denial, no evidence and no finding. The Court of first instance held that the purchase by Bhuttu Mal of the defendant's equity of redemption did not affect the case at all, that the lease subsisted and that the defendant was liable under the lease. It accordingly decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court on the defendant's appeal has held that after the 20th of March 1913 the defendant became the ex-proprietary tenant of the land because the equity of redemption had been sold; that he was entitled to take up his position as an ex-proprietary tenant and as no rent had been fixed, he was not liable to pay any rent for the period subsequent to the 20th of March 1913. The plaintiff appeals.

It is quite clear to us that the Judge of the Court below has misunderstood the nature of the plaintiff's claim. It is based on the theka which was given to the defendant on the 23rd of July 1908. We will assume that the defendant is the ex-proprietary tenant of the land. He is equally a thekadar under the contract of the 23rd of July 1908. If the period of that contract has come to an end, then of course the plaintiff's claim must fail, because the theka no longer subsists, but so long as the theka subsists the plaintiff is entitled to recover from his thekadar the rent which the latter has agreed to pay. He may, as an ex-proprietary tenant, be a tenant of the land under himself as thekadar. If the theka had been given to an outside person, there is no question that so long as it subsists the thekadar would be liable for the rent. The lower Court in its judgment has stated that Bhuttu Mal appears to have been a benamidar for the plaintiff. It has, however, come to no decision on the point, nor could it do so, for the simple reason that the issue had not been raised, no evidence taken upon it, and there had been no decision on it. The point would have been material if it had been raised, because the lease was to subsist only so long as the mortgage subsisted. If the defendant had pleaded and had proved to the Court that the mortgage had come to an end, then the plaintiff's claim would have failed, but he is not allowed to raise a question of fact in second appeal on which there were no pleadings, on which there was no issues and to which no evidence was directed. The case must be decided on the assumption, right or wrong, that the mortgage still subsists and that Bhuttu Mal is the owner of the equity of redemption which was purchased in his name. This being so, the lease must still subsist and whether the defendant be or be not the ex-proprietary tenant of the land, he is liable as thekadar to his lessor. In this view we must allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. The plaintiff will have his costs in all Courts. The Court of first instance granted the plaintiff a decree for what it has called "usual interest." This interest will run from the date of the suit up to the date of realization, and at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum simple.

Custom — Alienation by widow — Necessity — Husband's debts — Debts incurred by widow for maintenance — Anticipation of immediate wants.

A widow is justified in alienating property to pay her deceased husband's creditors and to raise money for her maintenance. The alienee is not bound to see to the application of the money. [p. 530, col. 2; p. 531, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 27th July 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Bhakkar, dated the 29th October 1915, decreeing the suit.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Appellants.

Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment deals with Civil Appeals Nos. 2921 and 2922 of 1916. The District Judge has dismissed suits by the uncles of one Hukam Chand deceased, challenging a sale and a mortgage by his widow for Rs. 200 and Rs. 600 respectively.

Hukam Chand died in April 1910 and the plaintiffs seized such parts of his property as was not mortgaged. It has been found as a fact that the widow, who had three female dependants, had nothing to live upon and that she was not assisted by her husband's reversioners.

In the deed of sale of a tumbledown house which was effected on 27th September 1911, the necessity alleged was that of paying certain of Hukam Chand's creditors. The plaintiffs say that they paid some of those debts, but they did not show that they had paid any of them by 27th September 1911, and the creditors may well have been pressing the widow. The debts certainly existed. The alienee was not bound to see to the application of his money, and the alienation was nonetheless for necessity if the widow found that she had to apply the sum of Rs. 200 to defray the expenditure on bare livelihood of herself and her dependants.

In the mortgage which is dated 10th March 1913, she recited the fact that the sum borrowed, Rs. 600, was required to pay a bill which she had already run up with the alienee and for her expenses of living and was, if she did not require quite the whole sum borrowed, to defray debts already incurred; it is obviously impossible to sell immoveable property piecemeal month by month to pay current bills. The bulk of the money must have been already required, and if there was any anticipation it was for immediate wants. I do not think that there is any question of principle involved in these cases, and it appears to me that there is no real ground for second appeal. Fateh Singh v. Nanak Chand (1), which is quoted by Counsel for the appellants with regard to the sale, is not a parallel case.

The appeals are dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182—Execution—Decree satisfied by attachment and execution of another decree in judgment-debtor's favour—Decree set aside on appeal—Refund of amount realised—Application for execution—Limitation.

Appellant obtained a decree for costs against respondent. In execution of that decree appellant attached and executed a decree obtained by the respondent against a third person. The latter decree was, however, set aside on appeal, and appellant had to refund the money realised by him in execution of that decree. The appellant then made a fresh application for execution of his own decree more than three years after his last application:

Held, (1) that the application being in form and in substance one for execution of a decree, Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act had no application to it; [p. 532, col. 1.]

(2) that the application was governed by Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act and, having been made more than three years after the date of the last application, was barred by limitation. [p. 532, col. 1.]

Execution second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 27th March 1917.

Mr. Mohan Lal Sandal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—All the facts except one or two are clearly set out in the judgment of the Court below. On the 16th of May 1910 the appellant obtained a decree for costs against Banarsi Das in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra. Banarsi Das who was the plaintiff in that suit appealed to the High Court and his appeal was dismissed on the 28th of October 1912, costs being awarded to the respondents therein of whom the present appellant was one. Separate costs were allowed to him. On the 9th of August 1910 he applied for execution of the first Court's decree by the arrest of his judgment-debtor. The application fell through. On the 15th of December 1911 he applied for execution by attachment of a decree which Banarsi Das had obtained against certain other persons. The decree was duly attached and on the 13th of March 1912 the application for execution was filed. The appellant then proceeded to execute the decree which he had attached as against Banarsi Das' judgment-debtors. The property was sold, the decree was satisfied and the present appellant also remained satisfied. But unfortunately for him the decree which he had executed against Banarsi Das' judgment-debtors was pending in appeal and it was finally set aside and the appellant had to refund the money, which he did on the 27th of September 1915. In the meantime, as will be evident from the date of the decision of the High Court on appeal, Banarsi Das' appeal had been dismissed and appellant had been awarded the costs of that appeal also. On the 11th of January 1913 he had applied for execution of the decree of the High Court awarding him costs, and that application was struck off on the 14th of January 1913 after one other decree in some other case had been attached thereunder. Having had to refund the money that he had recovered towards the satisfaction of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, the appellant on the 13th of February 1916 made the present application for execution to the Subordinate Judge of Muttra. He sought not the attachment of any property but the arrest of the judgment-debtor. The Courts below have held that the application is barred under Article 182 of the Limitation Act and the applicant has come here.

Prima facie the application is an application for execution of a certain decree and it is under Article 182 prima facie barred by time, even if we take into consideration the application of the 11th of January 1913. On examination of the present application I see that it was actually filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra on the 12th of January 1913, that is, one day out of time. The Court at Agra had no jurisdiction and the applicant had to go on to the Court at Muttra. It is alleged that Article 181, which is a general Article for applications to which no period of limitation is provided, should be applied to the facts of the present case. It is pointed out with some earnestness that the appellant was up to the 27th of September 1915 in possession of the money and did not need to apply for any further execution and that it is the refund of the money which has given him a fresh ground for application for execution, and I am asked to apply Article 181 to the special circumstances of this case. Much as I should like to be able to help the appellant, I do not see how I can avoid the clear and distinct language of the Limitation Act. Article 182 lays down a period of three years for an application for the execution of a decree. In form and in substance the present application is an application for execution of the decree, and Article 181, in my opinion, cannot possibly be applied. Section 5 of the Limitation Act also does not apply, and I cannot admit the application out of time under that section. To some extent the appellant is also to blame, for if he had come into Court with an application for execution immediately after he had refunded the money, it would have been well within time as that would have been within three years from the application of the 11th of January 1913. He has been negligent and I am afraid must take the result of his own acts. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed. As the opposite party does not appear, I pass no order as to costs in this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 67—Landlord and tenant—Interest on rent, date of accrual
of.*

Under the Bengal Tenancy Act interest on rent accrues, not from the expiration of the dates on which the instalments are payable according to the kists stipulated in the contract of lease, but from the expiration of the quarters of the agricultural year in which the instalments fall due. [p. 533, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Pabna, dated the 21st February 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Serajganj, dated the 29th May 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen, for the Appellants.—The tenders of rent through the post office might have been made without including any interest at the expiration of the due dates of the kists, but they were made within the quarter of the agricultural year in which they fell due. Section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that interest shall be reckoned only after the expiration of the last date of the quarter of the agricultural year in which the rent is due. On the basis of this section no interest can be claimed by the landlord on the tendered rents, though they reached him after the dates of the kists stipulated in the contract. So the tenders were valid tenders and stopped the running of interest. The lower Court was, therefore, wrong in allowing damages which can be given only in lieu of interest, and in this case no interest was due.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarty, for the Respondents, submitted that as the tenders were made after the expiration of the due dates and as they were made without including any interest, the lower Appellate Court was right in allowing damages.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Pabna, dated the 21st February 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Serajganj. The plaintiffs brought the suit to recover rent in arrears for the years 1317, 1318 and 1319 B. S. The amount sued for rent and cesses was Rs. 429-0-9. Rs. 104-4-0 was also claimed for damages under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The claim with regard to the rent and cesses for the year 1317 has been decreed in favour of the plaintiffs and no question has been raised in this appeal with regard to that. Therefore, the judgment appealed against with regard to the arrears of rent for 1317 must stand. The question arises with reference to the years 1318 and 1319. It is common case between both the parties that the rent in this case is payable by five kist.; namely, 10th Assar, 10th Bhadra, 10th Aswin, 25th Agrahayan and 25th Falgun. Now, the damages that have been claimed in this case are damages which the plaintiffs are entitled to and they say they are entitled to under the provisions of section 68 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that "if, in any suit brought for the recovery of arrears of rent, it appears to the Court that the defendant has without reasonable or probable cause neglected or refused to pay the amount of rent due by him, the Court may award to the plaintiff, in addition to the amount decreed for rent and costs, such damages not exceeding twenty-five per centum on the amount of rent decreed, as it thinks fit." In this case, it is common fact that the rent was tendered by money order, and the reason which the learned Judge considered made those tenders bad was that the tenders did not include interest as from the dates on which the rent became due, namely, the respective dates fixed for the payment of the rent. On what dates the rent was actually tendered through money order, does not appear from the judgments of the Courts below. But we have been handed a table which is stated to have been made from a perusal of the record. Whether that table is accurate or not we are not in a position to say. This is not a case of any contract in writing proved. The interest that the plaintiffs can claim is under and by virtue of the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that section does not provide that arrears of rent shall bear interest from the date on which the rent becomes due, but from the expiration of the quarter of the agricultural year in which the instalment falls due. It depends on what dates the tenders were made by money order. If the tender was made before the date mentioned in section 67, then no interest was due on the arrears of rent; but if it was made after that date, then interest was due and whether that was a good tender would depend on a consideration of those facts. If the tender was made before the time from which by virtue of section 67 interest commences to run, then it can hardly be said, the tenants having tendered the whole amounts of the kists due, that they under the provisions of section 68 had without reasonable or probable cause neglected or refused to pay the amounts. I think in this case the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has not considered the facts relating to the tender with reference to section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In that view, the case must go back to the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court for him to re-hear the appeal, after taking into consideration what was the date of the tender which was refused by the plaintiffs. This remand only relates to the claim for the years 1318 and 1319, the appeal as regards the claim for 1317 is dismissed. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court will also find whether on the date of the tender interest, having regard to the provisions of section 67 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, had commenced to run so that the tender was or was not a good tender by reason of its not having included any interest. The case must, therefore, go back to have the appeal, save and except as regards the claim for 1317, re-heard by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. Costs will abide the Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 156, 158—Suit for assessment of rent, whether falls under s. 156—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts—Interpretation of Statutes—Headings of chapters, value of.

In a suit under section 156 of the Agra Tenancy Act for the assessment of rent of certain land in the occupancy tenancy of the defendant who had refused to pay rent, the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any remedy under Chapter X of the Agra Tenancy Act, on the ground that the chapter was headed "Resumption of rent-free grants."

Held, (1) that reliance could not be placed upon the "headings" of chapters or descriptions given of sections in the margin of the same, especially in the case of the Agra Tenancy Act, which could not be said to be a model of good drafting; [p. 534, col. 2.]

(2) that the suit did not fall outside the scope of section 156 of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 534, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 2nd May 1916.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. Durga Charan Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by Musammat Ajnasi Kuar and another against Payag Singh. In the plaint which Musammat Ajnasi Kuar filed in the Revenue Court she described her suit as a suit for assessment of rent under section 150/156 of Act No. II of 1901, or assessment of revenue under section 150/158 of Act No. II of 1901. She goes on to say that until the last Settlement the defendant was in possession of the land in dispute as a tenant by paying rent to the plaintiffs' ancestor and to the plaintiffs. He was in possession as an occupancy tenant. At the last Settlement the name of the defendant was, by mistake, entered as the purchaser of shankalp property. Since that date or thereabouts the defendant on the strength of the wrong entry has denied responsibility for paying rent and the plaintiffs pray that a rent of Rs. 26-2-0 a year or as much as the Court may deem proper be assessed on the land in dispute under section 150/156. She also prayed for an alternative relief, she asked that revenue might be assessed on the plots of land in dispute under section 150/156 of Act No. II of 1901. There can be no doubt that what the plaintiff intended and aimed at was relief to be granted her under section 156 or section 158 of Act No. II of 1901. In the written statement the defendant, as his written statement shows, fully realized this and contended that the suit under section 150/156 was not cognizable by the Revenue Court. He set up other allegations, such as that he was Zamindar in proprietary possession of the property in dispute; that the plaintiff had admitted the defendant was in possession free from payment of rent, etc. The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the defendant was an occupancy tenant and fixed Rs. 20 per year as the rent of the holding in suit.

The matter went in appeal to the District Judge of Benares and before that Court several pleas were taken. Among them was a plea to the effect that Chapter X of the Rent Act was not applicable. The lower Appellate Court took up this plea and held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any remedy under Chapter X of the Tenancy Act and refused to decide any issue arising between the parties. Its main reason for arriving at this conclusion is that section 156 of Act No. II of 1901 comes within a chapter which is headed "Resumption of rent-free grants". This Court has elsewhere pointed out that reliance cannot be placed upon the "headings" of chapters or descriptions given of sections in the margin of the same. I think this applies with peculiar force to such headings, etc., in an Act such as Local Act No. II of 1901, which cannot be held to be a model of good drafting. The matter in dispute had been clearly put and clearly met and does not seem to be beyond the provisions of section 156 as they stand in the Act. The subject-matter of the suit was land not liable to resumption under section 154 or land to which the provisions of section 158 applied. The issue was, whether it was liable to assessment of rent or not? I set aside the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the preliminary point and return the case to the lower Appellate Court with directions to re-admit the appeal upon the list of pending appeals and dispose of it according to law. Costs will follow the event.

These appeals and the memorandum of objections filed by the 2nd respondent in Appeal No. 277 of 1916 coming on for hearing on the 6th and 7th August 1917 and the case having stood over for consideration till the 13th August 1917, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, the 1st and 2nd defendants are the sons of one Mahalinga Sivan. The father and sons entered into a partition of their properties in the year 1911 and signed a deed in that behalf. When it was sought to register it, the first defendant refused to consent to the registration on the ground that some of the schedules to the deed were inserted without his knowledge. Thereupon, the father and the plaintiff applied for registration under section 35 of the Registration Act, and the document was registered. The father died subsequently, having subsequent to the registration made a Will of the properties allotted to him in the partition deed in favour of the 1st defendant.

In the present suit the plaintiff alleges that the deed of partition is void and of no effect, that the Will of the father is inoperative, and that he is entitled to his share on the footing that the family is undivided.

The Subordinate Judge held that the parties became divided in status by the deed of partition. There are two appeals before us; one by the plaintiff contesting the finding as to division and claiming a share in certain moveables, and the other by the 1st defendant disputing the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that certain properties were not his self-acquisitions.

The appeal of the plaintiff was argued first, as the points raised went to the root of the case. Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar in an exhaustive argument contended that the partition deed, Exhibit B, did not effect a severance of status. His chief contention was that the document quoad the immoveable property was not receivable in evidence. In answer to the suggestion that the document contained a declaration of intention by his client and the father that they resolved to get themselves separated from the 1st defendant, the learned Vakil argued that as the document was intended to express a declaration consented to by all the parties, it was ineffective to evidence a unilateral declaration; and he cited Si a-sami Chetti v. Serugan Chetti (1) in support of his position. As pointed out in Ullattil Kalathil Nethiri Menon v. Mullapulli Gopalan Nair (2), there is no irrebuttable presumption that a document intended to be executed by more than one person should not be construed as evidencing a contract by some only of the interded executants who have signed the deed. In the present case, despite the disclaimer by the 1st defendant, the plaintiff and his father insisted on giving effect to the arrangement to which they were parties. We are unable to hold, therefore, that the document cannot be looked into to ascertain the intention of the executants. In this view it is unnecessary to consider how far the decisions of this Court in Pothi Naicken v. Nagama Naicker (3) and Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periasami Koundan (4) are reconcilable with the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (5). In the latter case, the Privy Council seems to suggest that although an unregistered deed of partition may not serve to operate as a conveyance of the shares allotted, it would be evidence of a severance of status. The case before us is stronger than the one before the Judicial Committee, where the document was registered at the instance of two of the executants. Under section 35 of the Registration Act, such registration is sufficient to affect the interest of the consenting parties. In the Registration Act of 1877, there was a prohibition in general terms against the registration of a document where the executants denied execution. It was contended, under that Act, that if any one of the executants denied execution the document should not be registered at all. In Muhammad Euaz v. Brij Lal (6) to which our attention was drawn by the learned Vakil for the respondent, the Privy Council referred to section 24 of the Act as indicating that the document may be registered at different times, and held that the words in the Registration Act should be read distributively and that so far as the parties asking for registration are concerned, they are entitled to it although others may not consent to it. Since this decision was passed, the Legislature amended section 35 by inserting the words "as to the person so denying appearing or dead." Thus Legislative sanction has been given to the pronouncement in Muhammad Euaz v. Brij Lal (6).

Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar put forward an ingenious contention that although the Registering Officer was bound to register the deed, it was a nullity quoad the property comprised in it was concerned. His argument was that as the origin of the document was in consent, its partial registration was not capable of carrying out any division between the parties. We are unable to agree with him. If we accept his contention, we must hold that the Legislature introduced a provision which is not only ineffective, but may easily prove mischievous. Muhammad Euaz v. Brij Lal (6) itself points out that the document is receivable in evidence under section 49 of the Registration Act.

This conclusion would have been enough to dispose of the appeal, had the case not been complicated by the specific bequest made by the father to the 1st defendant. The father regarded himself as divided from his sons in respect of the specific properties allotted to him in the schedule and willed them away in favour of the 1st defendant. Although Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar did not seriously contest the suggestion that this Will may be taken as operating upon the share of the father and not on the specific properties, we are not prepared, as at present advised, to assent to the proposition that a testamentary disposition of specific properties may be utilised for proving the bequest of the share to be allotted to the deceased, in case it is found that the testator is not entitled to the specific properties, but only to a share as a tenant-in-common. The analogy of a mortgage of specific properties attaching to the share of a co-parcener ascertained in partition was referred to, but we do not like to rest the present case upon that analogy. Therefore, although we have come to the conclusion that the father and sons became tenants-in-common from the date of the registration of Exhibit B, we think that unless there was an allotment of shares, the plaintiff will be entitled to have his share given to him by a division by metes and bounds. But, we think, that step has become unnecessary, in view of the consideration which we shall presently set out.

It is settled law now that a father can effect a partition between himself and his sons with or without their consent. Kandasami v. Doraisami Ayyar (7), which enunciates this rule of Hindu law, has been accepted in Murugayya v. Palaniyandi (8) and in Aiyavier v. Subramania Iyer (9). What happened in the present case amounts to the effecting of a division by the father between himself and his sons by the exercise of the powers conferred on him. No doubt, originally the partition was intended to be by consent, but when the father found that one of his sons was recalcitrant, he insisted on the partition being given effect to and asked the Registrar to register it. This is tantamount to imposing his will on his sons with a view to effect a division of the ancestral properties. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar contended that as the father did not expressly declare that he was exercising his prerogative, it would be reading a great deal too much into his conduct, if we hold that the partition was brought about by his superior will against the protest of the 1st defendant. We see no force in this contention. The Judicial Committee pointed out in Bijraj Nopani v. Sreemutty Pura Sundari Dasee (10) that where an act is done which is not wholly valid upon the capacity expressly named, but is justifiable upon a latent capacity which was not specifically referred to the transaction would be upheld as having been brought about in the latter capacity. Applying that principle, we must hold that when the father notwithstanding the demur of the 1st defendant insisted on the registration of the partition deed, he exercised the power given to him by the Hindu Law to effect a partition against the will of his sons.

In this view, the properties willed away by the father rightly vested in the 1st defendant, and the plaintiff can be compelled to accept the properties allotted to him. The fact that he was a consenting party to the registration makes his position worse. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to claim a division by metes and bounds.

We now proceed to deal with the appeals in so far as they deal with specific items.

As regards ground 13 we see no reason to differ from the Subordinate Judge; there is a clause in the partition deed that properties bona fide omitted should not be claimed by the parties thereto. The plaintiff has alleged no ground of surprise or fraud; consequently he is not entitled to the property covered by this ground of appeal. Ground No. 15 refers to the omission of the 1st defendant to collect the full amount of a certain debt. It is not argued that the 1st defendant acted maliciously. He seems to have acted in the best interest of the family, and we think the Subordinate Judge is right in refusing to give plaintiff any decree against the 1st defendant in this respect. As regards ground No. 23 it is to be noticed that the claim was made in the plaint (see Schedule E to the plaint). A sum of Rs. 1,200 was set apart to be spent by the father in taking proceedings to collect outstandings. The plaintiff is entitled to any sum that may remain unspent out of the said Rs. 1,200. There must be an enquiry by the Subordinate Judge as to how much of the Rs. 1,200 was utilised by the father for taking proceedings against debtors. As regards item 7 of Schedule D-2 it is conceded by the learned Vakil for the respondent that there must be a declaration that the amount of this decree is recoverable solely by the plaintiff. As regards item 2 of Schedule D-2 the case of the plaintiff is that that sum was collected by the father; there is the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 to support the plaintiff. The 1st defendant in his deposition does not deny that item 2 was collected by the father; but it has been pointed out that the amount was collected during the lifetime of the father and that no demand was made by the plaintiff for his share from the father. Under these circumstances we are not prepared to say that the money, even if collected by the father, has been traced to the possession of the 1st defendant. As regards moveables the Subordinate Judge is clearly wrong in shutting out evidence. His view that the recital that the moveables were already divided is a term of the document is clearly erroneous. It is unfortunate that we should be obliged to remand the case for further enquiry on that ground; but we are unable to resist the contention of the appellant that he is entitled to show that notwithstanding the recital in the document the moveables belonging to the family were not wholly divided. We must, therefore, ask the Subordinate Judge to return a finding on fresh evidence whether any moveables belonging to the family were left undivided. If so, what their value is and who is in possession of them.

As regards the memorandum of objection by the 2nd defendant, although he may not strictly be entitled to a decree in this suit, having regard to the fact that this litigation should not be protracted any further, we think it necessary that there should be a finding as regards item No. 37 of Schedule 2. Issue No. 10 claims in the alternative either the particular item or its value if it has been realised before. We must, therefore, ask for a finding upon that issue specifically from the Subordinate Judge on the evidence on record.

Now we turn to the appeal of the 1st defendant. We think the Subordinate Judge has given very good reasons for disallowing the items claimed by the 1st defendant in this appeal. The most material property is contained in Schedule A-3. In the partition deed it is stated that a sum of about Rs. 15,000 and odd was due to the family under a decree, that the father should, if he collects the amount, pay the share of the sons or if he purchases the mortgaged property, he should divide that property among the sons. The father, instead of himself purchasing the mortgaged properties, had them conveyed in the name of the 1st defendant. The 1st defendant says that he is only liable to give the plaintiff a share of the decree amount, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to any share of the properties purchased by him. His argument was two-fold. In the first place the father did not purchase but he purchased. Consequently the condition in the partition deed is not operative against him. In the second place, the learned Vakil for the appellant contended that an option was reserved to the father to purchase the property and if he did not exercise the option and allowed the 1st defendant to purchase, the plaintiff can have no cause of action against the latter. We feel no hesitation in holding that the father connived at the 1st defendant becoming the purchaser. He had made a Will of his properties in favour of the 1st defendant and was greatly attached to him. In our opinion the conduct of the father amounts to a fraud upon his powers. Where an authority is given to a particular individual to be exercised for the benefit of a number of persons and the owner of the authority fraudulently exercises it in favour of one of them, and that one is aware of the full significance of the power, he should not be entitled to take advantage of the benefit secured by fraud to which he had consented. In Farwell on Powers it is stated that even where the person in whose favour the fraud was committed was unaware of the fraud, he must not be allowed to take advantage of it. The case is stronger where the party benefiting by the fraud is fully aware of the motive operating upon the donee of the power. See 23 Halsbury, page 16, sections 111—113, and Farwell on Powers, pages 77 et seq. We think the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the plaintiff is entitled to a share of the A-3 Schedule properties purchased by the 1st defendant. We also agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that it has not been proved that anything more than Rs. 3,750 was paid in addition to the amount due under the mortgage decree. He has given excellent reasons for his conclusion and we see no reason for differing from him.

We also agree with the Subordinate Judge in his finding upon Issue No. 10-B. The evidence let in on behalf of the 1st defendant that the difference between the amount due from the Thambiran and the sum of Rs. 3,000 and odd due from Visvanathier was reserved by the father for adjusting inequalities in the partition is absolutely worthless. We must, therefore, uphold the decree of the Subordinate Judge in this behalf. The decree of the Subordinate Judge requires a slight modification. The decree should declare that the plaintiff is entitled to proceed against the assets of the deceased father Mahalinga Sivan in the hands of defendants Nos. 1 and 3 instead of making the 1st defendant alone liable for the amount and the other sums decreed against him. We also think that no good grounds have been shown for awarding interest against the 1st defendant at the rate of 12 per cent. There is no issue as to whether any interest was due at all.

We think on the whole that interest should run from June 1913 at the rate of six per cent. on the sums awarded to the plaintiff against the 1st defendant. Subject to this modification we dismiss Appeal No. 212 with costs. The findings in Appeal No. 277 should be submitted within 2 months from this date and 7 days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order dated the 13th August 1917 contained in the judgment herein, the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam submitted the following

FINDING.—In this case I have been asked by the High Court to receive evidence and submit a finding on the following issue:—

“Whether any moveables belonging to the family were left undivided, and if so, what their value is and who is in possession of them”

I have also been asked to submit a finding upon the evidence on record, on the following issue: “Was item 37 of the Schedule D due at the time of division or has it been realised even before?”

As regards the 2nd issue I have stated in paragraph 26 of my judgment that it was for plaintiff to prove that item No. 37 of Schedule D was an outstanding debt on the date of Exhibit B, and that upon the evidence given by him I was not at all satisfied that the amount was outstanding and that plaintiff and 2nd defendant were entitled to a share in it. The Vakil for the plaintiff stated that he was not interested in this item and that the matter was one between defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The 2nd defendant who appeared in person stated that he accepted the finding already recorded by me and referred to above, and the Vakil for the 1st defendant also stated that the finding already recorded was acceptable to him.

So far as the question of division of moveables goes

For the reasons above given and for the reasons already given by me in paragraphs 12, 15 and 37 of my judgment I find this issue against plaintiff and in the negative.

Although there is no reference in the order, the judgment upon which the order is based wants me “to hold an enquiry as to how much of Rs. 1,200, which was set apart for the purpose of being spent by the father for taking proceedings against debtors, was spent.” The Vakil for the 1st defendant contended that I was to be guided by the order and not by the judgment, and the Vakil for the plaintiff stated that he wanted time to get the order amended in terms of the judgment. The Vakil for the 1st defendant then stated that he had no objection to have the question determined when the final decree was passed, in case the High Court wanted this to be done. To this course the Vakil for the plaintiff agreed.

The Appeal No. 277 of 1916 and the memorandum of objections filed by the 2nd respondent, coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred to by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The finding of the Subordinate Judge as regards moveables is amply supported by the evidence referred to by him. We see no reason to differ from him. We also agree with his suggestion that the right of the parties to the whole or such portion of the Rs. 1,200 not utilised by the father should be adjusted in passing the final decree; subject to this reservation and to the modification as regards item 7 of Schedule D-2 contained in the judgment, the appeal is dismissed with costs of the 1st respondent.

We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the Subordinate Judge's statement in the finding that the parties agreed to accept his previous finding regarding item 37 of Schedule D. We dismiss the memorandum of objections in the above appeal with the costs of the 1st respondent.

Defamation—Defamatory words used in complaint—Privilege, defence of—Damages, suit for, whether maintainable—English Law, rule of, applicability of, to India.

So far as a civil suit for damages is concerned, defamatory words used by a party in a complaint to a Criminal Court are absolutely privileged and are not actionable. [p. 542, cols. 1 & 2.]

There is no Statute in India dealing with civil liability for defamation. The rules to be applied, therefore, are the rules of equity, justice and good conscience which has been interpreted by the Privy Council to mean the rules of English Law if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances; and as there is nothing in the circumstances and society of this country that would make it improper or inadvisable to apply the English rule, what is sound public policy in England is equally sound policy in India and the rule of English Law is in accordance with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. [p. 541, col. 2; p. 542, col. 1.]

There is no support for the plea that a criminal enactment can be interpreted as amending the civil law by implication, though it may be anomalous that a party should be criminally punishable and yet be not civilly liable. [p. 542, col. 1.]

The civil and criminal law and procedure do not coincide but are independent of each other. [p. 541, col. 1.]

In a civil action for libel the plea of mere truth is, if established, a complete defence. In a criminal charge it is not so, for the accused has further to prove the fact that it was for the public good that the imputation was made or published. [p. 541, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellant.

Sir Sundar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a civil action for damages for defamation, the facts of which are briefly as follows:—

The defendant, who is the appellant before us, was prosecuted in a Criminal Court for an offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. The plaintiff, who is a Pleader, appeared to defend him. The Court allowed bail and the plaintiff stood surety for the defendant to the extent of Rs. 100. Not being sure of his client, however, he asked the Court to allow Rs. 100 to be deposited in cash. The prayer was granted. The defendant produced the cash giving it to the plaintiff and it was actually deposited on the same date, August 22nd, 1913, in the Sub-Treasury at Shikohabad. There was some error in the usual procedure for the depositing of money and the full number of acknowledgments was not issued.

On the 4th September 1913 the case was heard and the defendant acquitted. On that date, however, he employed another Pleader; on 17th September 1913 he filed a petition stating that no receipt had been issued by the Treasury and he was in doubt as to whether the money had actually been deposited by the plaintiff. He asked for inquiry to be made from the Tahsildar. Inquiry was ordered and made and on September 22nd, 1913, the Court received a reply that the money had actually been deposited on August 22nd. Without first inquiring from the Court the result of the inquiry ordered, the defendant, on September 24th, 1913, filed a written complaint in the Court of the District Magistrate charging the plaintiff with having committed the offences of cheating and criminal breach of trust in respect to the sum of Rs. 100.

The District Magistrate issued no process on this complaint, but made a preliminary inquiry and dismissed it on ascertaining the fact as to the deposit. The plaintiff thereupon prosecuted the defendant in a Criminal Court. For reasons with which we are not concerned, the defendant was acquitted.

The plaintiff then filed the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to recover Rs. 1,000 as damages for defamation. The Courts below have decreed the claim to the extent of Rs. 200. Hence the present appeal by the defendant.

The plea raised on his behalf is that in a civil action arising out of facts such as have been found in the present case, the defendant has an absolute privilege and is absolutely protected by the law from a civil action for damages for defamation.

For the plaintiff it is urged that in such a case there is no absolute privilege but only a qualified privilege and that as the defendant did not act in good faith he is not protected. There being a conflict of rulings on the point, the case has been referred to this Full Bench for decision.

We deem it necessary, in view of certain arguments that have been raised before us in regard to the criminal law of defamation, to emphasize in the forefront of our judgment that we are "not" here concerned with libel as a criminal offence, but only with the civil wrong and the right to redress in a civil action. The civil and the criminal law and procedure do not, in our opinion, coincide but are independent of each other. We may quote as an instance one admitted difference between the civil and the criminal law. In a civil action the plea of mere truth is, if established, a complete defence. In a criminal charge it is not so, for the accused has further to prove the fact that it was for the public good that the imputation was made or published. We, therefore, restrict ourselves to the civil wrong and the right to redress in a civil action. Next, it is clear (and is also admitted before us) that the English rule of law on the point for decision is well established and beyond discussion and that under that rule the appellant before us would be absolutely protected. It is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the English decisions on a principle which has been accepted for generations and has never been questioned in England. It has been recognised by Indian Judges. It has to be conceded before us that the High Courts of Bombay and Madras have applied it without hesitation and that the latter has even gone to the extent of applying it to criminal cases, on the correctness of which we abstain from expressing any opinion.

There is no Statute in India dealing with civil liability for defamation. We have, therefore, to apply the rules of equity, justice and good conscience. This has been interpreted by the Privy Council in Waghela Rajsauji v. Shekh Masudin (1), to mean the rules of English Law if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent it is urged that in the present instance the rule of English Law is inapplicable to the circumstances of this country and that whatever may have been the rule applied prior to 1860, the Legislature in introducing the Penal Code in that year did not apply the rule of English Law to criminal cases and may be said, by implication, to have amended the civil law. Reliance has been placed on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Agada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (2) and on the dictum in Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mukarji (3).

Reference has also been made to several decisions in criminal cases, but we decline to discuss them for the reasons already given. In regard to the first part of the argument the learned Advocate for the respondent has failed to show us what there is in the circumstances and society of this country that would make it improper or inadvisable to apply the English rule. It is suggested that the mass of the population is uneducated and more impulsive and sensitive and, therefore, more likely to take the law into its own hands if it cannot get redress for defamation and that, therefore, it would not be sound public policy to enforce the English rule. We do not think that these are weighty reasons. The English Law does not seek to protect dishonest parties, witnesses or Advocates; but deems it a lesser evil that they should escape than that the great majority of honest parties, witnesses and Advocates should be exposed to vexatious actions. Unless it can be said that the great majority of these classes in India is dishonest, there can be no good reason against applying the same rule in this country. Needless to say this has not been urged before us and in this instance we consider that what is sound public policy in England is equally sound policy in India and that the rule of English Law is in accordance with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

The dictum of the Privy Council in the case of Baboo Gunnesb Dutt Singh v. Mangneeram Chowdhry (4) supports us; that in Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mukarji (3) is based on vague and indefinite grounds.

We cannot agree with the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Augada Ram Shahu v. Nemai Chand Shaha (2). It appears to be based upon the assumption that there was no law of defamation in India before the Penal Code. This is not the case, for there are reported decisions on the subject in this province as far back as 1852. Moreover, the learned Judges applied the test of the criminal law to the civil law, whereas we hold that the two are independent of each other.

Lastly the plea that a criminal enactment can be interpreted as amending the civil law by implication stands unsupported. It may be anomalous that a party should be criminally punishable and yet be not civilly liable in a case like the present, but it is not the only anomaly in this branch of the law.

We, therefore, hold that defamatory words used on such an occasion as is alleged (4) 11 B. L. R. 321; 17 W. R. 283 (P. C.).

by the plaintiff in this suit are not actionable on the ground of absolute privilege and that the present suit fails.

We allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the suit. In view of the circumstances of the case the parties will abide their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Musammat SHAMS-UL-NISA—DEFENDANT

—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal, delay in filing—Sufficient cause—Mistake of legal adviser.

A legal adviser's mistake, in order to justify an extension of the period prescribed for presenting an appeal, must be a bona fide one; and nothing can be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention. [p. 543, col. 2.]

Presentation of an appeal to a Court which has obviously no jurisdiction to entertain it is not a bona fide mistake. [p. 543, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Delhi, dated the 7th August 1915, rejecting the application.

Mr. Ralli, for the Appellants.

Mr. Santanam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In 1900 Musammat Shamas-ul-Nisa and her sisters instituted a suit claiming their shares in their father's property. This suit was decided in 1907 and the plaintiffs were given a 1/13th share each, the decree in their favour being maintained by the Chief Court on appeal by its order of 15th November 1909.

Musammat Shams-ul-Nisa's share, viz., 1/13th was valued at Rs. 7,370 and in execution she was awarded $\frac{1}{2}$ share in a garden named Ghazi-ud-din Bagh value Rs. 4,000 and Katra Reori valued at Rs. 4,000. She was to pay the difference of Rs. 1,130. The other side were not content with this division and came again to the Chief Court when she was awarded 5/6ths of the said garden value Rs. 7,500 and was to pay back Rs. 130.

In the meantime she had obtained possession of Katra Reori.

After the decision by the Chief Court the properties were made over according to the directions.

Malak Ahmad Hassan, the present appellant, then sued Musammatt Shams-ul-Nisa for Rs. 1,276-8 0, alleging that this was the amount she had realized as rents during her occupation. The suit was dismissed as being barred by section 144, Civil Procedure Code, and thereupon Malak Ahmad Hassan made an application under that section. The learned Subordinate Judge refused to grant the application on 7th August 1915, holding that as the lady was entitled to the profits derived from the garden which had remained in the applicant's possession he had no claim for the rents of this property.

The present appellant then preferred an appeal from that order in the Court of the Additional Judge, Delhi, who on the 26th January 1916 returned the appeal on the ground that it lay to this Court and not to the District Court.

Malak Ahmad Hassan thereupon lodged the appeal here on 23th February 1916 through Mr. Ralli.

Mr. Santanam for the respondent raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the appeal was barred by time.

The important dates are:—

(1) Date of decision by first Court—7th August 1915.

(2) Date of filing appeal in District Court—1st October 1915.

(3) Date of returning appeal—26th January 1916.

(4) Date of filing in this Court—28th February 1916.

It was urged that the appeal clearly lay to the Chief Court, inasmuch as the suit out of which this application had arisen was valued at over Rs. 9,000 and had on two occasions been up before the Chief Court. Further that even if the mistake was excusable, there had been great delay in filing the appeal in the Chief Court after it had been returned for that purpose by the Additional Judge. Sant Singh v.

Qaim (1), Mohamda v. Ludha Singh (2), Dhampat Mal v. Mela Mal (3) and Resal Singh v. Shadi (4) were referred to, and it was sought to distinguish Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (5) relied on by Mr. Ralli. Although this last case is not on all fours with the present one, there can be no doubt that the principle therein enunciated is applicable and of course by this decision I am bound. If the time taken by the appellant in prosecuting the abortive appeal to the Additional Judge can be allowed to him, the appeal must be allowed to be in time inasmuch as after deducting the period from 1st October 1915 to 26th January 1916 the prescribed limitation has not been exceeded.

The question is whether the said period can be allowed, and this involves the question whether a mistake in law must in every case be regarded per se as a sufficient reason for exercising the discretion under section 5 of the Limitation Act.

Mr. Ralli, if I understand him aright, would contend that in Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (5) it was laid down that every mistake in law must be accepted as a sufficient excuse for the delay. In this I am unable to concur.

As was held in Resal Singh v. Shadi (4), a legal adviser's mistake, in order to justify an extension of time, must be a bona fide one. In the present case it is difficult to understand how any one who had used due care and attention could have imagined that the appeal lay to the Additional Judge, and nothing shall be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention.

On two separate occasions the same case had been up before this Court, the question of jurisdiction was patent and a mere cursory examination of the past proceedings would have shown that the appeal could not lie to any other Court. Mr. Ralli never suggested that there could have been any real doubt as to the course of appeal.

In these circumstances I must hold that the appellant is not entitled to be given credit for the period between 1st October 1915 and 26th January 1916.

I have the less hesitation in coming to this decision, as in my opinion the order complained of is equitable. If the appellant is entitled to the profits of this Katra, Musammal Shams-ul-Nisa is equally entitled to the profits of the garden and as the valuation of the properties is approximately the same, profits may fairly be calculated as equal also.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), ss. 111, 112, 132, 133—Partition, suit for—Objection by persons not recorded co-sharers, whether maintainable—Appeal, forum of—Jurisdiction.

In a partition suit of certain land, trees and wells, the defendants objected to the partition on the ground that when their ancestors sold the village, they reserved to themselves and their heirs the said land, etc. The Assistant Collector decided in favour of the objectors, overruling the plaintiff's plea that defendants not being recorded co-sharers had no locus standi to object to the partition. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge, who allowed it on the ground that the objectors not being recorded co-sharers could not object under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act.

Held, that the defendants not being recorded co-sharers, sections 111 and 112 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act had no application to the case and that no appeal, therefore, lay to the District Judge.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 29th March 1917.

Mr. K. N. Baghate, for the Appellants.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Radha Charan applied to the Revenue Court for partition and notices were accordingly issued on his application. Labhu and others objected to the partition of some land, trees, wells, etc., on the ground that when their ancestors sold the village to the ancestor of the applicant the vendors reserved to themselves and their heirs the said lands, trees, wells, etc., free of revenue. The applicant met the objection by raising various pleas, one of which was that the objectors not being recorded co-sharers had no locus standi. The Assistant Collector disallowed the plea and proceeded with the application for partition and the consideration of the merits of the objection under clause 3 of section 111 of the Land Revenue Act. He decided in favour of the objectors. Radha Charan preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge, who allowed the appeal on the ground that the objectors not being recorded co-sharers could not be heard. The objectors have come up in appeal to this Court and contend that no appeal lay to the District Judge, inasmuch as on the plea of the applicant they, the objectors, were not recorded co-sharers and could not object under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act; the appeal should have been preferred to the Collector or the Commissioner under the other provisions of the Land Revenue Act. In support of this contention they rely on the following cases, Habib Ullah v. Kushimba (1) and Tota Ram v. Musammal Sahodra (2). Both these cases bear out the contention of the appellants. I, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the lower Court's order and direct that the memorandum of appeal be returned to the respondent to be presented to the proper Court. Costs are allowed to the appellant.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 49, whether applies to under-raiyat with right of occupancy—Under raiyat whether can acquire right of occupancy. An under-raiyat can by usage or custom obtain a right of occupancy. [p. 545, col. 2.]

Section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot apply to an under-raiyat who has got a right of occupancy. [p. 546, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the Sub-Judge, Faridpore, dated the 23rd December 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, Bhanga, dated the 6th May 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Chander Sen, for the Appellant.—Section 4 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which gives a classification of tenants, does not recognise an under-raiyat with a right of occupancy; the classes of tenants mentioned there are exhaustive; therefore, illustration (2) to section 183, when it speaks of an under-raiyat acquiring a right of occupancy by custom or usage, is in contravention of and inconsistent with the provisions of section 4. Section 113 no doubt mentions an under-raiyat with a right of occupancy, but those words were added subsequent to the passing of the Act as it originally stood, and it is probable that the Bengal Legislature in inserting the said provisions in section 113 was guided by the erroneous illustration (2) to section 183, which illustration was inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. There are no provisions in the Act relating to the incidents as to enhancement, etc., relating to an under-raiyat having a right of occupancy; this also shows that the Legislature never contemplated such a right. In Act X of 1859 and Act VIII (B.C.) of 1869, i. e., the previous Acts relating to the law of landlord and tenant, a person holding under an occupancy raiyat could not acquire a right of occupancy; there was, therefore, no such law and there was no such custom or usage.

Section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not limited in its application but applies to all kinds of under-raiyats.

Babu Girija Prosanna Roy Chowdhury, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Faridpore, dated the 23rd December 1915, reversing the decision of the Munsif at Bhanga. Mr. Sen who appears in support of the appeal considers that the case is one of importance and difficulty. Of course, in a matter dealing with a question coming under the Bengal Tenancy Act, on account of Mr. Sen's great knowledge in this matter, one always pays great attention to what he says. But having listened to his arguments, it seems to me that the case is one of great simplicity. The question is, "can an under-raiyat by usage or custom obtain a right of occupancy?" Mr. Sen says he cannot. The Legislature of the country have said that he can. Therefore, one has got to decide, whether the Indian Legislature, when they gave the second illustration of section 183 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which expressly shows that an under-raiyat may by usage or custom obtain a right of occupancy, gave an illustration opposed to the provisions of the Act. Section 183 is a saving clause and it says that nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act shall affect any custom, usage or customary right not inconsistent with or not expressly or by necessary implication modified or abolished by its provisions. The second illustration is one showing that an under-raiyat may acquire by custom or usage a right of occupancy. The saving section means this: that the provisions of the Act shall not affect any right, amongst other things, that an under-raiyat has by usage or custom and, therefore, if by usage or custom it is duly proved that an under-raiyat has acquired a right of occupancy, section 183 says that that shall not be affected unless it is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. The section that it is said it is inconsistent with is section 4, which defines the classes of tenants under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and, amongst those tenants, there are raiyats and under-raiyats. A person may be an under-raiyat to whom a special usage or custom applies, out he still remains an under-raiyat. It seems to me that it is quite impossible to say on reading section 183 and the provisions of the Act that an under-raiyat cannot by usage or custom obtain a right of occupancy.

There is another matter, and that is that section 113 expressly makes mention of an under-raiyat having occupancy rights. The criticism that Mr. Sen makes on that is that that was not in the original draft as passed by the Indian Legislature but is only an amendment by the Bengal Legislature. Still the Bengal Legislature were within their powers in making the amendment and there does not seem to be any reason for supposing that when they made that amendment they did not recognise that an under-raiyat could have no occupancy right.

The next point that is raised is that, even if an under-raiyat has a right of occupancy, still he is liable to be ejected after notice to quit under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That is clearly not so. That would mean that section 49 would affect a custom, usage or customary right not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act by which an under-raiyat may have a right of occupancy. I think that section 49 cannot apply to an under-raiyat who has got a right of occupancy.

Then it was finally said that in this case the presumption applied by reason of the entry in the Record of Rights was rebutted. That is a question of fact and it was clearly within the competence of the learned Judge of the Court below.

I may mention that Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the case of Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Hasan Ali Sadagar (1) expressly stated that by a special usage or custom an under-raiyat might under certain circumstances have a right of occupancy. That seems to me to be in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The present appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

The house of an agriculturist is liable to sale in execution of a decree on foot of a mortgage made by him, when such house is not an appurtenance of his holding which he is forbidden by law to transfer. [p. 548, col. 1.]

The manager of a Hindu joint family, which owned a house in a town and lived by cultivation of an occupancy holding, executed a mortgage of the house in favour of the plaintiff. The mortgagor died and the plaintiff brought a suit for the sale of the house against the remaining members of the joint family, who contended that as they and their ancestors were cultivators and the house in dispute was used in connection with their cultivation, its hypothecation could not be valid according to law and no decree could be passed in respect thereto.

Held, that the house being situated in a town and there being nothing to show that it passed to the defendants as an appendage or adjunct of the tenure or that there was any connection whatsoever between the two, it could not be held to be appurtenant to their occupancy holding. [p. 548, col. 1.]

In a joint Hindu family consisting of brothers and their families, an antecedent debt incurred by a brother in the position of a manager is not binding upon his other co-parceners, unless it can be shown to have been incurred for family necessity. It is not the pious duty of brothers or nephews to pay debts incurred by their brothers or uncles. [p. 547, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the First Additional Judge, Aligarh, dated the 3rd of May 1916.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mohan Lal Sandal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance. It was dismissed by the Court below. The facts are simple. There was a joint family of which the managing members were Kanhaiya and Ram Sarup. This family owned a house in the town of Babu Pura in the District of Bulandshahar. The family lived by cultivation in the year 1905, being the owners of an occupancy tenure. On the 31st of NIRBHAY LAL C. KALLAN.

July 1905 Kanhaiya and Ram Sarup executed a mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiffs for the sum of Rs. 200 and in that bond they mortgaged the house in the above-mentioned town in which the family lived. Of the Rs. 200, Rs. 100 was paid in cash on behalf of the family to the landlord as rent due on the holding, the other Rs. 100 is entered in the bond as being an antecedent debt due from the family. The debt not having been paid the suit was brought. The present defendants are the remaining members of the joint family, Kanhaiya and Ram Sarup having died. They denied the execution and the alleged consideration. They further pleaded that they and their ancestors were cultivators and that the house in dispute was used "in connection with their cultivation," hence its hypothecation could not be valid according to law and no decree for sale could be passed in respect thereto. They further pleaded that the consideration of the bond had not been obtained for any family necessity such as was binding upon them. The Court of first instance held that the house was not an appurtenance to the holding. It held the execution and consideration proved. It also held that the loan had been taken for family necessity. On appeal the Additional District Judge of Aligarh held that the execution was duly proved and also the consideration. He further held that Rs. 100 that had been paid to the Zemindar as rent had been borrowed for family necessity, but there was no evidence to show that the other Rs. 100 had been taken for family necessity. He then went on to hold for certain reasons stated in his judgment that the house was an appurtenance to the holding and that, therefore, it could not be mortgaged or sold, as the occupancy holding also could not be mortgaged or sold. The suit was brought in 1915, so no money decree could be passed. The Judge, therefore, dismissed the suit.

Two points are pleaded before me. (1) That the evidence on the record accepted by the Court below taken in its entirety does not establish the fact that the house is appurtenant to the holding, and that its mortgage is perfectly a legal act and is binding upon the defendants. Next it is pleaded that the Rs. 100 which was an antecedent debt is binding upon the defendants simply because it was an antecedent debt. In regard to the latter point which I take first, little need be said. Kanhaiya and Ram Sarup were not the fathers of the present defendants. They were two out of four brothers who with their families formed the joint family. An antecedent debt incurred by a brother in the position of a manager is not binding upon his other co-parceners unless it can be shown to have been incurred for family necessity. This is not the case of a father and sons. It is not the pious duty of one brother or of nephews to pay the debts incurred by brothers or uncles. In regard to the first point it is quite clear to my mind that the lower Appellate Court is quite wrong. The judgment runs as follows:—"The last question argued is whether the house is liable to sale or not. In order to decide this point, it is necessary to settle another question, as to whether the house is appurtenant to the occupancy holding of the defendants. Patwari Ganga Prasad, who was examined by the plaintiffs, clearly states that the defendants own only one house, that is, the house in suit. He also says 'Is men rahkar kheti karte hain' (They live in it and cultivate land). Further on, he deposes that their cattle, ploughs, etc., are also kept in this house. The defendants' witnesses also say that this is the only house in which the defendants resided and kept their cattle. All the plaintiffs' witnesses depose that the defendants are occupancy tenants and the Patwari says that the holding is 29 Bighas odd in area. Under the circumstances I have no hesitation in holding that the house is appurtenant to the occupancy holding of the defendants." I have no hesitation myself in holding that these circumstances in no way prove that the house is appurtenant to the holding and that the lower Court's deduction from these circumstances is erroneous and bad. The house in question is situated in a town. The defendants no doubt earn their livelihood by cultivating land. They must live in a house just as other people who follow other professions live in houses. There is nothing to show that the house in question had any connection in any way with the holding which the defendants occupy as tenants. A man may be a labourer to-day and a cultivating tenant to-morrow. He may desert his tenure and follow a profession and may again take up a fresh tenure. There is nothing to show that this house passed to the defendants as an appendage or adjunct of the tenure or that there was any connection whatsoever between the two. It is not even a house standing upon the holding. It is situated within the town. On these facts alone to hold that the house is an appurtenance to the holding is a very bad mistake in law. The Additional District Judge quotes from a ruling at page 190 of the Allahabad Law Journal, Volume VIII [Ramdial v. Narpot Singh (1)], in the head-note of which there is a remark that "the dwelling house of an agriculturist may be deemed to be an appurtenance to his holding." It seems to me that in every case it is a question of fact whether or not it is appurtenant to the holding. The question was considered in Bhola Nath v. Kishori (2), in which a majority of the Judges who constituted the Bench held that the house of an agriculturist is liable to sale in execution of a decree on foot of a mortgage made by him, when such house is not an appurtenance of his holding which he is forbidden by law to transfer. In the present case the lower Court has clearly made a distinct error. There is no evidence on the record to establish the fact that the house is appurtenant to the holding. In this view the appeal must be allowed, but only to the extent of Rs. 100 out of the principal of Rs. 200 secured by the bond. The plaintiffs will have a decree for Rs. 100 plus interest according to the terms of the bond from the date thereof up to the date fixed for payment by sale of the house in question. I allow six months from to-day's date for payment. Future interest after the date of payment will be six per cent. simple. The parties will pay and recover costs in all Courts in proportion to success and failure. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Babu Amulya Charan Bhattacharjee for Babu Mritunjay Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 23rd July 1915, confirming the decree of the Munsif of Katwa, dated the 30th June 1914. The suit is a suit in ejectment and both the Courts below have found that the plaintiffs have a good title to the land which they claim, but that the suit is barred by limitation inasmuch as it was not instituted within 12 years of the date on which they were dispossessed. The findings of the Courts below are findings of fact and we are unable to interfere with them except so far as they are vitiated by error of law. There is only one point in the case. In respect of a portion of the disputed land it appears that while the defendants were in possession the plaintiff succeeded in ousting them. The defendants thereupon brought a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act to recover possession from the plaintiffs. It is admitted by the written statement of the defendants that in the interval, until the defendants recovered under the Specific Relief Act, the plaintiffs were in possession of this portion of the land. That being so, it is clear on the face of the record that on the question of dispossession the Courts below have overlooked the fact that possession by the true owner, however obtained, counts in his favour for the purpose of Article 142 of the Limitation Act. The appeal, therefore, succeeds to this extent.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part, the decree of the Court below will be modified and the suit dismissed except in so far as it relates to the portion of the disputed land covered by the decree in the suit under the Specific Relief Act. As regards that portion the suit will be decreed. The plaintiffs do not appear to have made this point effectively in the Courts below and we, therefore, make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed in part.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 134—Mortgage of occupancy holding to zemindar—Transfer of holding by zemindar—Redemption, suit for—Limitation.

An occupancy tenant gave a usufructuary mortgage of his holding to the zemindar, who sold his property rights including the holding to the defendant. The plaintiff brought a suit for redemption and the defendant contended that the plaintiff being an occupancy tenant and having been dispossessed for more than six years from his holding, his suit for possession was barred by time.

Held, that the suit was not one to recover possession of a holding from which the plaintiff had been unlawfully dispossessed, but was a suit by a mortgagor to recover possession of the mortgaged property from his mortgagee and certain persons to whom the mortgagee had transferred the property and as the plaintiff had not been unlawfully dispossessed from the holding, the limitation of 12 years applied from the date of transfer to defendant under Article 134 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 530, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 14th April 1916.

Mr. Ishwar Suran, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are clearly set out in the judgment of the District Judge, dated the 9th of September 1915, by which he remanded an issue to the Court of first instance. Briefly put the case is as follows. An occupancy tenant in the year 1900 gave a usufructuary mortgage of his holding to the Zemindar. About a year before this suit was brought the Zemindar sold his property rights to Abilakh and Lochan. He also relinquished his sir and khudkrisht lands in favour of his vendees. Among such lands he transferred to the vendees the property which is now in suit. The mortgagor deposited the money due under the mortgage under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act making Sheo Narain, Lochan and Abilakh all parties to his application. This was on the 17th of April 1914. As the money was not taken, he sued on the 21st of July 1914 for redemption of the mortgage and for damages. The Court below set aside the decree of the Court of first instance and decreed the plaintiff's suit, awarding the plaintiff meene profits with effect from the date of the institution of the suit. It was pleaded on behalf of the appellant that the suit is time-barred because the plaintiff is an occupancy tenant who has been dispossessed for more than six years and his suit for possession was barred by time. Attention is called to the ruling of Pahalwan Singh v Satrupa Kuar (1). This decision does not assist me in the present case at all. That was a suit by a mortgagee of an occupancy holding to recover possession of that holding when his mortgagor, the occupancy tenant, had been dispossessed by the Zemindar. There has been no unlawful dispossession in the present case. The mortgagee has made a transfer to Abilakh and Lochan of his Zemindari rights. He voluntarily and willingly gave up these lands to them

(1) 2 A. L. J. 471; A. W. N. (1905) 178.

BAPUJI NARAYAN CHITNIS v. BHAGVANT BALWANT CHITNIS.

They did not unlawfully dispossess him in any way. As against them Sheo Narain could not possibly recover possession, they being the transferees of his rights. There can be no doubt as to the mortgage and as to the transfer by Sheo Narain to Abilakh. The tenant, that is the respondent to this appeal, could not possibly recover possession without paying his money and he can only recover possession by a redemption suit. The suit is not a suit by a tenant to recover possession of a holding from which he has been unlawfully dispossessed. It is a suit by mortgagor to recover possession from his mortgagee and certain persons to whom the mortgage has transferred. The limitation of 12 years applies from the date of transfer to Abilakh and Lochan. (Article 134).

The next point which has been pressed is that the appellant is not liable for mesne profits which have been awarded by the Court below as damages. The appellant has been in possession with effect at least from the date of the suit, knowing very well that his right to retain possession was contested and with all the facts of the case before him. The profits that were in his pocket belonged prima facie to the plaintiff who had deposited the money under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. If the appellant has any remedy against Sheo Narain it is open to him to take it. I see no justice in exempting him from the decree and allowing him to keep in his pocket that which belongs to the plaintiff. There is no force in this appeal. It is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Ejectment—Title. Proof of—Burden of proof—

In a suit in ejectment the plaintiff must prove good title and there is no onus on the defendant to prove title relatively good or bad at all.

It needs twelve full years' possession to make title, and, therefore, where a plaintiff fails to prove anything more than possession within twelve years of suit, the onus is not shifted on to the defendant to prove good title.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Salara, in Appeal No. 29 of 1915, confirming the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge, Islampur, in Civil Suit No. 488 of 1911.

Mr. N. M. Samarth, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. V. Bhat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The point taken before us is that although the plaintiffs have been held by both the Courts not to have proved any title, still the fact that they were once in possession within twelve years of suit throws the onus of proving good title on the defendants. Doubtless there is some case-law authority which might be construed into supporting such a proposition. We, however, prefer to follow the simple law established ever since the English Courts settled any principles of law at all, that in a suit in ejectment the plaintiff must prove good title and that there is no onus on the defendant to prove title relatively good or bad at all. Here the plaintiffs have attempted to prove title and have proved some years' possession. But it needs twelve full years to make title. Both the Courts have found that the plaintiffs have no title. It is not disputed that that finding of fact is binding upon us, and we are unable to see how in the face of it any relief can be decreed to the plaintiffs in this form of action.

We must, therefore, dismiss the appeal with all costs.

ing appeals to the Privy Council for the purpose of preferred to the Privy Council.FACTS.—In order to set aside an ex-parte decree two suits were brought by two sets of plaintiffs. The defendants filed separate written statements. By consent of parties in both the suits the same evidence was given and the suits were tried together. The Sub-judgment. The defendant filed two appeals to the High Court. In the High Court two paper books were prepared but the evidence was printed in only one of the paper-books. The appeals were heard together and were disposed of by one judgment. The plaintiffs in each of the suits filed two separate applications for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The applications were granted as the valuation in each of the appeals was above Rs. 10,000.

The plaintiffs then made an application for consolidating the two appeals to the Privy Council and for permission to deposit only one set of security for costs.Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh, for the Appellants, submitted that although there was no express provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for consolidation of appeals, the solidate them for expediency and for the ends of justice. He relied on *Hukum Chand Boid

(1) 33 C. 927; 3 C. L. J. 67.

(2) 18 Ind. Cas. 207; 40 C. 955; 16 C. L. J. 508.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Opposite Party, contended that the High Court had no jurisdiction to consolidate separate appeals to the Privy Council for the purposes of the security for costs. The appellants in the two appeals were two distinct sets of persons, they had filed two distinct suits out of which the two separate appeals had arisen. They were liable for costs separately, therefore, they should give separate security for costs in each of the appeals as required by law. In the matter of Privy Council Appeals the Code of Civil Procedure has provided for consolidation of appeals in Order XLV, rule 4. This rule gives the High Court power to consolidate only for the purposes of pecuniary valuation and not for any other purpose. The provision contained in the rule affords a clear indication as to the intention of the Legislature to limit the jurisdiction of the High Court in matters of consolidation of Privy Council Appeals. If section 151 of the Code be invoked to enable the High Court to grant consolidation for purposes other than that laid down in Order XLV, rule 4, it would have the effect of widening the scope of the rule. The ruling relied upon by the applicants has no application to the case.ORDER.—This is an application for consolidation of two appeals to the Privy Council which arise out of the same judgment. The cases were tried together in the Court below and the appeal in this Court was heard and determined in both cases at the same time and one judgment alone was delivered. The questions in dispute in each of these appeals are substantially the same, the appellants in one case being the adult members of a family and the appellants in the other case being the minor members of that family. The only difference in the questions for determination in these two appeals is whether assuming that the adult members of the family fail to make out their case, it is still open to the minor members to contend that the sale which it is sought to have set aside is not binding upon them as they were not properly represented. We have been asked in this case, in order to save expense to all parties, to consolidate these appeals which arise out of the same judgment and decide substantially the same questions and at the same time to order that one security bond of not Rs. 4,000, which is usual in the case of these appeals, but of Rs. 6,000 should be lodged to cover the costs of the respondents in these two appeals.

It has been contended by the respondents that under the rules which govern appeals to His Majesty in Council there is no provision made for consolidating appeals except in the one case provided in Order XLV, rule 4, where power is given to consolidate appeals for the purposes of pecuniary valuation. The object of that rule is that where you have appeals from one judgment involving substantially the same question for determination before the Privy Council, although each of these appeals separately may not amount in value to the appealable minimum, yet if in the aggregate they do amount to that sum, they may be consolidated so as to bring the amount up to Rs. 10,000 and as that is the only instance which is specifically mentioned in Order XLV, it is said that we have no jurisdiction to consolidate such appeals for any other purpose. After considering the arguments which have been put before us in this case and after considering the other sections of the Code which must be read together and especially section 151, it seems to us that the power of consolidation is an inherent power of this Court, as has been decided in the case of Nand Kishore Sing v. Ram Golam Sahu (2). We think that it was not intended by Order XLV, rule 4, to limit the powers of this Court to consolidate cases to the purposes mentioned in that rule alone. In the present case, where as I have already said, these two appeals are although in form two in substance practically one, we think that in the interests of justice and to save unnecessary expense the appeals ought to be consolidated. There will, therefore, be an order that these two appeals be consolidated and tried together, and further having regard to the fact that in ordinary cases Rs. 4,000 is considered sufficient security for the costs of the respondent we think that justice will be met in this case by ordering that security be given to the extent of Rs. 6,000 by the appellants jointly to meet the costs of the respondents. The result of that will be that that security of Rs. 6,000 will be available to the respondents as against each of the appellants in the present consolidated appeal, so that if it should turn out that the respondents are successful against only one set of appellants then the whole of that security will be available to them for their costs. Let the security bond filed in this appeal be sent down to the District Judge to test and report thereon.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 151, O. XII, r. 23—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 13—Remand, order of—Refund of Court-fee—Court, duty of—Revision—High Court, powers of—Scope of s. 151.

Where an Appellate Court disposes of an appeal under rule 23 of Order XII of the Civil Procedure Code, the provisions of section 13 of the Court Fees Act automatically come into operation and the Court is bound to grant a certificate under that section. The refusal of the Court to grant the certificate amounts to a refusal to do what the law specifically says the Court must do and is either an illegality or a material irregularity within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 553, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Beaman, J.—Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code is intended to empower Courts to deal with their own decrees and orders and is not intended to give authority to superior Courts by way of conferring supplemental jurisdiction to that conferred by section 115 of the Code. [p. 553, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—I think it necessary to express my own emphatic opinion that an application of this kind is not within the scope or intention of section 151 of the BHATSING RAGHO V. CHAGANIRAM HARCHAND.

Civil Procedure Code. Nor does that section confer upon us jurisdiction to deal with errors of this kind. I think it is very clear that that section is intended to empower Courts to deal with their own decrees and orders and was not intended to give authority to superior Courts by way of conferring supplemental jurisdiction to that conferred by section 115. But I think that this is a good case under section 115. What has happened is very clear. The Trial Court held that the present applicant was not an agriculturist on the ground that the question was res judicata. On appeal, the learned Judge held that the question was not res judicata and remanded the case under Order XLI, rule 23. Of that there can be no doubt whatever. Where that happens, section 13 of the Court Fees Act makes it compulsory upon the Court to grant the certificate mentioned in that section. The Court has no discretion in the matter. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court appears to have confused the matter before him in such a way as to have entirely lost sight of the imperative requirements of section 13 of the Court Fees Act. Were it necessary to examine his reasoning, it would be, I think, very easy to show that he entirely missed the point and overlooked the obvious policy and intention of that section. It is, however, quite enough to say that as soon as he made his order of remand under Order XLI, rule 23, he was bound by section 13 of the Court Fees Act to grant the certificate which the applicant now prays for. As he refused to do, he clearly acted with illegality or with material irregularity, whichever word be preferred, and the relief which the applicant prays for must be granted, and the Court below must be directed to grant him the certificate which he asks for under section 13 of the Court Fees Act.

As the opponent, in spite of our opinion upon this point, given before he opened the argument, has elected to resist the application, in which, as far as I can see, he had no interest whatever, there is no reason why the application should not now be granted with costs against him, and I would so order. The Rule should be made absolute in the terms of the above judgment.

In respect of the remaining six applications of like nature (viz., Civil Extraordinary Applications Nos. 164 to 169 of 1917) Mr. Kane for the opponent withdraws all further opposition, and we think that, while they will all be governed by the judgment just delivered, the opponent need pay no more than his own costs in each of them. The order, therefore, at the foot of the judgment in each of those cases will be that the Rule is made absolute, each party here bearing his own costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. I say nothing as to whether the District Judge's order disposing of the appeal was correct in form or not. It has been appealed against and therefore remains. Taking it as it is, I can account for it only by supposing that it was made under rule 23 of Order XLI, because there is no other provision in the Code which empowers the Court of first appeal to set aside a decree and remand the case to be decided according to law. As it was a disposal of an appeal under rule 23 of Order XLI, the provisions of section 13 of the Court Fees Act automatically came into operation and the Appellate Court was bound to grant a certificate, and as my learned brother has said, its refusal to do that is a refusal to do what the law specifically says the Court must do and is either an illegality or a material irregularity. Therefore, the matter comes, in my opinion within section 115 of the Code. I agree entirely that it cannot come within section 151, because I feel quite sure that the powers of this Court of interfering with the orders of the subordinate Courts are to be found either in sections relating to appeal or in the section relating to revision, or, it may be, in the Charter of the High Court or the Letters Patent. And I feel perfectly certain that section 151 of the Code was not intended to extend those powers but was intended, as its words to my mind clearly indicate, to show what the Trial Court can do whilst it is seized of the case.

I think, therefore, that the order proposed is the correct order to be made in this case.

Rule made absolute.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 29, 30, 45—Compensation, apportionment of—Tenant of abadi site, whether entitled to share of compensation—Wajib-ul-arz, provisions of.

The plaintiff, a perpetual lessee of a village claimed from the defendant, a tenant, the entire compensation received by the latter under the Land Acquisition Act in respect of a house site in the abadi of the village. The village wajib-ul-arz declared the right of the defendant to occupy the site as long as he pleased, but also declared the right of the plaintiff to resume the site of the house after the occupant left the village, the latter having only the right to transfer the materials of the house.

Held, that the defendant had no interest in the land but was a mere licensee to occupy it and that he was not, therefore, entitled to any portion of the compensation awarded for the acquisition of the site under the Land Acquisition Act. [p. 554, col. 2.]

Appeal from the Court of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 27th September 1911, in Appeal No. 144 of 1911.

Mr. G. L. Subedar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this litigation is the perpetual lessee of Mauza Dhanoli on the outskirts of Nagpur town. He claims from the defendant the entire compensation received by the latter under the Land Acquisition Act in respect of a house site in the abadi of the village. The Courts below have held that the defendant has an interest in the land; the lower Appellate Court, considering his position analogous to that of an ordinary tenant, has apportioned the compensation by giving two-thirds to the plaintiff.

The material part of the lower Appellate Court's judgment runs thus:—

"No doubt the site belongs to the Malguzar and if the houses were removed the site would revert to the Malguzar, but the tenant had also got a right to occupy the site so long as his house was standing and he was in occupation of the house. Therefore, it cannot be denied that the occupant of the house had also some sort of interest in the site, however small". Both parties have appealed to this Court, each claiming the entire sum allowed by the Land Acquisition Officer. The defendant also appealed in respect of the interest which has been allowed by both the Courts below from the date on which he drew the money. Both appeals are disposed of by this judgment.

In my opinion the Courts below should have been guided by the wajib-ul-arz and the decision in Govind Rao v. Amrit Rao (1). The material passage of the wajib-ul-arz has been translated as follows:—

"The sites of houses in the village abadi shall devolve upon heirs according to custom. But no one can dispose of such sites since we, proprietors, have the ownership thereof. Every person is authorized to sell or mortgage the materials of his house on leaving the village or on any other occasion." The plain intention seems to be that once the house is removed, transferred or abandoned the Malguzar is entitled to the land. I can see no valid reason, why this intention should not govern apportionment of compensation when the land and the house are compulsorily transferred to the Government. The wajib-ul-arz recognizes not an "interest in the land" but a mere license to occupy: see Motiram v. Rup Khan (2). In England a license is not an interest in land within the meaning of section 68, Land Clauses Act, 1845, so as to give a right to compensation for "lands or any interest therein" taken for public purposes: see Frank Warr & Co. v. London County Council (3). It is true that to restore himself to the same position as he enjoyed before the site and the building thereon were acquired the defendant must find another site, but this would equally have been the case had he elected to sell the house privately. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to the whole of the compensation awarded for the site.

With regard to the claim for the interest the Courts below content themselves with holding that it is claimable from the date on which the defendant took the compensation as damages. The plaintiff, however, has not explained why he failed to appear before the Land Acquisition Officer as invited by the notices under section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act; nor does his learned Counsel in this Court cite any provision of law apart from the Interest Act, 1839, under which he can claim interest. I would, therefore, allow interest only from the date on which written notice of demand was given to the defendant. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified and costs in all the three Courts will follow the result of the cross-appeals to this Court.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 58—Execution of document—Proof—Admission—Inference drawn from matter not on record, validity of.

In a suit upon a mortgage alleged to have been executed by the father of the defendants, the latter denied all knowledge of the transaction. One of them, however, on being examined as a witness admitted that the signature on the deed was his father's. The suit had been brought on almost the last day allowed by the law of limitation, and from this the Court inferred that the plaintiff must all along have been receiving interest at the stipulated rate and that on that calculation the mortgage debt had been fully satisfied:

Held, (1) that as far as the defendant who identified his father's signature was concerned, his admission, under section 58 of the Evidence Act, relieved the plaintiff of any further responsibility of proving the mortgage-deed; [p. 555, col. 2.]

(2) that the Court had erred in law in drawing the inference as to the payment of interest from matters not in evidence before it, and that, therefore, there had been no proper trial of the suit. [p. 556, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Dhulia, in Appeal No. 354 of 1915, confirming the decree passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge, Dhulia, in Civil Suit No. 16 of 1915.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Respondent,

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—This is a very unsatisfactory case. The plaintiff sued on a mortgage. There were seven defendants, of whom four were minors, all members of a joint Hindu family. The eldest defendant professes to know his father's hand-writing. The father was the mortgagor. This defendant, being examined and shown the mortgage-deed, said that the signature was his father's. As far as he was concerned, this admission, in our opinion, would, under section 58 of the Indian Evidence Act, relieve the plaintiff of any further responsibility of proving the document. But the decision is not so clear as regards the remaining six defendants. The plaintiff in fact did intend to produce the attesting witnesses, and there was, as far as we can see, no culpable delay on his part, but on the day fixed for the hearing he said that he was ill and his witnesses were not present. Both the Courts declined to grant him any further time, and, therefore, they held that he had failed to prove the mortgage deed. That finding, in our opinion, must be wrong against defendant No. 1 at any rate. It is to be remembered that these defendants plead that they know nothing of the mortgage transaction. They do not deny that it may have taken place, nor do they anywhere allege payment. Nevertheless both the Courts have inferred, from the mere fact that the plaintiff delayed bringing his suit until almost the last day allowed him by the law of limitation, that he must have been receiving interest all that time at the rate stipulated for in the deed, and on that calculation they have reached the conclusion that the debt has been fully satisfied. Both the Courts refer to two decisions of the Allahabad High Court, Behari v. Ram Chander (1) and Balkaran Upadhyaya v. Gaya Din Kalwar (2). But without commenting upon those cases, it is clear that an inference of the kind we have just mentioned is not one which can be supported by any authority. It is in effect an inference not drawn from any evidence. It could not have been drawn from any evidence, because payment was not alleged and no enquiry was made upon the point. Drawing inferences of this kind from matters not in evidence before the Court is well settled to be an error of law. We feel no difficulty, therefore, in neglecting these concurrent findings of the two Courts below, which otherwise would no doubt conclude the case. The result is that at present, in our opinion, there has been no trial at all.

We feel, therefore, that we must reverse the decrees of the Courts below and remand the case for a proper trial upon the merits. Costs will abide the final result.

Negligence—Damages, suit for—Physical injuries caused by falling of door—Damages, measure of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI c. 17—Plaint, amendment of, for enhanced damages—Appellate Court, duty of.

In an action for damages for physical injuries caused to the plaintiff by defendant's negligence, the amount of compensation must be fair and reasonable, but an absolute compensation is not the true measure of damages. The Court should not give the value of an annuity of the same amount as the plaintiff's average income for the rest of the plaintiff's life. [p. 557, col. 1; p. 558, col. 2.]

An Appellate Court can form its own opinions on the reasons given by the lower Court for the award and measure of damages, but it should be slow to interfere unless, in its opinion, the damages awarded are clearly excessive or inadequate [p. 557, col. 1.]

In an action for damages, the Court has the power to order amendment of the plaint at any stage of the suit so as to enhance the claim for damages, if the application for amendment was made at the commencement of the trial. [p. 556, col. 2.]

The plaintiff, a lad of 16 who was a student in one of the lower forms of a school, sustained severe injuries by the fall of the door of a temple of which defendant was trustee. It was proved that the boy was dull and not very intelligent and that his father was a pauper, while his brother was earning Rs. 30 a month. The Court awarded him Rs. 12,000 as damages:

Held, that the award was excessive and it was reduced to Rs. 8,000. [p. 558, col. 1; p. 559, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree and judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter, in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court in Civil Suit No. 399 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. P. Ramasamy Aiyar, for the Appellant, argued that the Judge had no power to order amendment of the plaint so as to enhance the original claim for damages, which had been deliberately fixed. A larger relief than was asked for could not be awarded nor could the Court, after going through a portion of the evidence, allow an amendment so as to give increased damages.

The award was excessive. The Judge had given an annuity to the plaintiff. Judging of the boy's antecedents and of the intelligence he displayed in school, there was no reason to conclude that, but for the injuries, his future would be very brilliant.

Mr. N. Grant, for the Respondent, argued contra.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—I think there is no ground whatever for the objection taken to the action of the learned Judge in allowing an amendment of the plaint as regards the amount claimed as damages. The application was made at the beginning of the trial, when the learned Judge reserved his decision until he had heard more of the case. When he granted it at a later stage, it was not opposed though the order was not made by consent. The fact that it was not opposed goes to show that the general feeling of those who had heard the evidence was that an award of Rs. 5,000 would be inadequate. The only question then is whether the sum of Rs. 12,000 awarded by the learned Judge is excessive. The principles on which compensation should be awarded in these cases is fully discussed in the latest edition of Mr. Bewan's well-known book on Negligence. The observations of Parke, B., in Armsworth v. South Eastern Railway Co. (1) and of Brett, J., in Rowley v. London and North Western Railway Co. (2) were approved generally by the Court of Queen's Bench in Phillips v. London and South Western Railway Co. (3) and by the Court of Appeal in Phillips v. London and South Western Railway Co. (4) giving effect to these rulings. Lord Coleridge, C. J., when the case was retried before him, told the Jury that the amount of compensation must be fair and reasonable but that an absolute compensation was not the true measure of damages, and in the Court of Appeal Bramwell, L. J., in Phillips v. London and South Western Railway Co. (5) stated that the direction was such as was usually given and was right. Pace M. R. Bewan, therefore, I think that the proper ruling is that something fair and reasonable but less than an absolute compensation should be given in these cases. The later decision in Johnston v. Great Western Railway (6) was concerned with the question as to whether the Court of Appeal should interfere with the finding of a Jury in a case of the kind, and the rule laid down was that it would do so when it was clear that the Jury had disregarded the direction of the Court. When the damages are assessed by the Court, and the Court gives its reasons as in the present case the Appellate Court can, of course, form its own opinion on the reasons given but should, in my opinion, be slow to interfere, unless in its opinion the damages awarded are clearly excessive or inadequate.

Coming now to the facts there can be no doubt that, owing to the admitted negligence of the defendant, the plaintiff sustained dreadful injuries and was reduced to the pitiable condition referred to by the learned Judge and that his prospects in life were completely ruined. He is, therefore, entitled to the largest compensation that could properly be awarded to any one of his position and prospects in life. As regards this part of the case I cannot help thinking that the learned Judge has taken rather too favourable a view. I accept the statement of the learned Counsel that the plaintiff impressed the Court as a bright and intelligent boy. Nonetheless he was a backward boy who would not have completed his school course and become eligible for admission to a college, until three years after the average age. This may be assumed to have been due to his father's want of means, but that want of means would have been an even more fatal obstacle to his completing his college course and obtaining a degree in Arts, to say nothing of Law, so as to put him on an equality with other educated boys of his age and caste. No doubt, he had a distant connection who was in a position to help him, and such help is not infrequently but by no means invariably given. Help from this quarter appears to me to be too problematical to take into account in assessing damages. His father was practically without means. One brother is a failed 'matriculate', who is now in the Government service and debarred by his failure from rising to better paid appointments. The other brother was unemployed at the date of the trial but had been a clerk in a mercantile firm. On the whole the plaintiff's prospects were by no means so bright as those of any young Iyengar boy with parents in comfortable circumstances and able to afford him the best educational advantages. The learned Judge, as I understand him, was of opinion that Rs. 6,000 or Rs. 7,000 would not reproduce more as an annuity than an averagely successful person in the plaintiff's position would have earned, but he has felt entitled to double that sum having regard to the sufferings the plaintiff has undergone, the sufferings he will undergo and the permanent disabilities he has to suffer from. The plaintiff is, no doubt, entitled to compensation for the pains and sufferings he has undergone and will have to undergo as well as for the loss of his career, but this award, in my opinion, is something more, rather than something less, than an indemnity as it ought to be according to the authorities to which I have referred. Rs. 6,000 represents an annuity starting at much more than the plaintiff would have been likely to earn after many years of employment. I also think that having regard to the authorities I have referred to, it is going too far to double the amount awarded under this head as compensation for pain and suffering. My learned brother sitting with me, who is in a better position than I am to judge of the prospects of the boy in the plaintiff's position, holds this view even more strongly than I do. In the result, however, we have agreed that the damages should be reduced to Rs. 6,000. Otherwise the appeal is dismissed with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant is the appellant. He is trustee of a temple. The falling of the temple door through the negligence of the temple servants has injured the plaintiff, who was about 16 years old at the date of suit, in a very serious manner as spoken to by the plaintiff's 4th witness, Dr. Gibson. The plaintiff may "never be able to walk by himself without crutches or human aid," and has also "lost control of the muscles" controlling the excretion of the faeces and the discharge of urine. He sued through his Vakil for recovery of damages estimated at Rs. 5,000. He afterwards changed his legal adviser, and the Counsel instructed by Attorneys appeared for him at the trial. The plaint was allowed to be amended into a claim for Rs. 12,000 and the learned Judge gave a decree for damages for Rs. 12,000.

It is clear from the evidence that the plaintiff's father is practically a pauper who earns nothing. The plaintiff's elder brother, who was unable to pass the Matriculation Examination, was earning Rs. 30 a month and was probably the support of his father and of the plaintiff. The plaintiff was studying in the 3rd form when he got his injuries, and I think he must be treated as a backward boy as, even if he continued to have his promotion regularly, he would have got his secondary school leaving certificate only in his 19th year. The learned Judge says, "I am not going to give this boy annuity to compensate him for the loss of his career which would bring him more than an averagely successful person would have earned." But I think in giving a judgment for Rs. 12,000, he has given him such an annuity and even an annuity giving a larger income than he could reasonably expect. Considering the plaintiff's previous scholastic career and the intelligence to be expected of a person born in the family to which he belongs, he might be expected to earn

Rs. 20 to Rs. 30 a month after he became a major. Even in that view, he cannot be said to be entitled to a sum which would give him an annuity of Rs. 360 a year. The measure of damages in a suit like this is discussed in Mayne on Damages, 8th Edition, pages 541 to 544. In one of the cases cited, Phillips v. London and South Western Railway Co. (3), confirmed in appeal in Phillips v. London and South Western Railway (5), a plaintiff, who was getting a secured income of £6,000 to £7,000 per annum in medical practice and who was supposed to have been permanently disabled from earning that income, was given only £7,000 as damages by Jury, that is, a sum giving an annuity of £350 at 5 per cent. The summing up of Mr. Justice Field in that case was approved of in appeal (though a new trial was ordered on the ground that the damages did not even cover actual expenses incurred by plaintiff). The rule in these cases is: "You are not to give the value of annuity of the same amount as the plaintiff's average income for the rest of the plaintiff's life. If you gave that, you would be disregarding some of the contingencies....An accident might have taken the plaintiff off within a year. He might have lived on the other hand for the next 20 years and yet many things might have happened to prevent his continuing his practice." So also in another case, Parke, B., said: "It would be most unjust if, whenever an accident occurs, Juries were to visit the unfortunate cause of it with the utmost amount which they think an equivalent for the mischief done....Scarcely any sum could compensate a labouring man for the loss of a limb, yet you do not in such a case give him enough to maintain him for life." Armsworth v. South Eastern Ry. Co. (1). Bearing these observations in mind, I think the sum of Rs. 5,000, which was demanded by the plaintiff's father in the lawyer's notice sent before the institution of the suit and which was also claimed as reasonable damages legally claimable in the plaint before its amendment, is the amount which a reasonable Jury ought to have given to the plaintiff and I would, therefore, hold that there was no sufficient ground for the learned Judge to have allowed the plaintiff to amend the plaint by asking for higher damages or for allowing any portion of the additional amount claimed. I cannot, however, state that the amendment allowed was illegally granted.

Mr. Grant for the respondent argued that Mr. C. P. Ramasami Aiyar in the lower Court said that provided that his client was not made personally liable and provided the damages are given against the temple, he would not object to the amendment of the plaint. Mr. Ramasami Aiyar on the other hand said that he remained silent as no formal application to amend was made. Anyhow, I think that the interests of the temple cannot be said to require less protection than the personal interests of the defendant trustee. In the words of Parke, B., "the unfortunate" temple ought not to be "visited"... "with the utmost amount which" a too compassionate Jury might think "equivalent to the mischief done." The question of the quantum of damages in these cases is not one that can be accurately and mathematically answered. I would have been inclined to assess it at only Rs. 5,000 or even less if I had tried the case as a single Judge exercising solely the functions of the Jury. Where two Judges sitting as an Appellate Bench have to decide on a question of this kind, it is clearly desirable that in exercising the functions of a Jury, the Bench should come to an agreement on a matter in which there is room for the exercise of a large though not wholly arbitrary discretion. We have (as stated as the judgment of my Lord) agreed to the award of Rs. 6,000 as damages in this case. I would, therefore, modify the decree of the learned Judge by substituting Rs. 6,000 for Rs. 12,000. As, however, the defendant in his appeal memorandum contended that Rs. 2,000 was a sufficient compensation and considering also the nature of the case, I would, as regards costs, not interfere with the lower Court's award in favour of the plaintiff and I would also direct the appellant to bear the respondent's costs of this appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (6)—Date of issue of notice, what is.

The words, "date of issue of notice" in clause (6) of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act mean the date on which the notice was in fact issued, and not the date on which the Court ordered it to be issued. [p 559, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Poona, in Appeal No. 227 of 1916, dismissing an appeal from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge, Haveli, in Darkhast No. 295 of 1916.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The application for execution would undoubtedly be in time if we take the date of the issue of the notice upon the last application to be in fact the date on which it was issued, and not the date on which the Court ordered it to be issued. There was a conflict of authority under the former Indian Limitation Act, this Court holding that the word "issuing" in the Article meant, not the actual sending out of the notice, but the making of the order that it should on some future day be sent out. The Calcutta and Madras High Courts took the opposite view. The Indian Limitation Act was accordingly amended and the word "issue" was substituted for "issuing." I entertain no doubt but that the intention of that amendment was to give effect to the view held by the Calcutta and Madras High Courts. As the Article now stands, I do not see how it is capable of any other construction. Time is said to run in all cases in which notices have been issued from the issue of the notice. Taking language in its natural sense and assuming the Legislature to mean what it says, I cannot read into that the strained construction which was put upon the Article in the former Indian Limitation Act, a construction made possible, if indeed it was made possible, only by treating the word "issuing" as a continuing verb dating back to the time from which the process was started by the Court. By a parity of reasoning, it appears to me that it would be as permissible to say that the date of a man's hanging was not the day on which he was actually hanged but the day on which the Court sentenced him to be hanged. I must confess for my own part that I am always strongly averse from putting an unnatural construction upon language which seems to me to have a perfectly plain and natural meaning.

In my opinion, there can be no doubt but that the present application is within time, since it is within three years from the date on which notice was actually issued upon the last application.

I would, therefore, reverse the order of the Court below, direct that this application be again taken on the file and proceeded with according to law.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 41—Decree for maintenance against three brothers making one of them expressly liable for whole amount—Payment by defendant made liable—Suit to enforce contribution, whether cognisable by Small Cause Court—Jurisdiction.

A Hindu widow sued the brothers of her deceased husband for maintenance and obtained a decree. For certain reasons the decree made one of the defendants expressly liable for the whole amount of the decree. The latter made payments under the decree and then sued the other defendants for contribution:

Held, that under the peculiar circumstances of the case the fact of his having made payments under the decree gave rise to an equity in favour of the plaintiff as against the defendants, but that nevertheless the suit as brought could not be treated as a suit for contribution within the meaning of Article 41 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, and was not, therefore, excluded from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Per Walsh, J.—It is only suits for contribution of a peculiar and special character which are included in the exemption contained in Article 41 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, and a litigant who wants to bring himself within the exemption must clearly establish that his suit in every respect complies with the very precise definition contained in the Article. [p. 561, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 7th December 1915.

The Hon'ble Mr. Narain Prasad Asthan, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is a second appeal by a plaintiff, whose suit to recover from the two defendants, his own brothers, a sum amounting to Rs. 340, after having been decreed by the Court of first instance, has been decreed in part only by the lower Appellate Court. The sum covered by this appeal is Rs. 190. On behalf of the defendants-respondents a preliminary objection was raised to the effect that the cognizance of this appeal is barred by section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We have to determine whether the suit brought by the plaintiff Ant Ram was or was not one of a nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes. It was a simple claim for money to an amount falling short of Rs. 500 and therefore fell within the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, unless excluded by some Article in the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887). There is really one Article alone (Article 41) about which there can be any substantial argument. Something has been said about Articles 33 and 42, but they are so clearly inapplicable that we need not mention them further. On behalf of the applicant it is contended that the suit in question is a suit for contribution and that it was brought by himself, either as a sharer in joint property in respect of a payment made by him of money due from a co-sharer, or in the alternative made by him as a manager of joint property on account of the said property. As a matter of fact the question raised by this preliminary objection is one which we should have to consider in one form or another at the hearing of the appeal itself, because the only question decided against the plaintiff has been one of limitation, and in order to determine the question of limitation it would be necessary to determine the nature of the suit as brought. We have come to the conclusion that the preliminary objection must prevail, as the suit in question is not a suit for contribution at all within the meaning of Article 41 aforesaid and cannot be held to be concerned with joint property within the meaning of that Article. The somewhat peculiar circumstances out of which the litigation arises need not be gone into at length. The essential point is that a decree was passed on the 15th of February 1910, against all the three brothers who were parties to the present suit in favour of Musanmat Basanti, the widow of a previously deceased brother. The object of that decree was to secure to this lady maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per mensem chargeable on the whole of the property which had belonged to the father of the three defendants. In consequence, however, of certain antecedent circumstances which need not be gone into, the Court thought fit to include in its decree an express direction that the present plaintiff, Ant Ram, should alone be liable for the payment of the money. The consequence of this is that the liability of the property, and, therefore, the liability of the remaining defendants, could not come into existence except in the event of failure on the part of Ant Ram to comply with the terms of the decree. We do not think there is any getting away from the fact that, at the time when he made the payments which formed the basis of his cause of action, Ant Ram alone was liable to make them under the terms of the decree. No doubt, under the peculiar circumstances, the fact of his making these payments gave rise to an equity in his favour as against his two brothers, and this equity has been recognised by the decree passed in the Courts below. The fact remains nevertheless that the suit as brought cannot be treated as one for contribution and, therefore, was not excluded from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes. For authorities on this point it is sufficient to refer to two judgments of the Madras High Court, Marula Ammal v. Muvulu Maracoir (1) and (1) 80 M. 212; 17 M. L. J. 376.

Ramaswamy Pantulu v. Narayanamoorthy Pantulu (2). We were referred in argument on the other side to a case of this Court, Fatima Bibi v. Hamida Bibi (3), but that case is fully reconcilable with the Madras authorities and indeed proceeds on the same principles of law. What the learned Judge of this Court who decided that case laid stress upon was that the liability which the plaintiff had satisfied was a joint liability as between himself and the defendants at the moment when the payment was made, and, moreover, a liability attaching to a joint tenancy and therefore attaching to property jointly held by the parties to the suit. It was, therefore, a suit for contribution in the full sense of the word. We hold accordingly that no second appeal lies in this case and we dismiss this petition of appeal accordingly with costs including fees on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. One thing is quite clear, that it is only suits for contribution of a peculiar and special character which are included in this exemption. If what is ordinarily known as a suit for contribution was intended to be exempted nothing would have been easier than to say so. I think it must be taken that a litigant who wants to bring himself within Article 41 must clearly establish that his suit in every respect complies with the very precise definition.

Appeal dismissed.

Decree, construction of—Instalment decree—Default in payment of instalment—Waiver.

SUBRAYA VENKAPPA HEGDE v. SOMBAYA HEGDE.

An instalment decree provided that in case of failure to pay the amount of any two instalments the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the whole of the unpaid balance of the decree. The first instalment was not paid on the date fixed, but before the due date of the second instalment it was paid in full with interest at the agreed rate. There was a further default in paying the second instalment and the decree-holder thereupon claimed that there was a failure to pay the amount of two instalments at the period fixed, and, therefore, that he was entitled to claim the whole amount of his debt at that time remaining unpaid.

Held, that the real intention of the parties was that before the penalty could be enforced two instalments must be in arrears together and that condition not having been fulfilled in this case the decree-holder was not entitled to execute the decree for the whole of the unpaid balance. [p. 563, col. 1.]

Mr. S. N. Karnad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The consent decree runs in the following terms:—

"Plaintiff do recover from defendant Rs. 253-10-5 out of Rs. 753-10-5, alleged by plaintiff (to be due to him) and admitted by defendant, on the 30th day of Chaitra of the next cyclical year Rakshasa (14th April 1915). As to the balance of Rs. 500 on deducting the said amount (of Rs. 253-10-5) plaintiff do pay the same to defendant by five instalments of Rs. 100 each payable on the 30th day of the Magh of each year beginning from the 30th of Magh of the next year, that is, of the cyclical year Rakshasa. In this way defendant do pay (the whole amount) by six instalments. In case of failure to pay the amount of any one instalment he should pay the amount of instalment he has failed to pay with interest at the rate of Rs. 12-80 per cent per annum from the date of failure to pay the instalments up to the date of payment. In case of failure to pay the amount of any two instalments at the period fixed, defendant do pay to plaintiff all the amount of instalments remaining unpaid on deducting the amount of instalments paid at that time, together with interest thereon at the above rate, that may accrue from the date of default up to the date of payment; in this manner the amount should be paid in one lump sum."

Upon this decree a dispute has arisen in the following circumstances. The first instalment of Rs. 253-10-5 was to be paid on or before the 14th April 1915. The second instalment of Rs. 100 was to be paid on or before the 30th March 1916. The first instalment was not paid on the date fixed, but in January 1916, before the due date of the second instalment, it was paid in full with interest at the agreed rate. There was a further default in paying the second instalment due on the 30th March 1916. The decree-holder thereupon claimed that there was a failure to pay the amount of two instalments at the period fixed, and, therefore, that he was entitled to claim the whole amount of his debt at that time remaining unpaid. The lower Appellate Court has acceded to that contention and held upon a construction of the decree that on the 30th March 1916 there had been a failure to pay the amounts of two instalments at the period fixed. We are of a different opinion. We think it unnecessary to go into the questions raised and discussed in the judgment of Jenkins, C. J., in the Full Bench case of Kashiram v. Pandu (1). That and the case out of which it arose had special reference to the points at which limitation began to run on breach of conditions in instalment bonds very similar in their terms to those we are considering. All that I would say is that if the view taken by the learned Chief Justice be correct that the acceptance of an overdue instalment before the next succeeding instalment becomes due amounts to estoppel and precludes the creditor from alleging that there was a prior default, then the position here would admit of no argument. It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondent that he had no option in the matter; that there was in no real sense a waiver when he accepted the amount of the first instalment with interest in January 1916 and, therefore, that there is no room for the introduction of the principle of estoppel. It appears to us, however, that the decision can be put upon a much simpler and more satisfactory ground.

RATAN DAS V. GURAN.

Upon our reading of the decree itself, we entertain no doubt but that the real intention of the parties was that before the penalty could be enforced two instalments must be in arrears together. Adopting that construction, it is clear that the condition had not been fulfilled in this case, for before the default of the 30th March 1916 the first instalment had been paid in January 1916. There was, therefore, at the time the decree-holder claimed to call in the whole debt, only one instalment in arrears. We think, therefore, that the view taken by the learned District Judge was wrong and that there has been no such failure to pay the amounts of two instalments at the period fixed as would entitle the decree-holder to the order he obtained in the lower Appellate Court.

We think that the decree of the learned Judge must be reversed and this appeal allowed with all costs.

HEATON, J.—I concur.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1679 OF 1916.

February 27, 1918.

Present:—Mr Justice Scott-Smith and Mr. Justice LeRossignol.

RATAN DAS AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS*versus*

Musammat GURAN—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Bengal Regulation XVII of 1806, s. 8—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 1, Arts. 135, 144.—Mortgage by way of conditional sale—Mortgagor continuing in possession after default—Adverse possession—Foreclosure proceedings—Suit for possession by mortgagee—Limitation.

In the case of a mortgage by way of conditional sale where, under the terms of the mortgage-deed, the mortgagee is entitled to possession of the mortgaged property without first taking out foreclosure proceedings, the right to possession of the mortgagor determines on the date of default; but where under the deed, the mortgagee as such has no right to possession, the right to possession of the mortgagor does not determine and his possession does not become adverse until the foreclosure proceedings have been perfected and the year of grace has expired. [p. 566, col. 1.]

A mortgage-deed by way of conditional sale dated the 28th June 1898 provided that the mortgage money shall be paid after three years and in case of default the mortgagee shall be at liberty to take possession by issuing foreclosure notice under Regulation XVII of 1806 but that if he did not elect to do so, the mortgagor would continue to pay him interest until the mortgage was redeemed. The mortgagor made default and on the 17th of June 1913 the mortgagee gave him notice of foreclosure, which was served on the 7th of September 1913 so that the year of grace expired on the 7th of September 1914. The mortgagee then brought a suit for possession as owner on the 9th of February 1915:

Held: (1) that the mortgage having continued even after the date of default, the mortgagor's right to possession did not determine and his possession did not begin to be adverse to the mortgagee till the expiry of the year of grace, so that the suit was not barred by time under Article 144 of the Limitation Act. [p. 566, col. 1.]

(2) that Article 135 of the Limitation Act had no application to the case. [p. 567, col. 2.]

Proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806 are purely ministerial proceedings devised to give warning to the mortgagor of the impending disappearance of his right to redeem the mortgage and avoid a conditional sale, and cannot in themselves confer any new period of limitation on a claim which otherwise would be barred by time. [p. 564, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepur, dated the 5th March 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Ferozepore, dated the 6th October 1915, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Ganpat Rai for the Appellants.

Sardar Kharak Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—As will be observed from the order of the learned Judge in Chambers, this is a suit by quondam mortgagees for possession as owners of land mortgaged to them by deed dated 28th June 1898, and the appeal has been referred to this Bench because its decision involves the determination of a difficult point of limitation. The term of the mortgage expired on the 28th of June 1901, but it was only on the 17th of June 1913 that the mortgagees took action for the issue of notice of foreclosure to the mortgagor which notice was served on the 7th of September 1913, so that the year of grace expired on the 7th September 1914. This suit was brought on the 9th of February 1915, and the point for decision is whether under Article 135 or 144 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act, the mortgagees' suit for possession as full owners is barred on the ground that the suit was not brought within twelve years of the date on which the mortgagor's right to possession determined, nor within twelve years of the date when the mortgagor's possession became adverse to the mortgagees. The Courts below have agreed that the mortgagor's right of possession determined on the 28th of June 1901, and the suit is time-barred.

On behalf of the appellants Nagar v. Saudagar (1) and Tek Chand v. Soheli Singh (2) have been cited, but neither of these cases is on all fours with the case now under consideration. Tek Chand v. Soheli Singh (2) is a judgment by a single Judge and in that case, although the suit was brought more than twelve years from the date when the right of the mortgagor's possession determined, the mortgagee had completed his foreclosure proceedings within twelve years and it was held that he had twelve years in which to institute his suit and that the said period of twelve years ran from the date of the expiry of the year of grace. In the suit before us, however, the notice of foreclosure is dated more than twelve years later than the date on which the mortgagee's debt became due and the year of grace began to run after the date on which a suit to recover possession as mortgagee would have been time-barred under Article 135. Nagar v. Saudagar (1) affords us still less assistance, for in that case the mortgagee was in possession of the mortgaged property and his suit was merely for a declaration that the mortgage right had merged in a full proprietary right.

On behalf of the respondent it is contended that the decisions of the Courts below are correct, and it is urged that Moman v. Ishri Pershad (3) and Nand Lal v. Goojar (4) are on all fours with the present case. Respondent also cited Dinonath Gangooly v. Nursingh Pershad Doss (5), Shurnomoyee Dasi v. Swinath Das (6), Murlidhar v. Kauchan Singh (7) and Bhandari v. Musammat Jasodhan (8).

Now the proceedings under the bai-bil-wafa Regulation are purely ministerial proceedings devised to give warning to the mortgagor of the impending disappearance of his right to redeem the mortgage and avoid a conditional sale, and it seems to us impossible to hold that those proceedings in themselves can confer any new period of limitation, on a claim which otherwise would be barred by time. In Bhandari v. Musammat Jasodhan (8) it was held that the mortgagee, having foreclosed, had twelve years within which to institute his suit for proprietary possession, running from the date of the expiry of the year of grace, when the mortgagor's right to possession of the character sought for in the suit first determined, and this conclusion was arrived at by a consideration of the English case of Pugh v. Heath (9). However that may be, neither Moman v. Ishri Pershad (3) nor Nand Lal v. Goojar (4) is of much aid to us in this case, for in all the cases cited the mortgagee was entitled in accordance with the terms of the mortgage-deed to immediate possession of the mortgaged property, whereas in the case before us the mortgagee was entitled to possession of the mortgaged property only after perfecting the foreclosure proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806. If Article 135 of the Limitation Act applies to the case we have to decide whether the suit was brought within 12 years of the date when the mortgagor's right to possession determined. Did the mortgagor's right in this case determine on the 28th June 1901, or did it determine only on the expiry of one year from the date of the foreclosure notice? If Article 144 applies, did the possession of the defendant become adverse to the plaintiff on the 28th June 1901, or only on the 7th September 1914? In Khelut Chunder Ghose v. Tarachurn Koondoo Chowdry (10) it was held that under an English deed of mortgage a suit to recover possession was barred unless brought within 12 years from the date of default, and in Dinonath Gangooly v. Nursing Pershad Doss (5) it was decided that the cause of action arose when default was made and that no new cause of action arose by reason of foreclosure proceedings.

If then Article 135 of the Limitation Act applies to this case, the cause of action arose, i.e., mortgagor's right to possession determined, on the 28th June 1901, and the present suit is barred, and if the mortgagee failed within 12 years to sue for his remedy, it is difficult to see how foreclosure proceedings which were perfected on a date when his mortgage no longer subsisted, can give him a right to bring a suit for possession as full owner under Article 144. If the mortgagor's right to possession determined on the 28th June 1901, within the meaning of Article 135, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that on that same date the mortgagor's possession became adverse to the mortgagee-plaintiff within the meaning of Article 144.

Now, Regulation XVII of 1806 provides no period within which the mortgagee is to take foreclosure proceedings. On the contrary the Regulation sets forth that whenever the mortgagee is desirous of foreclosing at any time subsequent to the due date, he shall follow the procedure prescribed by the Regulation. In this case indeed what the mortgagor covenanted with the mortgagee amounts to this, that if the mortgage money were not repaid within three years the mortgagee was then to be entitled not to possession but to take out foreclosure proceedings under the Regulation. Can then it be said that the right of the mortgagor to possession of the property determined on the 28th June 1901? On that date no doubt the mortgagee was at liberty to start foreclosure proceedings, but it cannot be said that on that date the mortgagor's right to possession determined. This case, however, is clearly not a case by a mortgagee but a case by a person claiming full ownership, and indeed the mortgage agreement contains no stipulation that the mortgagee shall obtain possession of the mortgaged property in his capacity of mortgagee. It enables him to secure possession only after he has completed his full proprietary title. The conclusion then at which we arrive is, that Article 135 cannot apply to this case and we are driven back upon Article 144. Here again the same question has to be answered, viz., whether the possession of the mortgagor after the 28th June 1901 became adverse to the plaintiff? Now, it is a well-recognized rule that prescription does not begin to run against a person who is unable to take immediate action. Could the plaintiff have launched this suit on the 29th June 1901? It is obvious that the reply must be in the negative, because at that time the mortgage had not been foreclosed, the plaintiff had no right to possession as mortgagee and his status of full proprietor had not been perfected. How then must the possession of the mortgagor be qualified after the 28th June 1901? He was not a trespasser for he was in possession as mortgagor and was entitled to remain in possession until he was ousted by the full owner, so that his possession was not an adverse possession but one that could be referred back to a legal beginning. In the case reported as Khelut Chunder Ghose v. Tarachurn Koondoo (10) there was a clear provision that the mortgagee was entitled to possession immediately on default, so that that authority is of no aid in this case. Dinonath Gangooly v. Nursing Pershad Doss (5) is a case which seems to offer a closer parallel with the present case, but in that case it was held that under the mortgage contract the mortgagee was entitled to possession immediately on the occurrence of default in spite of the fact that in order to foreclose he had to follow the procedure laid down in Regulation XVII of 1806. The only respect in which the facts of that case differ from the facts of this case is that in the Calcutta case it was stipulated in the mortgage-deed that on failure to repay the mortgage money the rights of the mortgagor would cease and the mortgagee could take possession, whereas in the case before us there is no such provision but the plaintiff is authorised to obtain full possession by applying the procedure of the Regulation; and it remains for consideration whether this difference in the wording of the mortgage-deeds distinguishes the two cases. There is this further difference between the two cases that the Calcutta case was a suit between the mortgagee and the purchaser of the mortgagor's right and not a suit between the mortgagee and the mortgagor, and the ratio decidendi in the Calcutta case was that under the mortgage deed with which that case was concerned the mortgagee had a right of entry immediately on default by the mortgagor. The stipulations in the mortgage-deed before us are that on default the mortgagee shall be at liberty to secure possession by the issue of a notice under the Regulation. Secondly, that if he elects not to do so, the mortgagor will continue to pay him interest until the mortgage is redeemed. In view of these special stipulations we are unable to hold that the mortgagee had a right to immediate possession on the 28th June 1901, or that the possession of the mortgagor was adverse to him after that date, because the mortgage-deed clearly provides for the continuance of the mortgage even after the date of default.

The true rule in these cases appears to be that when under the terms of the mortgage-deed the mortgagee is entitled to possession of the mortgaged property without first taking out foreclosure proceedings, the right to possession of the mortgagor determined on the date of default, but where under the terms of the mortgage-deed the mortgagee as such has no right to possession, the right to possession of the mortgagor does not determine and his possession does not become adverse until the foreclosure proceedings have been perfected and the year of grace has expired. Applying this rule to the case before us, we find that the mortgage contract gave the mortgagee no right of entry as mortgagee, that it contemplated the subsistence of the relation of the mortgagor and mortgagee even after the date of default, that the mortgagee was entitled to maintain this relation as long as he pleased and that he had no right to possession until he had perfected his proprietary right. Consequently the possession of the mortgagor did not become adverse to him till shortly before suit.

In this view we must accept the appeal and we decree the claim with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The plaintiff sued for specific performance of a contract by which the husband of the defendants agreed to convey to her certain land for a consideration of Rs. 150. Annexed to the contract was a term that in the event of a criminal prosecution for criminal breach of trust instituted by the plaintiff against the said intending vendor not being withdrawn, the contract was not to be enforced. The explanation briefly is this. The plaintiff had previously sold this land to Ramchandra. The agreed price was Rs. 250 in all. Ramchandra advanced to the plaintiff Rs. 115 to pay off a mortgagee and a further sum of Rs. 135 of which Rs. 100 at any rate was either taken back by Ramchandra or deposited with him by the plaintiff. Admittedly the plaintiff retained Rs. 35, which, with the Rs. 115 paid to the mortgagee, makes Rs. 150. In respect of the other Rs. 100 she complained that after she had deposited it with Ramchandra he criminally misappropriated it, in the sense that he withheld it and denied her right to obtain it from him. That was the origin of the criminal prosecution.

It is perfectly clear from the agreement upon which this suit is brought, Exhibit 27, that Ramchandra, husband of the defendant, virtually admitted the truth of the allegations made by the plaintiff and was ready to make complete reparation in the term of this agreement, provided that the criminal law stayed its hand. Thus all the equities are clearly on the side of the plaintiff. If she cannot enforce this contract, she must lose her land and she must lose the Rs. 100, part of the consideration of which Ramchandra had defrauded her. It appears that pursuant to this agreement the plaintiff did make an application to the Magistrate to withdraw the prosecution. As, however, the offence charged was not compoundable, it is clear that unless the Magistrate had failed in his duty or mistaken the facts, it no longer lay in the power of the plaintiff to affect the course of the trial. Just about that time, however, the Magistrate was transferred and the case was delayed. Before it was resumed Ramchandra died. There was another person Dinkar, co-accused with the defendant, and we are told, though we can find no proof of the fact, that the prosecution against Dinkar was dropped.

Now, upon these facts we have to determine whether the contract, Exhibit 27, can be specifically enforced. It is pretty clear that if the concluding term had been complied with, or could have been complied with, then part of the consideration would have been void on the ground of being opposed to public policy. No one may contract upon the footing of part of the consideration being the compounding of a felony. But assuming that this term could not have been complied with, then the whole contract becomes equally unenforceable for failure of an essential condition. So that in either view it is very clear upon an understanding of the facts and the terms of the contract that the plaintiff cannot have it specifically enforced.

There are other considerations which may be drawn from other principles of contract which are equally fatal to it; as for example, the provisions of section 24 of the Indian Contract Act; for having regard to the actual nature of the condition which the plaintiff undertook to fulfil, the result that that condition was impossible from the first makes the contract void.

Speaking for myself I much regret that the plaintiff should have been misled into framing her contract in this way, since, as I have indicated, the result is certainly one of great hardship to her; but I see no alternative upon the plain law of the case than to hold, as I have indicated above, a view in which I believe I have the complete concurrence of my learned brother, and so to reverse the decree of the Courts below and dismiss this suit; but bearing in mind the hardship of the case and the probable ignorance of the plaintiff which has led her into this unfortunate position, I would make both the parties bear their own costs throughout.

HEATON, J.—I agree with the order proposed and I fully agree that it is an unfortunate thing that this claim has to be dismissed. But it must be dismissed because the contract, specific performance of which was sought by the plaintiff, is one which, on the face of it, is opposed to public policy. The contract, which is for the sale of land by Ramchandra to the plaintiff at a stated price, recites that "you (i. e., the plaintiff) have filed a complaint for criminal breach of trust against me and Dinkar in the First Class Magistrate's Court at Chiplun." A complaint of criminal breach of trust of a kind that can be compounded. Then the contract ends by saying: "This contract is not to be in force if the complaint is not withdrawn." That seems to me to be, unmistakably on the face of it, an illegal contract. However unfortunate the result, we have to give effect to law.

Decree reversed.

Musammat PAREMA KUER—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1, Sch. II, Art. 17—Cross-objection—Court-fee payable.

There is no reason to assume that the words "or cross-objection" have been omitted from Article 17 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act. Therefore, a cross-objection in a suit for a declaration must bear ad valorem Court-fee under Article 1, Schedule I of the Court Fees Act.

The Taxing Officer made the following reference to the Taxing Judge:—

A cross-objection in this appeal has been filed, on which a valuation of Rs. 250 has been put and a Court-fee of Rs. 10 has been paid. The cross-objection has been properly valued and if this had been an appeal, the proper Court-fee would have been Rs. 10 under Schedule II, Article 17 of the Court Fees Act, the relief being only declaratory. Schedule II, Article 17, however, does not deal with cross-objections, so it appears an ad valorem Court-fee should be paid. The same difficulty arose in the case of Lakhan Singh v. Ram Kishen Das (1). In that case Tudball, J. found that Article 17, Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, did not apply to cross-objections and that an ad valorem Court-fee must be paid. He remarked that there was possibly an oversight at the time when Act V of 1908 was passed, in not having added the words "or cross-objection" to Article 17 of the Act. As things stand, therefore, it would appear that the ad valorem Court-fee must be paid.

JUDGMENT.—I think it is rash to assume that an item has been omitted from a schedule by an oversight. It seems to me logical to say that if a party who has been refused an order altering a summary decision or entry in a register or a declaratory decree or an order setting aside an award or an adoption is aggrieved by such an order, he should file an appeal against that refusal. It is as reasonable to say that the words "cross-objection" have been deliberately omitted from Article 17, as it would be obviously right to say that the words

"written statement, pleading, set-off or counter-claim" have been deliberately omitted from that Article. There is in the result of this conclusion no hardship. An unsuccessful litigant genuinely desirous of one of the reliefs contemplated by Article 17 is at liberty to file an appeal forthwith irrespective of any action that may be taken by his adversary, and pay on the appeal a Court fee of Rs. 10. If he asks for such a relief only because his adversary has preferred an appeal, he will be required, if his own appeal is time-barred, to pay an ad valorem fee. If his appeal is not time-barred, he should seek his remedy by a regular appeal, not by a cross-objection.

PRICE, SINCE DECEASED, AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 252, 254 (6)—Partnership—Dissolution, right to, how far affected by terms of partnership contract—Court, power of, to decree dissolution.

A partner's claim to a decree for dissolution rests, in its origin, not on contract, but on his inherent right to invoke the Court's protection on equitable grounds, in spite of the terms in which the rights and obligations of the partners may have been regulated and defined by the partnership contract. [p. 51, col. 1.]

It is not, therefore, a contravention of section 252 of the Contract Act for a partner to seek dissolution, or for the Court to decree it, though the partnership agreement contemplates the continuance of the partnership beyond the date at which the suit is instituted. It is to meet the precise predicament of a partnership not terminable at will that the Court's power to decree dissolution is conferred in the events enumerated in section 254 of the Contract Act. [p. 571, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal from a decree of the Bombay High Court (Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Dayar, J.) dated the 8th September 1914, varying a decree of Macleod, J., dated the 28th March 1914,

REHMAT-UN-NISSA BEGUM v. PRICE.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. Briefly, the appellants' predecessor, Nawab Kamal Yar Jung, had entered into a partnership with respondents for the quarrying and supply of stone to be used by respondents in constructing certain docks at Bombay. The partnership agreement provided that the partnership should continue until the supply of stone for the docks was completed. The partnership, however, resulted only in losses, and on that ground the Nawab sued for a dissolution. Macleod, J., decreed his suit, but this decision was reversed on appeal by Scott, C. J. and Davar, J. They held that Cowasjee Nanabhoy v. Lallbhoy Vallabhoy (1) established the proposition that parties when entering into a partnership agreement may so stipulate as to relinquish their right of dissolution in the ordinary way and postpone that right till the expiration of a period or the completion of an adventure: that that case was before the Contract Act, but that section 252 of the Contract Act laid down the same rule: that the parties here had expressly stipulated that the partnership should continue till the supply of stone for the docks had been completed. They added that even if they had a discretion to declare the partnership dissolved, they would not have exercised it in plaintiff's favour. The docks being by this time completed, they did not dismiss the suit, but held that plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration that the partnership came to a termination before the termination of the adventure, and directed that partnership accounts be taken up to the end of the construction work of the docks.

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., and Sir W. Garth, for the Appellants.—Under section 254 (6) of the Indian Contract Act a partner may sue for dissolution of partnership when the business of the partnership cannot be carried on except at a loss. There are no circumstances here to justify the finding that the parties agreed to renounce the right of dissolving in case of loss. On a proper construction of the articles of agreement the appellants did not relinquish their statutory right to apply to dissolve the partnership in that case. Cowasjee Nanabhoy v. Lallbhoy Vallabhoy (1) does not lay down that partners can contract themselves out of that right. To the contrary effect vide Lindley on Partnership, page 658.

On the question of discretion, there is nothing in the facts which disentitles appellants to the benefit of the Statute. Macleod, J., exercised his discretion rightly in plaintiffs' favour and the Appellate Court had no sufficient reason for interference with it.

Messrs. P. O. Lawrence, K. C., L. De Gruyther and E. B. Raikes, for the Respondents.—The Appellate Court were right in saying this was not a contract which one party could determine merely because the business was being carried on at a loss. The articles show that there was an agreement that the partners would not take advantage of their statutory right to apply for dissolution. Whatever power the Court had to dissolve, the discretion not to dissolve has been exercised rightly and properly by the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., replied.

JUDGMENT.

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Bombay in its Appellate Jurisdiction, dated the 8th September 1914, varying a decree of that Court in its Original Jurisdiction passed on the 28th March 1914. The suit is for a dissolution of partnership. The original plaintiff was Nawab Kamal Khan, but he has died in the course of the suit and the present appellants are his representatives. The defendants, his partners, are the respondents in this appeal. The partnership was constituted on the 11th March 1908, and its terms are contained in an instrument of that date. To appreciate its purpose and legal effect it will be convenient to describe briefly the events that led up to its execution. The defendants, a firm of contractors, had undertaken the construction of the New Alexandra Dock in the island of Bombay, and they required for the work a large supply of granite and other stone. They accordingly made two contracts in 1906 for this supply, and in both of them the Nawab was either directly or indirectly interested.

For reasons which need not be discussed, the supply of granite and stone under these contracts was so unsatisfactory that the defendants' manager complained, and declared that he would be compelled to look elsewhere if he could not get delivery according to contract.

In the end an arrangement was made for cancellation of the two contracts and the release of all claims for their breach by the Nawab and those interested with him, and for the formation of a new partnership between the Nawab and the defendants for the quarrying and supply of the requisite granite and other stone. The defendants insisted that the Nawab should be a sleeping partner without any voice in the control and conduct of the business, so his advisers naturally demanded the insertion in the partnership instrument of a provision which would secure him against the risk of extravagant working.

To this the defendants assented, and a clause was inserted which ultimately became the 25th in the instrument as executed. It is this clause that has given rise to much of the present dispute.

In the instrument, which is expressed to be made between the Nawab, of the one part, and the defendants (hereinafter called the contractors), of the other part, after a narrative of the events leading up to the partnership, it is recited that "for the purpose of carrying out the said terms and conditions and of working the said quarries and producing stone and granite therefrom, and rendering the said quarries remunerative and profitable to the parties thereto, and in consideration of the advances to be made by the contractors," it had been arranged that the agreement should be entered into.

The instrument then provided that the Nawab and the defendants should be interested in the working of the quarries at Lingampalli and Dharur, and should share the profits and losses half and half (clause 1); that the granite and stone produced from the quarries should be furnished to the defendants for their works at the dock in accordance with their requirements and sent, delivered, and paid for as therein provided (clause 3); that the working of the quarries and the partnership should continue until the supply of granite or other stone for the construction of the docks was completed, and that the partnership should then terminate and be wound up (clause 4); that the expenditure incurred in managing and supervising the quarries should not exceed the proportion of 10 per cent. on the cost of the work, including all charges (clause 17); that the royalty should be one of the expenses of working the quarries, to be defrayed out of the partnership funds or the income earned (clause 22); and "that the average rate of expense per cubic foot at which the stone has hitherto been quarried, exclusive of management and superintendence, shall not be exceeded in future except under extraordinary circumstances, when the rate of expense may be increased by 10 per cent." The work contemplated by the partnership was carried on, but with the one unvarying result of annual loss, which amounted to upwards of three lakhs of rupees on the 30th June 1910. In these circumstances the present suit was instituted in October 1912, praying for a dissolution on the ground that the business of the partnership had been, and only could be, carried on at a loss.

In the plaint extravagant charges of fraud were made, but they have been abandoned. While groundless charges of this type are to be deprecated, and may well attract the consequence of an adverse order as to costs, their Lordships cannot accede to the suggestion, somewhat faintly made, that the Nawab had by these charges forfeited his right to the protection of the Court if he otherwise had a good cause of action.

The matters now in contest are (1) whether the suit is premature; (2) what is the "average rate of expense" mentioned in clause 25 of the partnership instrument; and (3) have there been "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of that clause?

The Court of first instance decided in the Nawab's favour on the first and second of these points, and adversely to him on the third. The Appellate Bench's decision was wholly adverse to the Nawab, but as the work on the docks had been completed before the hearing of the appeal, the Court directed that partnership accounts should be taken from the 11th

REHMAT-UN-NISSA BEGUM V. PRICE.

March 1908 up to the end of the construction work of the docks.

The Court of Appeal's decision that the Nawab when he filed his suit was not entitled to claim a dissolution, was based on the continuance of the partnership involved in the terms of the partnership agreement and on section 252 of the Contract Act. And the Court proceeded to express the opinion that, even if it had jurisdiction, it would have refused to declare the partnership dissolved at any period earlier than the completion of the work. The first and the more extreme of these propositions was not seriously pressed in argument before this Board, nor indeed could it be.

It is beyond controversy that at the institution of this suit the business of the partnership could only be carried on at a loss. This is conclusively shown by the firm's balance sheets, the profit and loss account for the period from the 1st March 1908 to the 30th June 1912, and the admission in the defendants' written statement. The condition described in section 254 (6) of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, is thus established, and it is provided that in this event the Court may, at the suit of a partner, dissolve the partnership. What, then, is there in the circumstances of this case to deprive the Court of its jurisdiction or the plaintiff of his right to seek the Court's assistance?

Their Lordships are unable to agree with the High Court's view that there is anything in section 252 that constitutes a bar; it appears to them to be directed to something wholly different.

A partner's claim to a decree for dissolution rests, in its origin, not on contract, but on his inherent right to invoke the Court's protection on equitable grounds, in spite of the terms in which the rights and obligations of the partners may have been regulated and defined by the partnership contract.

It was not, therefore, any contravention of that section for the plaintiff to seek a dissolution, or for the Court to decree it, though the partnership agreement contemplated the continuance of the partnership beyond the date at which the suit was instituted. No man can exclude himself from the protection of the Courts, and yet, if the view of the Appellate Bench is to prevail, this is what the Nawab has done, for a decree for dissolution would be the protection appropriate in the circumstances of this case. It is no answer to say that this partnership was not terminable at will; it is to meet that precise predicament that the Court's power to decree dissolution is conferred in the events enumerated in section 254. For a partnership terminable at will no such provision would be required.

Their Lordships, therefore, are unable to affirm the decision of the Appellate Bench as to the competence of the suit. But this leaves open the question whether the Court's discretion should be exercised for or against the Nawab's claim. The Appellate Bench decided adversely to it, and it was urged in argument against interference with this decision that it is opposed to sound practice for an Appellate Court to substitute its discretion for that of the Court from which an appeal has been preferred. The justice of this argument is undoubted, but it was at least as relevant before the Appellate Bench as it is before this Board. And yet the Appellate Bench did not hesitate to express its readiness to substitute its discretion for that of the original Court, although in the view it took of the Court's jurisdiction the question could not arise.

In these circumstances the real question is whether there was or is any justification for questioning or disturbing the discretion exercised by the original Court when it passed the decree for dissolution in the Nawab's favour. It cannot be said that the Court acted capriciously or in disregard of any legal principle in this exercise of its discretion. On the contrary, there are elements in the case which can fairly be regarded as ample warrant for the first Court's decision, and for this it is enough to point to the dual position of the defendants, which brought their interests as contractors into sharp conflict with their duties as partners of the Nawab, and also to the prominence given in the recital to the common purpose that the quarries should be remunerative and profitable to the partners.

REHMAT-UN-NISSA BEGUM v. PRICE.

Their Lordships, therefore, hold that there is no sufficient ground for disturbing the original decree so far as it pronounced for a dissolution.

The next inquiry involved in this appeal is as to the amount of the average rate of expense prescribed as a limit by clause 25 of the partnership instrument. This clause was inserted as a protection for the Nawab; it in effect imposed a limit on expenditure by the controlling partners, and the measure of that limit was the rate of expenditure in the past.

It had originally been arranged that the rate should be embodied in the document. Its ascertainment had been entrusted to Mr. Chukerbutty on behalf of the Nawab, and Mr. Stuart on behalf of the defendants, but they were unable to agree to a figure in time for its inclusion in the engrossment.

On the 10th March 1905, however, the two representatives agreed to a figure, and the contest is as to what the figure covered. On the same day Stuart wrote on behalf of the defendants and sent to the Nawab a letter in the following terms:—

"We beg to confirm the rate agreed upon with Mr. Chukerbutty this day as referring to clause No. 25 in the proposed agreement between you and ourselves, viz., Bombay Government, rupee 1, annas 7, per cubic foot for all labour on granite for quarrying, dressing, and hauling to station."

On the 11th the partnership instrument was executed by the Nawab at Hyderabad and from an endorsement it appears that it was read over and interpreted to him by Chukerbutty. It probably had been previously signed by or on behalf of the defendants at Bombay, though no distinct proof as to this has been brought to their Lordships' notice.

On the 14th March the Nawab wrote to the defendants as follows:—

"In reply to your letter dated the 10th regarding the working expense of granite stone at Lingampalli, I beg to point out the rate of 1/7 rupees was arrived at on calculation on wrong basis. This has got to be revised on actual working before it can be acceded to."

Here it becomes necessary to refer to an admission made in the course of the suit and contained in a letter of the 30th July 1913 written by the plaintiffs' attorneys to the defendants' solicitors. It is expressed to be in confirmation of what had passed between Counsel for the parties at a meeting on the previous day and after stating that "with a view to shortening proceedings" certain charges were abandoned, it runs as follows:—

"We also give notice that for the above reasons and for the purposes of this suit only our client admits that at or about the time of signing the partnership agreement . . . it was agreed between the parties that the cost of working the quarries should not exceed the rate of 1/7 rupees (British currency) per cubic foot of stone. We think it right to add that this admission must not be taken as an admission that the said rate included only the items apparently contended for by the defendants as shown in the accounts submitted by them to our client."

This admission is of vital importance: it controls this branch of the case, and narrows the region of enquiry. Not only does it decisively affirm and place beyond controversy the fact that there was an agreement and that according to that agreement the rate was not to exceed 1/7 rupees, but it excludes the possibility of any objection to its admissibility under section 91 or 92 of Evidence Act. The one qualification is that the rate did not only include the three items of quarrying, dressing, and hauling. All, therefore, that has to be considered and determined is whether under the agreement between Chukerbutty and Stuart three items only or more than three items were covered by the accepted rate of 1/7 rupees. It is beside the point to speculate as to whether this figure was assessed in error; for if error there was, the proceedings are not aptly framed for its correction.

On the question whether, in the agreement between Chukerbutty and Stuart, these three items and these alone were included, the evidence stands thus. The letter of the 10th March is explicit on the point; it states that the 1/7 rupees were for these three items and for nothing else. It was written and sent on the very day the agreement was made and just after Chukerbutty had left, so there would be no room for forgetfulness in the matter. Nor is it reasonable to suppose that Stuart would have at once sat down and deliberately given a false version of the agreement. And then there is the significant circumstance that the agreement was subsequently signed by the Nawab without any protest or repudiation of the terms contained in the letter, and this was done in the presence of Chukerbatty, who, it is sworn, was always first consulted by the Nawab before signing anything, and who on this occasion acted as interpreter. It is true that on the 14th the Nawab wrote objecting to the letter of the 10th, but his objection was not that no agreement had been made in the terms stated by Stuart, but that the calculation had been on a wrong basis. And then there is the evidence of Stuart. He declares that the rate agreed upon between Chukerbatty and himself was 17 rupees per cubic foot, and that the letter of the 10th March correctly states the agreement. His veracity has not been impugned, but it has been strenuously contended on behalf of the Nawab that in view of the figures in Exhibit 27, the estimate of cost of stone prepared by Mr. Gay, and of Stuart's evidence as to the use made of those figures in arriving at the rate on which he and Chukerbatty ultimately agreed, it is impossible that the rate of 17 rupees could have been for the three items of quarrying, dressing, and hauling only, and that it must also have included loading, depreciation, royalty, quarry expenses, and incidentals.

Their Lordships recognise the force of this criticism, and realise that the coincidence of the figures in Exhibit 27 with this contention is worthy of consideration. But at the same time they feel that it would be easy to attribute too much weight to it, and more particularly as Stuart's evidence was given in answer to interrogatories and cross-interrogatories administered on commission, so that there was no opportunity of giving the examination a direction which would have elucidated the full significance of answers which now remain obscure. In the circumstances it is at least as probable that the estimate of 17 rupees was limited to the three items as the result of a compact between Chukerbatty and Stuart reached by accommodation or possibly even in error, as that the agreed rate of 17 rupees was not limited to the three items.

As it is involved in the Nawab's admission of the 30th July 1913 that there was an agreement for a rate of 17 rupees, and the only evidence on the record is that this rate covered the three items and no more, in the absence of contradiction by Chukerbatty or any one else able to speak to the point, their Lordships hold that this must be accepted, and the decision of the Appellate Bench on this point upheld.

It only remains to consider the defendants' contention that they had established such "extraordinary circumstances" as would justify the increase of the rate as provided by clause 25. The burden of making this good was on the defendants, and the question is, whether they have succeeded in this. What then are the "extraordinary circumstances?" The only direct evidence is that of Gay, and all that can be spelt out of his evidence is that the circumstances occasioning greater expenditure were (1) the preparation of culvert stones; and (2) the importation of labour. The first of these cannot be regarded as an extraordinary circumstance, for the schedule to the partnership instrument shows that it must have been within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made.

So there only remains the importation of labour. This may have occasioned an increase of expenditure, but it certainly is not shown that it was an extraordinary circumstance that should raise the limit on the rate of expense prescribed in clause 25. This importation was due to an extension of the quarrying operations and was a normal development of the business made by the defendants to suit their own convenience and meet their requirements, not as partners of the Nawab, but as contractors engaged on the construction of the dock in Bombay.

Their Lordships, therefore, hold that no "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of clause 25 have been proved.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty to allow this appeal and to direct that the decree of the Appeal Court should be set aside and that of the original Court restored, (1) with the variation that so much thereof as orders that in taking the account thereby Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 59—Occupancy tenancy—Joint tenants—Survivorship, right of—Tenants recorded as having defined shares, effect of.

The right of a landlord to claim the extinction of an occupancy right when there are joint tenants does not arise on the death of one of them, as they collectively constitute a single tenant and the right continues to exist in the survivor or survivors. [p. 576, col. 2.]

Agar Singh v. Dhana, 6 P. R. 1902 Rev.; 11 P. L. R. 1903, followed.

The fact that the occupancy tenants are recorded as having defined shares in the tenancy does not make any difference and does not affect the right of survivorship. [p. 576, col. 2.]

Chanda Singh v. Jivan Singh, 42 Ind. Cas. 87; 6 P. R. 1917 Rev.; 5 P. W. R. 1917 Rev., followed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 5th May 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Sonapat, District Rohtak, dated the 30th November 1915, dismissing the claim.

FACTS appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, for the Appellants.—In this case the plaintiffs base their claim on two alternative grounds. First, that they are entitled to succeed under section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act; secondly that the tenancy is joint and that they are entitled to succeed to Mamraj's share by survivorship. Under section 59 of the Tenancy Act it is necessary to prove that the common ancestor of the plaintiffs and of Mamraj occupied the land in dispute. Both the Courts below have held that the plaintiffs have failed to prove occupation by the common ancestor, so that that finding is conclusive in second appeal. As regards the second ground of claim the lower Appellate Court has gone hopelessly wrong. It has found that the tenancy in dispute is a joint tenancy. That is wrong. In this tenancy the shares of the parties are defined, whereas in the case of a joint Hindu family there are no defined shares.

[SCOTT-SMITH, J.—Askaran and Surta acquired the tenancy jointly.]

The only question before your Lordships is whether the tenancy in dispute is a joint tenancy. Referred to Mohru v. Mutsaddi (1), Agar Singh v. Dhana (2) and Kahn Singh v. Hardit Singh (3).

[SCOTT SMITH, J.—Agar Singh v. Dhana (2) is not very much in point. In that case there had been partition. Kahn Singh v. Hardit Singh (3) referred to mortgages.]

The principle is the same. The conception of joint tenancy is peculiar to the Hindu Law and to the English Law. Munni v. Umrao Singh (4).

[SCOTT SMITH, J.—That is not in point either.]

If the tenancy had been joint, then on the death of Mamraj the property should have gone to the plaintiffs. The fact that Musammal Bholi succeeded to her husband's share shows that the tenancy was not joint.

[SCOTT SMITH, J.—In the case of the death of one joint tenant does not his son succeed to his share?]

No.

Mr. Zafarullah Khan, for the Respondents.—It has been urged for the appellants that the tenancy in dispute is not joint because the shares of the parties therein are defined, and also because if the tenancy had been joint Musammal Bholi would not have succeeded to her husband's share. Now a joint tenancy in the Punjab is not the same thing as a joint estate under Hindu Law or English Law. It is a peculiar kind of tenancy in which, as against the landlord, the whole body of tenants constitutes one tenant, so that so long as any of the tenants or the heirs of any of them are in existence, the landlord cannot come in and there is no room for the application of section 59 of the Tenancy Act. On the other hand, as between the tenants themselves the rule of survivorship has no application and on the death of a co-sharer in the tenancy his heir or heirs succeed to his share in the tenancy. The principles of Hindu Law or of English Law have no application to such a tenancy. Mohru v. Mustiddi (1), cited by the Counsel for the appellants, supports my contention. See the remarks of Roe, J., on page 420. * Agar Singh v. Dhana (2) is not against me. In the present case there has been no partition or division of the tenancy. On the contrary there is joint cultivation.

[SCOTT SMITH, J.—But the shares are defined.]

Yes, but that makes no difference. In every joint tenancy the Revenue Authorities are bound to define the shares. The test is whether the khata is joint or divided. If there is a single khata the tenancy is joint, even if there is separate cultivation by agreement among the co-sharers. See Chanda Singh v. Juran Singh (5). That was a much stronger case in favour of the landlords than the present one. In that case the tenancy had been purchased by two persons in equal shares. Their shares were defined and there had been separate cultivation. Even then it was held that in default of actual and effective partition the tenancy continued to be joint as against the landlord. Here there is one khata and joint cultivation.

As regards the succession of Musammal Bholi to her husband's share, I have already explained that in a joint tenancy of this kind the rule of survivorship does not apply as among the co-sharers.

Rai Sahib Lala Moti Sagar, in reply.

JUDGMENT.—In this case plaintiffs-respondents claim to succeed to certain occupancy land left by Musammal Bholi, widow of Mamraj. The pedigree-table of the plaintiffs and the deceased occupancy tenant is as follows :—

Askaran and Surta were joint occupancy tenants in equal shares in 33 bighas 11 biswas of land. Mamraj was adopted by Surta after the death of his son Shadi, and succeeded to Surta in the occupancy tenancy. Upon Mamraj's death without issue Bholi succeeded to a life-interest. She having now died the plaintiffs base their claim on two grounds :—

(1) that the land was occupied by Rati Ram, the common ancestor of themselves and of Surta, and

(2) that they are entitled to succeed by right of survivorship.

(5) 42 Ind. Cas. 87; 6 P. R. 1917 Rev.; 5 P. W. R. 1917 Rev.

UDMI v. MUNSHI.

The Courts below have concurred in holding that it is not proved that Rati Ram occupied the land and this decision is final. The lower Appellate Court, however, differing from the first Court, held that plaintiffs were entitled to succeed to the land in dispute by right of survivorship.

The landlords have filed a second appeal to this Court and it is contended on their behalf that Mamraj and the plaintiffs were not joint tenants but only tenants-in-common and that amongst tenants-in-common the principle of right of survivorship does not obtain.

In support of this contention Counsel has referred to Mohru v. Mutsaddi (1), Agar Singh v. Dhana (2), Khan Singh v. Hardit Singh (3) and Munni v. Umrao Singh (4). Counsel for the respondents on the other hand relies upon Agar Singh v. Dhana (2), Chanda Singh v. Jiwan Singh (5) and also refers to certain remarks in Mohru v. Mutsaddi (1) at page 420. Mohru v. Mutsaddi (1) is not quite on all fours with the present case. What was decided there was that as between the tenants themselves the principle of survivorship did not operate, so as to exclude the reversioners of a deceased tenant who would otherwise be entitled to succeed in accordance with section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. As pointed out by the Financial Commissioner in Chanda Singh v. Jiwan Singh (5), what was really held in the Full Bench ruling of 1894 was that as regards the landlord the joint tenants of a holding, even though it was not held by a common ancestor, are to be regarded as a single tenant and that as long as any of them or the descendants of them survive, the landlord cannot claim the share of any tenant whose line has died out. The Financial Commissioner held that as partition in the case before him had not been effected, the tenancy as a whole continued as against the landlords to be the property of the surviving tenants. If this decision is correct, the plaintiffs in the present case were entitled to succeed to the land in dispute according to the principle of survivorship. Khan Singh v. Hardit Singh (3) is not on all fours with the present case. The facts there were as follows:—The landlords of the land in dispute (represented by the defendants) executed a mortgage in favour of three persons, Khan Singh, Nihal Singh and Kishan Singh. Under the terms of the mortgage-deed the land was mortgaged to each mortgagee in specified shares, each mortgagee receiving a third share in the entire property. It was further provided in the deed that if the mortgagors did not redeem the said land within two years, the mortgagees were to be entitled to occupancy rights. Some years subsequent to the mortgage it was held, upon the landlords suing to redeem the mortgage, that the mortgagees had acquired occupancy rights in the land. It was held by the Chief Court that as the mortgage was effected in defined shares in favour of three persons, the mortgagees were not joint tenants within the legal meaning of that expression, and that being so the principle of survivorship did not apply. In that case each mortgagee received a third share in the entire property and each acquired occupancy rights in a 1/3rd share. They did not acquire joint occupancy rights and, therefore, they could not be considered to be joint tenants. In Agar Singh v. Dhana (2) it was held that as section 59 of the Tenancy Act deals only with the question of succession and does not affect the ordinary rule of survivorship between joint tenants, the right of the landlord to claim the extinction of an occupancy right where there are joint tenants does not arise on the death of one of them, as they collectively constituted a single tenant, and the right continues to exist in the survivor or survivors. As pointed out by the Financial Commissioner in Chanda Singh v. Jiwan Singh (5), the fact that the occupancy tenants are recorded as having defined shares in the tenancy does not make any difference and does not affect the right of survivorship.

It has been held in the present case that the tenancy was jointly acquired by Askaran and Surta and there has been no partition thereof. In my opinion the decision of the lower Appellate Court that plaintiffs are entitled to succeed by right of survivorship to the share left by Musammam Bholi is in accordance with the previous authorities and especially with Chanda Singh v. Jiwan Singh (5). There is no authority exactly on all fours which supports the arguments of appellant's Counsel that the principle of survivorship does not apply where the tenants are recorded to hold defined shares in the joint tenancy.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Bombay Bhagdari and Narvadari Act (V Bom of 1862), s. 3—Award deciding recognised sub-division of Bhag, validity of.

An award the result of which would be to effect further division in a certain recognised sub-division of a Bhag is void under section 3 of the Bombay Bhagdari and Narvadari Act. [p. 577, col. 2.]

The substance and effect of the transaction is what must be looked to for the purpose of determining whether it is within the mischief which the Legislature had in view in passing the Bombay Bhagdari and Narvadari Act. If the transaction clearly amounts to an alienation of an unrecognised sub-division of a share in a warra, its real nature cannot be disguised by calling it a compromise. [p. 578, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 146 of 1916, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Borsad, in Suit No. 377 of 1914.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, AG. C. J.—Omitting any reference to certain allegations, which are not now material, the substance of the plaint was a prayer to recover from the defendants possession of the two Survey Nos. 196 and 208, on the ground that the original owner of them was the plaintiff's brother, Fakir Garbad, and that the plaintiff was both his heiress under Hindu Law and his legatee under a Will; that the defendants being distant cousins of Fakir Garbad took from the plaintiff a certain deed of gift, Exhibit 16, in respect of these fields; but that that deed was void, and of no effect, under the terms of section 3 of the Bhagdari and Narvadari Act (Bom. Act V of 1862). The lower Courts have decided this latter point in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendants bring the present appeal.

Mr. Thakor on their behalf contends that section 3 of the Bhagdari Act does not apply to such a case as we have here, where a dispute between the plaintiff and the defendants regarding their claims to inherit to Fakir Garbad was settled by reference to arbitrators, who awarded the two Nos. 196 and 208 to the defendants. Admittedly the result of this award, if it were allowed to stand, would be to effect further division in a certain recognised sub-division of a Bhag. But the learned Pleader's contention here is that there is nothing in the Bhagdari Act to prohibit the taking by inheritance of an unrecognised portion of a Bhag, and if that is so, the Court should hold in this case that the properties were given to the defendants, not by alienation from any acknowledged owner, but in satisfaction of the defendants' right to succeed to Fakir Garbad.

The learned Pleader began his argument by referring to Veribhai v. Raghabhai (1), a decision of Mr. Justice Melvill and Mr. Justice Kimball. It was there held that there was nothing in the Bombay Bhagdari Act which debarred a Civil Court from making a decree for the partition of Narvadari land among the Bhagdars, even though the effect of that partition would cause a further division of recognised sub-divisions of Bhags. I think, however, that that is a case of which the authority ought not to be extended, for if I read rightly Mr. Justice Melvill's judgment, the Court's decision turned less upon a rigorous interpretation of section 3 of the Bhagdari Act than upon an assurance that the particular partition there sought by the plaintiffs would not be objected to by the Revenue Authorities. The Court, therefore, apparently thought that there would be no harm in giving the plaintiffs the partition for which they prayed, leaving them to run their risks with the Revenue Authorities. On the other hand, the decision in Jethabhai v. Nuthabhai (2) appears to me directly in point here. That was a case where one Kashibhai held a recognised sub-division in a Narva. After his death and the death of his widow the plaintiffs alleged that they had inherited the property as heirs of Kashibhai. This led to disputes between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and ultimately a suit was brought. The suit failed. But before the period for appeal expired, the parties effected an amicable settlement which was embodied in Exhibit 44 in the suit. Mr. Justice Chandavarkar, in delivering the Court's decision, says:—

(1) 1 B. 226; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 150.

CHANDRABATI KUAR v. THE COLLECTOR OF DARBHANGA.

"The first question is—whether Exhibit 44 had the effect of alienating a portion of a Bhag or share in the Narva other than a recognised sub-division of such Bhag or share and was on that account void within the meaning of section 5 of Bombay Act V of 1862?"

"It is argued for the plaintiffs that Exhibit 44 is not affected by that section, because, it is urged, it was a compromise entered into for the settlement of a bona fide dispute between the parties. The answer to that, however, is that the result of the compromise was to dismember Survey No. 275, which comprised 4 acres and 8 gunthas, and to give to the plaintiffs 2 acres and 4 gunthas out of it. In other words, by Exhibit 44 was carved out of the Narva a sub-division which did not exist at the date of the transaction as 'a recognised sub-division.' Whether we call it a compromise or a partition or by any other name, the effect of the transaction was the same. The substance and effect of the transaction is what must be looked to for the purpose of determining whether it is within the mischief which the Legislature had in view in passing the Act in question. If the transaction clearly amounts to an alienation of an unrecognised sub-division of a share in a Narva, its real nature cannot be disguised by calling it a compromise."

The facts there were indistinguishable in substance from the facts now before us, and the decision of the Bench in that case is binding upon us. Speaking for myself, I agree with that decision, and it must, I think, be applied to the facts in this appeal. For these reasons, I would affirm the lower Appellate Court's decree and dismiss this appeal with costs.

KEMP, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil revision against an order of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 19th January 1917.

Mr. Lachmi Narain Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sullan Ahmad (Government Advocate), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—This application was ordered to be heard first with regard to the question whether this Court had jurisdiction or not to interfere with the order passed by the District Judge on the application of the petitioner for a reduction in the Court-fees charged as probate duty on a sum equal to the capitalised value of Rs. 150 per mensem.

It appears that one Chandi Prasad Singh died leaving a Will; and also leaving two widows and a mother. In the Will the deceased appointed the senior widow as the sole executrix; and it was provided in the Will that the junior widow was to get an annuity of Rs. 50 a month and the mother an annuity of Rs. 100 a month.

The petitioner made a valuation of the nett value of the property of the deceased and the Collector of Darbhanga generally accepted and approved of the valuation, but he disallowed the reduction as observed above. The learned District Judge agreed with the Collector on this point, and from the order of the District Judge the present application is made.

The present application is under section 115 of the Code, and the question for determination is whether under section 115 we can interfere with, and set aside, the order of the District Judge. There can be no doubt that the District Judge had full jurisdiction to pass the order that he did. No doubt, if the District Judge had been guilty of passing a totally perverse order we might have been justified in interfering with it; but the order that he has passed was passed after careful consideration of the Act and we, therefore, hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with his order.

Apart from this consideration, however, the application must also fail on its merits.

The contention of the applicant is that, inasmuch as a charge has been made on the income of the estate to the extent of Rs. 150 a month, this should be treated as a debt, and that, therefore, in accordance with Schedule III, Annexures A and B of the Court Fees Act, a deduction should have been allowed.

Annexure A of Schedule III deals with the valuation of moveable and immoveable property of a deceased person; and at the bottom of the annexure it is provided that a deduction should be made on account of the items mentioned in Annexure B, and these items are:—

(1) Amount of debts due and owing from the deceased, payable by law out of the estate;

(2) Amount of funeral expenses;

(3) Amount of mortgage incumbrances;

(4) Property held in trust not beneficially or with general power to confer a beneficial interest;

(5) Other property not subject to duty.

There can be no doubt that these charges have to be deducted in assessing Court-fees.

It is contended that the fourth item of Annexure B relates to property held in trust under the Will not beneficially to the interest of the executrix of the Will. In my opinion, the trusts here referred to are trusts held not beneficially by the testator during his lifetime, but trusts created by the Will. That being the view I take, I must hold that the Court-fee chargeable should be calculated on the nett value of the whole estate which is the subject of the Will.

On behalf of the petitioner reliance is placed on the decision in In the goods of Rushton (1). That was a reference made by the Taxing Officer to the Chief Justice of Calcutta, and it appears from the report that the order made must have been passed in Chambers as nobody appeared in the matter. The decision is quite contrary to that in In the goods of Ram Chunder Doss (2). Another decision relied upon on behalf of the applicant is that in Raj Kumari Bhubaneswari v. Collector of Gaya (3). Reliance is also placed on the decision in In the goods of Harriett Teviot Kerr (4). That was not a case of annuity and what was held was that the Court-fee payable upon the property under the Act is to be calculated upon the nett value of the estate after the deduction of debts from the gross value of the estate. In the present case there was no debt. If there had been a debt or a non-beneficial trust, created in the life-time of the testator, no doubt under the Act a deduction would have to be made; but this is not a case in which there is any such debt or trust. Therefore, I hold that on the merits even applicant has no case.

Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4—Suit for declaration of ownership in respect of share in vatan, maintainability of—Certificate of Collector, necessity of.

A suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of a certain share in a kulkarni vatan falls within the purview of section 4 of the Pensions Act and is not maintainable without the Collector's certificate.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 331 of 1915, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Devgad, in Civil Suit No. 314 of 1914.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to have it declared that he was the owner of a ten-pies share out of a one-anna eight-pies share, and a still larger share standing in the name of the defendant in the Kulkarni Vatan of the village of Mutat. The share was in land revenue assigned for the purpose of supporting the office of Kulkarni. Section 4 of the Pensions Act provides that no Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any grant of land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for any such pension or grant, and whatever may have been the nature of the payment, claim or right for which such pension or grant may have been substituted.

The applicability of this section to cases of the description which we now have before us has been considered in various reported judgments of this Court, notably in Babaji Hari v. Rajaram Ballal (1) and Dwarkanath Amrit v. Mahadev Balkrishna (2). Both judgments emphatically assert the necessity of applying the section without modification to all suits of this nature. In Balvant Ramchandra v. Secretary of State (3) the section was very exhaustively discussed, together with the authorities which have accumulated upon it, in the judgment of Mr. Justice Batty and in that judgment will be found an express acceptance of the conclusions arrived at by the Court in Babaji Hari v. Rajaram Ballal (1). It is, however, said that those conclusions are inconsistent with the judgment of Sir Charles Sargent in Govind Silaram v. Bopuji Mahadeo (4). That judgment, as shown in Dwarkanath v. Mahadev (2), related to a case expressly provided for by the Vatan Act, in which the Legislature contemplated that a decree of a Court should be obtainable, for it was a case in which the plaintiff's status as Vatanadar was challenged, and the Court held that that being so, his right of access to the Civil Court was not to be ousted merely because the greater part of the remuneration for the Vatan service consisted of a money grant from Government. Here we are not concerned with any question of disputed status. The plaintiff is a member of a Vatan family who by reason of his membership has been able to acquire by purchase a certain share in the Vatan property, and his suit now relates to the share of revenue assigned for the Vatan, a suit relating to which falls within the purview of section 4 of the Pensions Act. We, therefore, affirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Babu Dharendra Lal Kastgir (with him Babu Tarakeswar Mitter), for the Appellant.—Plaintiff sued as a Mutwalli of a mosque for recovery of khas possession. Plaintiff's case is that the disputed property was made Wakf by Nawab Yasin Khan and his predecessors. In 1765 Lutfulla was Mutwalli; he was succeeded by his eldest son Diamulla. In 1804 Diamulla appointed his grandson Tofel Ali as Mutwalli. This Tofel Ali in 1850 appointed his minor grandson Abdul Sobhan as Mutwalli. This Abdul Sobhan after holding the office of Mutwalli for many years executed a document called tauliatnama, by which he appointed the present plaintiff Sultan Ahmad as his successor. Plaintiff also bases his claim on the rule of primogeniture.

The appointment of the plaintiff as Mutwalli by the tauliatnama of 1902 executed by Abdul Sobhan is legal and valid, because the tauliatnama is a valid document of a testamentary character and has been executed out of free will. So the plaintiff is a de jure Mutwalli. The doctrine of marzul-maut is not applicable here. The Muhammadian Endowments Committee of Chittagong has recognised plaintiff's appointment. Moreover the plaintiff is in receipt of Government pension in his character of a Mutwalli and this shows that he has been recognised by the Government.

Babu Charu Chandra Sen (with him M. Nuruddin Ahmed), for the Respondent.—The rule of primogeniture has not been proved in the present case. Plaintiff's case is absolutely based on the tauliatnama of 1902. Abdul Sobhan while in health could not legally appoint plaintiff as Mutwalli. He could be appointed only during Abdul Sobhan's death bed illness. Evidence establishes that Abdul Sobhan was not suffering from marzul maut at the time of the plaintiff's appointment as Mutwalli. Plaintiff's appointment was invalid because Abdul Sobhan could not transfer the Mutwalli-ship during his lifetime without permission from the Judge. The Muhammadian Endowments Committee of Chittagong is not a legally constituted body and has not been proved to possess any statutory power to recognise Mutwallis and, therefore, its recognition is of no avail. The appointment of Abdul Sobhan was illegal as he was a minor in 1850 at the time of his appointment. A minor cannot be appointed Mutwalli. So the appointment of plaintiff is not legally valid. Receipt of Government pension does not create any valid right as a Mutwalli, nor does it validate an invalid appointment. Plaintiff is receiving it as a de facto Mutwalli and that will not make him a de jure Mutwalli.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 29th May 1915. The appellant is the plaintiff and the suit has a somewhat chequered history. It was brought to recover possession of certain lands which the plaintiff claims as part of the Wakf properties appertaining to a mosque in the district of Chittagong of which he is the Mutwalli. The trial Court made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. That decree was upheld by the lower Appellate Court; but on remand by this Court the suit has been dismissed. All the material issues which arise in this case have been decided in the plaintiff's favour except the issue whether he is the de jure Mutwalli of the mosque. On this question the learned District Judge has come to a conclusion adverse to the plaintiff. That conclusion, however, is based on a misapplication of Muhammadan Law to the facts of this case. The endowment is one of very old standing. It was apparently in existence when the District of Chittagong was taken over by the East India Company. There was a measurement of the district in the year 1764, when a person named Lutfulla was the Mutwalli. It appears that certain lands belonging to the mosque were then resumed by the Revenue Authorities and in their place a monthly grant of Rs. 52-14-0 was made to the Mutwalli which is still at the present day being paid. In the year 1837, another measurement of the District was carried out. On that occasion other lands were resumed, which were re-granted in whole or in part as a Taluk at a nominal rent to the then Mutwalli Tofel Ali. This Taluk which comprises the land in dispute was afterwards held and treated as part of the property of the mosque. Tofel Ali appears to have been succeeded by his grandson Abdul Sobhan in the year 1850. Abdul Sobhan held the office for many years. On the 30th June 1902 six or seven months before his death he executed a document described as a tauliatnama, by which he designated the present plaintiff, Sultan Ahmad, as his successor.

The case for the plaintiff is that during Abdul Sobhan's incumbency two persons were appointed to act as Naib Mutwallis to whom the management of the endowment was entrusted. It is alleged that by their contrivance the Taluk was allowed to fall into arrears of revenue. At the sale which followed in 1881 it was purchased by the Naib Mutwallis themselves in the name of a third person as benamdar, from whom they subsequently obtained a deed of release. The defendants Nos. 1 to 5 in the suit are the present representatives of the two Naib Mutwallis. The defendant No. 6 holds a lease of the land in suit from the defendant No. 1.

As I have said, all material questions of fact, pure and simple, have been decided in favour of the plaintiff, but while no one disputes that he is the de facto Mutwalli, it has been held that he has failed to establish a de jure title.

The learned District Judge has considered that question with reference solely to the tauliatnama of the 30th June 1902. Even as to that document he finds that it was duly executed and that Abdul Sobhan was not at the time insane as the defendants contended, but was in possession of his mental faculties. The learned Judge has reached his conclusion by applying to the case the doctrine of marzul-maut. His view is that the tauliatnama is void and of no effect because it was not executed by Abdul Sobhan on his death-bed or while he was suffering from what is termed a death-bed illness or mortal sickness. But in the case of a gift or other voluntary disposition of property, the doctrine of marzul-maut only applies when the gift is made during such illness. The learned District Judge apparently had in mind a rule that a Mutwalli cannot ordinarily transfer his office during his lifetime [Wahid Ali v. Ashruff Hossain (1), Salimulla Bahadur v. Abdul Kayer Mohammad Mustafa (2)], but may do so on his death-bed (Ameer Ali, 3rd Edition, page 346). Let it be assumed that such a rule correctly represents the Muhammadan Law. It still remains that the tauliatnama is capable of being, and should be, construed as a document of a testamentary character, speaking as from the moment of death. If that be its true significance, it is clearly unnecessary to consider what precisely is the meaning of the term marzul-maut under the Hanifi law by which the parties are said to be governed. An office to which is attached the right of appointing a successor is well known to the law. If Abdul Sobhan had such a right or power either under the Muhammadan Law or under any general law applicable to this topic and if he freely executed the tauliatnama as a testamentary document, while he was of sound disposing mind, its validity cannot be questioned [Sayad Muhammad v. Fattah Muhammad (3), Sayad Abdula Edrus v. Sayad Zain (4)].

There is evidence on the record that Abdul Sobhan was himself appointed Mutwali by a tauliatnama executed by his predecessor. In the course of the argument reference has been made to a robakari dated the 2nd January 1851 under the signature of the Commissioner of the Division, which purports to confirm Abdul Sobhan's appointment as Mutwali under a tauliatnama, dated the 15th September 1850. This robakari was issued under the authority of Regulation XIX of 1810, to which it refers and under which religious endowments were controlled by the executive authorities.

But it is not necessary to determine on this occasion whether the Mutwali of this endowment has the right of appointing his successor or to insist on the efficacy of the tauliatnama in the plaintiff's favour.

Nor would it be proper for this Court in second appeal to lay down the rule by which succession to this office is governed. The deed, if any, by which the endowment was created is not forthcoming and the rule depends on evidence relating to the practice or usage which has prevailed in the past. The plaintiff is apparently the lineal descendant of Lutfulla, the earliest Mutwali of whom any mention is made, and his pedigree lends some colour to the suggestion that succession to the office is regulated by the rule of lineal primogeniture, or at any rate that regard is had to that rule. But the question must be left open for future discussion should it again arise.

I turn to a part of this case which the learned District Judge has entirely neglected. It is not disputed that the plaintiff is in receipt of the Government stipend to which I have referred. That in itself is something, but it further appears that before sanctioning the payment of this allowance to the plaintiff the Collector referred the matter to the Muhammadan Endowments Committee of the District of Chittagong. The letter which the Committee addressed to the Collector, dated the 17th June 1903, is on the record. It contains a clear recognition of the plaintiff's title to the office. Now, the fact that the endowment is one of the description mentioned in section 3 of the Religious Endowment Act of 1863 (Act XX of 1863) is shown by the reference in the robakari of 1851 to Regulation XIX of 1810. The endowment is clearly a mosque or religious institution to which the Regulation applied before it was repealed by the Act. By section 7 of the Act the control of such endowments was transferred to the Committees to be appointed under that section, "which were to take the place and to exercise the powers of the Board of Revenue and the local agents under the Regulation." The Muhammadan Endowments Committee at Chittagong is, therefore, a statutory body and its recognition of the plaintiff as the true and rightful Mutwali, if such recognition be necessary, is authoritative.

It is not suggested that there has ever been any dispute as to the right of succession to this office, such as would require the intervention of the civil Court under section 5 of the Act. In fact there is no other claimant to the office in the field and the whole discussion has an air of unreality. Whatever test be applied the plaintiff satisfies it. If he required appointment by his predecessor he was so appointed. If the office is hereditary and the tauliatnama was a gratuitous or superfluous act on the part of Abdul Sobhan, it indicates at least that in the latter's opinion the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The plaintiff has been recognised as Mutwali by the Endowments Committee: he is in receipt of the Government stipend and is in fact in possession of the office.

The conclusion of the District Judge rests entirely on a mistaken view of the law. There is no evidence by which it can be supported. The evidence is all the other way and the only conclusion of which it admits is a conclusion in favour of the plaintiff. In my opinion the judgment and decree of the District Judge must be discharged and the decree of the Munsif restored and affirmed.

As the defendant No. 6 stated through his learned Pleader that he would not

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The point argued in this appeal arises in this way. Ramchandrabhat, the father of the appellant and of the husband of the respondent, acquired certain property in such a manner as to make it admittedly his own self-acquired property. Thereafter, the Courts below have found, by his own volition and intention he converted it from self acquired property into joint family property between himself and his two sons, Rangbhat and Bandbhat. In 1898, after the property had thus received the impress of joint family property, Rangbhat, the appellant, separated from his father and brother. In the partition, the Court finds, this property was taken into calculation and Rangbhat's share given him on that basis. Thereafter, Bandbhat and his father Ramchandrabhat constituted a joint Hindu family in respect of the residue of the property in their possession. On Ramchandrabhat's death Bandbhat took the whole and on his death his widow, the respondent, takes a life-estate.

The case for Rangbhat is that as the property was self-acquired, it was impossible for Ramchandrabhat by any act of volition to convert its character into that of joint family property. And he relies on the text of the Mitakshara and a decision in the Calcutta High Court. Jasoda Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (1). I am, however, of opinion that in neither case is the classification exhaustive. I see no difficulty in principle in holding, as I believe this Court has repeatedly held, that a member of a joint Hindu family who has acquired property of his own may convert it into joint family property in the ordinary sense of the term and that thereafter all the members of the family will have the same rights in it as though it had been acquired originally by their joint exertions or descended to them from a common ancestor. If there is really no difficulty in that view, then nothing is left to argue about. The facts have been found by the lower Appellate Court and it is only on the ground that those facts involve a legal impossibility that Mr. Abhyankar has constructed his argument. For my part I think that that argument is altogether too technical. In the very common case of a Hindu who has acquired considerable property before the birth of any children, suppose three sons are born to him and during their lifetime he deliberately associates them with himself in the enjoyment of all the property he had acquired, thus converting its character into joint family property, it is not denied that on his death they would receive it in the character of joint ancestral family property. But in such a case they acquire no interest in it merely by birth. And that is in effect exactly the case with which we are dealing here; for although these sons may have been born at the time Ramchandrabhat obtained this property, this, in my opinion, makes no difference in principle. It is indeed apparently conceded that Rangbhat and Bandbhat would have inherited this property on the death of Ramchandrabhat as joint ancestral family property. But it is urged that the separation of Rangbhat from Ramchandrabhat and Bandbhat cannot in any way affect the devolution of the remaining property treated as joint family property in the hands of Ramchandrabhat and Bandbhat and that Rangbhat must, on the death of Ramchandrabhat, succeed with Bandbhat equally to all this property as joint ancestral family property. That, however, is a principle which ignores altogether the prior conversion of the property from self-acquired into joint family property, a principle to which, as I have said, this Court I believe has repeatedly given effect.

(1) 17 C. 33; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 561.

GANESH PRASAD V. KHUDA BAKHSH.

In this view of the case there will be no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion reached by the lower Appellate Court on the facts that the family of Ramchandrabhat, Rangbhat and Bandbhat was joint in respect of the whole of the property before the separation of Rangbhat in 1898 and that thereafter the remainder of the property possessed jointly by Ramchandrabhat and Bandbhat was taken by survivorship on the death of Ramchandrabhat by Bandbhat alone and on his death his widow would necessarily have a life-estate to which the reversionary interest of Rangbhat should be postponed. That being my view, this appeal fails and should be dismissed with all costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. The only point in the case put forward by the appellant, which seemed to me to need serious consideration, was the point that whatever Ramchandrabhat had intended or attempted to do, it was impossible for him to convert his self-acquired property into joint family property of himself and his sons. This is the first time, so far as my recollection goes, that I have heard this argument put forward. But there are many cases which have been decided in this Court, and in some of them I have taken part, in which self-acquired property has been held to be converted into joint family property; and as an instance of this we have the case of Ialdas Narandas v. Motibai (2). As I am quite clear in my own mind that the practice of this Court for many years has been to recognise the possibility of converting self acquired into joint family property, I do not propose to deal with the argument that this supposed possibility is contrary to the principles of Hindu Law. I do not think it is contrary to the principles of Hindu Law; but having regard to the practice of this Court I do not think it is necessary to elaborate the reasons for which I think so. I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case is with regard to a right of easement, and the facts which it is necessary to consider may be briefly stated as follows.

The plaintiffs are the owners of a number of shops situated at the north end of a row of shops in the Chank in the Lucknow city. To the west of this row of shops are certain houses one of which belongs to the first defendant in the case, namely, Khuda Bakhsh. This house is in the occupation of the second defendant Pandit Chhamapat, who is a tenant of the first defendant. The upper storey of this house looks out upon the roofs of the shops in front and it is with reference to a right of easement over the roofs of the shops belonging to the plaintiffs that the present dispute has arisen. According to the allegations in the plaint the second defendant Chhamapat carries on business as a physician (vaid) and interviews his patients and dispenses medicine to them in the upper storey of the house which he rents from the first defendant. It is alleged in paragraph 3 of the plaint that these patients pass to and fro over the roofs, although there is another way of access to the premises in the occupation of the second defendant. In the fifth paragraph of the plaint it is alleged that this passing to and fro of persons who go to consult the second defendant has caused damage to the plaintiffs and the prayer was for a perpetual injunction. The particular nature of the relief sought is set out in the 7th paragraph of the plaint. The Court was asked to issue an injunction

(1) restraining the defendants themselves from passing over the roofs, (2) to prevent them from using the roofs in any way, and (3) to restrain them from allowing their relations, visitors, customers and others from passing over the roofs. The plaintiffs also asked the Court to define the right of way, if it were found that the defendants were entitled to any such right.

In the written statement it was set out that the house belonging to the first defendant consisted of two parts which were entirely separate: one of these, the lower storey, having access to it from one direction, the other, the upper storey, having access to it over the roofs of the row of shops which lie to the west. It was pleaded that the only way of getting to the premises occupied by the defendant No. 2 as tenant was along the roofs in question. It was further stated that these premises had been in possession of the defendants and their predecessors for a period of over a hundred years and that the persons who had occupied the house had always enjoyed various rights by way of easement, namely, rights of way, of air and of light and also a right to use the roof in front of the upper storey in various ways for the convenience of the defendant's premises.

Both the Courts below have found in favour of the defendants, and the plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed.

The plaintiffs come here in second appeal, and a great many pleas have been raised on their behalf for the purpose of showing that the decisions of the Courts below are erroneous. The case has been contested at great length and there has been a good deal of what appears to me to be irrelevant argument in the matter with reference to the rights claimed by the defendants. The Munsif who tried the case has written a very long and careful judgment and he has referred in detail to the large volume of oral evidence which was placed before him. Practically all the witnesses were persons of respectability and both the Courts below have accepted their statements as true. It is only necessary, therefore, for me to mention briefly what the purport of the defendant's evidence is,

GANESH PRASAD v. KHUDA BAKHSH.

It is proved by the statements of some of the witnesses whose memories go back for a very long period that the premises belonging to the defendants have been continuously occupied for very many years past. One of the witnesses, an old man named Hazari Lal whose age is given as 98, deposed that he had known the house occupied by the defendants since before the time of British rule. He states that he remembers it being occupied by one Ghulam Mohammad who originally owned it. According to his story Ghulam Mohammad carried on a dyeing business there and used the roof in front of the premises for the purpose of his trade. He used to spread clothes out to dry and he kept there the receptacle which he used for the purpose of dyeing. After Ghulam Mohammad his son carried on the same business, and there is other evidence on the record to show that it was from Ghulam Mohammad's son that the first defendant Khuda Bakhsh purchased the property. Another witness corroborated this evidence. He spoke from a recollection of 50 years and deposed to having seen the customers of Abdullah, the son of Ghulam Mohammad, use a right of way to these premises. He also saw Abdullah using the premises for the purpose of his trade. Then there was evidence to show that next door to the defendants' premises and on the south side of it was another building which for a considerable number of years was used as a Sub-Post Office. The third witness for the defendant Hanuman Prasad has been the Post Master and he deposed to people having a right of way over the roofs in order to gain access to the Post Office. This evidence, of course, does not relate strictly to the premises in dispute, but I think the learned Munsif was right in holding it to be admissible for, as he says, it renders probable the story that people had a right of way also to the defendants' premises which were the next on the north side.

There is also evidence on the record to prove that another house to the south of this Post Office has also been used for the purpose of trade and that access to it was also obtained by a staircase leading from the street over the roof of the row of shops situated to the west. As regards this latter building there was also evidence on the record to show that the occupier of it was successful in an action which he brought for the disturbance of his right of easement. Other witnesses were called who deposed to what had taken place during the occupation of the defendants' premises by successive tenants. Some of these tenants appear to have used the premises for purposes of residence, others including the second defendant and a predecessor of his, a compounder named Parsotam, have been using the house in question for the purposes of their business. Altogether this evidence to my mind establishes clearly that for a very long period, much in excess of a period of 20 years before the suit, there has been a continuous user of the roofs of this row of shops, including the roofs of the plaintiffs' shops, by persons occupying the defendants' premises or by other persons who have come there on the invitation or by the license of the defendants or of the persons who, previous to them, were in occupation. The evidence which the plaintiffs put forward was discarded by the lower Courts as being of practically no value as compared with the evidence led by the defendants.

I turn now to the various points which are raised in the memorandum of appeal which has been filed on behalf of the appellants. In the first ground of appeal it is stated that as the defendants themselves admitted that they did not come into possession with a perfected easement it was necessary for them to prove that the user during the period of 20 years odd prior to the suit was continuous and was always of the same nature. As regards this the only observation to be made is that, so far as the right of way is concerned, a sufficient continuity has been clearly established by the evidence of the defendants' witnesses whose testimony relates to a period of practically 60 years. A right of way is a discontinuous easement and it would not be possible for the purpose of establishing such a right to show that the right has been exercised at every moment of time during the statutory period. It was argued indeed that any evidence relating to a point of time previous to 20 years odd before the filing of the suit was irrelevant. But this argument cannot be allowed. It was certainly admissible for the purpose of showing that the alleged user of the roofs during the statutory period prior to the suit was probable and that the evidence which was led to prove the user was reliable.

GANESH PRASAD V. KHUDA BAKISH.

Another point taken in the second paragraph of the memorandum of appeal is that the Court below failed to distinguish between a license and an easement and that it should have also held that no easement could be acquired with regard to an artificial structure such as a roof. This argument must fail in view of the definition of the expression "land" as set out in section 4 of the Easements Act (V of 1882). According to the explanation to that section "land" includes things permanently attached to the earth and it is idle to contend that a shop with a flat masonry roof on the top of it is not a thing which is permanently attached to the earth. For the purpose of determining whether or not a right of easement exists the roof of the plaintiffs' shops must certainly be treated as "land."

Then again it is said that the Court below was wrong in holding that the user of the roofs was not as of right. As to this the evidence is perfectly clear. A number of witnesses have disposed that no one's permission was ever asked for leave to use the roofs in question. That is the meaning of the expression "as of right." The witnesses all say that the persons who used the roofs for the purpose of getting to the defendants' premises did so without any reference to the owner of the shops, and there is also reliable evidence on the part of one or two witnesses who were once employed by Ali Naki Khan, the owner of the shops, to show that no interference with the exercise of this right of passage was ever attempted on behalf of the owner.

Then again it has been argued that because the premises have for practically the whole of the time been let out to tenants, the exercise of a right of way by tenants was not on behalf of the owners of the property and consequently the defendants had failed to show that any right of easement had been acquired. This argument is altogether beside the mark, for it is obvious from a perusal of section 4 of the Easements Act that a right of easement may be acquired either by an owner or by an occupier.

A further point has been raised to the effect that the period of enjoyment of the right by one tenant could not be tacked to the period of enjoyment of another tenant. This argument is erroneous. The fact that the premises have not been in the occupation of the same persons all along is immaterial and it does not matter what the number of tenants may have been, because the Act says (see section 15) that where a right of way or any other easement has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption and for 20 years, the right to such easement shall be absolute. For the purposes of the section therefore it clearly makes no difference whether the right has been asserted by successive tenants of the dominant heritage.

Next it has been argued that the user claimed by the defendants does not constitute an easement at all. This argument seems to relate to that portion of the evidence in which the witnesses said that in addition to the right of passage the occupants of the defendants' premises had used the roof in grant of those premises for other purposes, namely, as a place for sitting or as a place for drying clothes or for other purposes of this description. It cannot, in my opinion, be argued that such user cannot amount to an easement, having regard to the expression "beneficial enjoyment" as defined in section 4 of the Act. According to the language of the section the expression "beneficial enjoyment" includes possible convenience, remote advantage and even a mere amenity; and so it appears to me that any user deposed to by the defendants, which can rightly be deemed to have been for the convenience of the persons occupying the defendants' premises and for the fuller enjoyment of those premises, must be deemed to be an easement within the meaning of the Act.

Then it is said that if the Courts below found that there was a right of way, it was their duty to define it and that it should not have been held that the defendants had a right of way over the entire surface of the roofs. This argument has, in my opinion, been well met by the observations of the learned Munsif in his judgment. He points out that the evidence establishes that the right of way exists between two fixed points, namely, the head of the staircase or steps which gives access to the roof and the doors of the premises occupied by the defendants. The roof of these shops after all is a very small area and in the circumstances I do not think the plaintiffs were entitled to call for a delimitation of the particular portion which the customers and others who frequent the premises of the defendants were entitled to use, all the more so as the defendants have, in my opinion, established not only a mere right of way but the right to use the whole extent of the plaintiffs' roofs in front of their premises for other purposes of convenience.

These are the principal points which have been argued before me on behalf of the appellants. It seems clear to me for the reasons I have given that the appeal must fail and that the plaintiffs' suit was properly dismissed. All the evidence in the case shows that the rights of easement claimed by the defendants are used for purposes connected with the enjoyment of the dominant heritage; and referring to illustration (b) to section 21 of the Easements Act it is apparent that these rights may be claimed not only by the owner or occupier of the premises but by the members of their families, their guests, lodgers, servants, workmen, visitors and customers. User to this extent has, in my opinion, been amply established by the evidence led for the defendants. In cases where it is necessary to determine the extent of an easement which has been acquired by prescription, there is no way of ascertaining the extent of the easement except from what has been done. I have already summarized the evidence led by the defendants and it appears to me that it has established fully the various rights which the defendants claimed in respect of the roof of the plaintiffs' shops.

For these reasons the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57

—Attachment in execution—Sale proclamation, improper statement of value in—Sale set aside—Attachment, whether revives

Where a sale is set aside for any reason other than default on the part of the decree-holder, the attachment, which has been obtained prior to the first sale being set aside, revives to support a second or subsequent application for execution and no fresh attachment is necessary. In other words, once an attachment is properly and legally obtained and the property attached is put to sale and the sale is afterwards set aside, the antecedent attachment revives and by reason of its revival supports a second application for leave to issue execution, unless the ground upon which the sale was set aside was default on the part of the decree-holder. JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—This application, by way of miscellaneous appeal and revision, comes before us from the order of the District Judge of Purulia, dated the 12th of September 1917. It is necessary shortly to state the facts for the purpose of considering the legal question which arises for determination.

On the 19th of August 1912, the plaintiff obtained a money decree jointly against the defendant and others, and on the 8th of October 1912, a portion of the defendant's property was attached, namely, a house in which the judgment-debtor resided. On the 15th of May 1916, the judgment-debtor's house so attached was sold in execution of the decree. On the 27th of May 1916, an application was made to set aside the sale and the Subordinate Judge, before whom the application came, dismissed the application on the 29th of July 1916; and on the 10th of November 1916 there was an appeal from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. The sale was set aside by an order of the Appellate Court on the ground that the valuation had not been properly ascertained and stated in the sale proclamation. Subsequently a fresh application for leave to issue execution was presented and the same property was again offered for sale. With regard to this application two objections are urged. One is that the second application for execution was illegal, inasmuch as there had not been a second attachment of the judgment-debtor's property; that the first attachment had expired or elapsed and that before a second execution could issue there must be a new and fresh attachment of the property in suit. The second ground taken was that the valuation had been improperly stated. We are only concerned in this appeal with the first contention put forward by the learned Vakil for the defendant-judgment debtor, namely, whether or not the first attachment expired and could not be revived by reason of the order of the Appellate Court setting aside the sale. No case has been cited before us to justify the proposition put forward by the learned Vakil for the judgment-debtor. There seems to be a great deal of authority strongly in favour of the view that the mere setting aside of a sale does revive an antecedent attachment and that it becomes unnecessary to issue a second attachment, and that a second execution can issue based upon the prior attachment made before the sale was set aside. It is necessary to consider what the law and the practice was before Order XXI, rule 57, was enacted. Prior to that time there was a doubt as to whether in the case of an application for execution being dismissed for default of the decree-holder the antecedent attachment was revived to support a second application for execution. Order XXI, rule 57, has set that doubt at rest, because it expressly provides that where default is made by the decree-holder and the application for execution is dismissed by reason of such default, that then the attachment which has been made ceases to be of any force. In the present case, however, no default on the part of the decree-holder can be relied upon and the ground upon which the sale was set aside was, not by reason of any default on the part of the decree-holder, but by reason of the Court not having performed its duty in a judicial way, namely, having failed to assess the value of the property upon a right principle. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has relied upon Shiam Lal v. Roshan Lal (1) for the purpose of showing that when the parties are seriously at issue with regard to the valuation of the property offered for sale, it is the duty of the Court to go into the matter and determine the value in a judicial manner. With that view we agree; but as the matter does not expressly arise for our decision, it is unnecessary to do more than to express our concurrence with the opinion of the learned Judge. What we have to consider in this case is the law with regard to the question whether upon the setting aside of a sale the antecedent attachment is revived so as to support a second application for execution. In Gunno Singh v. Muddun Mohan Singh (2) it is distinctly laid down that where an attachment is once legally obtained it revives upon the reversal of the sale in execution. The learned Judges who decided that case were Loch and Norman, JJ., and it is desirable to quote one or two passages from their Lordships' judgment; at page 28 their Lordships say: "After considering the subject in all its bearings as put before us by the Pleaders of either party, we come to the conclusion that the effect of the late Sudder Court's decision of the 22nd of November 1857 was only to declare the sale to be null and void, but without prejudice to the attachment or other proceedings in execution which had been rightly and legally performed. We think that, by the setting aside of the sale, the parties were simply remitted to the position in which they stood immediately before the sale, and, therefore, that the attachment must be deemed to have revived."

Their Lordships then refer to a case of the Privy Council and quote from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council a passage which seems to me to be very important. It runs as follows:—

"It would be contrary to general principles and a senseless addition to all the vexations and delay in the course of procedure to hold that, when for any reason, satisfactory or not, the execution of a final decree in a suit fails or is set aside, and the proceedings as regards that execution are taken off the file, the whole suit is discontinued thereby, and the further proceedings for the same purpose are to be considered as taken in a new suit."

(2) W. R. (Gap.) 26.

Having quoted the above passage from the judgment of the Privy Council their Lordships proceed: "And we think that, were it otherwise, great injustice would be done to the judgment-creditor. For what is the position he would find himself in on the reversal of a sale, if all the steps he had properly taken in execution were to go for nothing? It would be this. The creditor, after publicly attaching the property and thereby declaring to all the world that he had made it legally liable for the satisfaction of his debt, and taking every necessary step for the sale of the property, would find, in the event of the sale being set aside for some flaw in the proceedings with which he had nothing to do and over which he had no control, that a third party, a stranger to him, had, with the view of assisting the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale, purchased from the judgment-debtor the whole or a part of the property, and on the reversal of the sale holds him at arm's length and tells him: 'True, you made this property legally liable for your debt; but owing to a flaw in the subsequent proceedings, the sale was invalid; I took advantage of this defect, purchased the property, assisted in getting the sale reversed, and now you must look elsewhere than to this property for the satisfaction of your claim'".

These observations apply with equal force to the facts of this case. They clearly indicate the view which their Lordships took with regard to the revival of an attachment where a sale is set aside in an execution proceeding. Likewise the law will be found stated in Gossain Munraj Pcoore v. Deen Dyal Lall (3). In that case Mr. Justice Phear, a most distinguished and able Judge, stated as follows: "At the time he attached (i. e., the properties), then his judgment-debtor had the rights of a mortgagor over it according to the very case of the present plaintiffs, i. e., he had an equity of redemption which it was competent to the defendant No. 1 to sell after attachment. The attachment remained in being, and a sale of part of the property was held in December 1862. That sale was afterwards set aside on the ground of irregularity by a decree of the High Court. But obviously, as we think, the setting aside of that sale for irregularity under the circumstances which occurred did not displace the attachment. The property was still left in the condition of attached property and liable to be sold under the attachment if the judgment-creditor went regularly to work for that purpose." So also in Mahomed Warris v. Pitambur Sen (4) the learned Chief Justice Couch dealing with this matter said: "A suit was brought and the plaintiff obtained a decree establishing his right, namely, a right to attach the property showing that the order for the release of the property from attachment was improper. The effect of that decree must be to revive the attachment, or rather not to revive the attachment, but to set aside the order of release which had been made, and therefore to make the property still subject to the attachment, to restore the state of things that had been disturbed by the order of release." Although the term 'release' is used in that decision, its principle applies to the facts of the case before us. Another authority to which I desire to refer in this connection is Aziz Bux v. Kaniz Fatima Bibi (5). In that case their Lordships were considering whether or not the case before them was within the provisions of Order XXI, rule 57, and their Lordships there decided that the particular act by reason of which the sale was set aside in that case was not one due to the default of the decree-holder and that rule 57 of Order XXI only had application to a case in which a sale is set aside or the proceedings in execution are dismissed by reason of the default of the decree-holder. Accordingly they held in that case that inasmuch as the proceedings were dismissed or set aside not by reason of default of the decree-holder, that, therefore, the prior attachment revived upon the sale being set aside. So far as we have been able to trace the authorities, it is quite clear that the law and practice has always been that where a sale is set aside for any reason other than default on the part of the decree-holder, the attachment which has been obtained prior to the first sale being set aside revives to support a second or subsequent application for execution and no fresh attachment is necessary.

IN Woodroffe's Code of Civil Procedure there is a passage at page 963 which says that "revival of execution proceedings will not revive the attachment so as to prejudice the rights of strangers who have in the interval acquired an interest in the property." The only authority cited for this proposition is Sasirama Kumari v. Meherban Khan (6). This was a judgment of Mookerjee and Coxe, JJ., but that case, in our opinion, is essentially different in its facts from the present one. That case dealt with an attachment before judgment; and it seems to us that different considerations apply to an attachment before judgment and an attachment after judgment and decree. Moreover, so far as we can see, what that case decided was that no attachment shall revive so as to prejudice a third person, and that in itself clearly distinguishes that case from the one now before us.

We are of opinion that once an attachment is properly and legally obtained and the property attached is put up to sale, and the sale is afterwards set aside, that then the antecedent attachment revives and by reason of its revival supports a second application for leave to issue execution, unless the ground upon which the sale is set aside is default on the part of the decree-holder.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the learned Judge was right in arriving at the conclusions at which he has arrived and that he very properly dismissed the judgment-debtor's objections. Accordingly we dismiss this appeal with costs. The Rule which was issued in this matter (namely, Civil Revision No. 299 of 1917) is also discharged.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120—Landlord and tenant—Trespass by tenant—Injunction, suit for—Limitation.

In 1893 defendant, who was the tenant of a house, built his own house on the adjoining land and constructed a staircase which was supported by a pillar driven into land belonging to the house of which he was the tenant. In 1905 the plaintiff took a permanent lease of the latter house and in 1912 he asked the defendant to pull down the staircase. The latter refused and the plaintiff then brought a suit for a mandatory injunction directing the defendant to remove the staircase.

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation under Article 120, Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 594, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Dhulia, in Appeal No. 72 of 1915, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Bhussawal, in Civil Suit No. 361 of 1913.

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. J. B. Mehta), for the Appellant.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Adopting the findings of fact such as they are of the Courts below, it appears that in 1893 or thereabouts, roughly nineteen years before suit, the defendant was a tenant, at any rate, of the house of which the plaintiff has now taken a permanent lease. While a tenant he built his own house on the adjoining land and put up a staircase which is the subject-matter of this suit. In all probability the pillar, driven into the land supporting the staircase, was contemporaneous with the rest of the structure, though the plaintiff has contended, or, at any rate, suggested, that this pillar was put up by his immediate predecessor-in-title only some nine years before suit. In 1905, the plaintiff took a permanent lease of the house which had been in the defendant's occupation in 1893. He alleges that in 1912 he asked the defendant to pull down the staircase. The defendant refused. Hence his cause of action. He prayed for a mandatory injunction directing the defendant to remove the staircase. The defendant replied that the land over which the staircase hung and upon which it was supported by the pillar just mentioned was his own. And the lower Appellate Court has confined its judgment to a trial of the issues: (1) whether the land under the staircase belonged to the plaintiff or the defendant; and (2) if to the plaintiff, whether the defendant has acquired an easement in the nature of a right to maintain his staircase in its present condition. This overlooks many material points and presents the case, in my opinion, in an altogether wrong light. If we assume that the construction of the staircase in 1893 by the defendant was an act done to the detriment of his landlord's title and without his landlord's knowledge and consent, then I should be inclined to say that this was a trespass and in no sense an easement, and that the plaintiff's right would have been finally barred by twelve years' adverse possession. If, however, it were contended that so long as the defendant remained a tenant of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title his act in building the staircase and supporting it on his landlord's land ought not to be regarded as adverse to his landlord's title, it might be relevant, if not important, to know when the defendant ceased to be a tenant of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title. Upon this point the Courts give us no definite information. It is, however, clear and certain that for more than nine years before suit the tenants of the premises now occupied by the plaintiff realised the existence of and possibly the inconvenience occasioned to them by this staircase.

Now, at that time it is clear that it must have been standing either by the license of the plaintiff's predecessors in title or adversely to them. And in either event it is pretty clear that unless the license were specifically conditioned by some such terms as that the defendant on demand would remove the staircase, the plaintiff would have had to bring a suit of this nature within six years under Article 120 of the 1st Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. This he admittedly has not done and it is no sufficient ground for deprecating his claim that the lower Appellate Court has found that the land under the staircase belonged to him. I am not prepared to say with certainty that the trespass has continued for more than twelve years, and, therefore, that the defendant has acquired the ownership of the land underlying the staircase, though I think this is in all probability the truth of the case. But I have no hesitation whatever in saying that in any view the plaintiff's present claim is time-barred. Further, even were it not, it is a claim without any foundation; for upon the view most favourable to him, there was acquiescence from the first and therefore no mandatory injunction of the nature he has prayed could have been granted to him. The defendant's staircase could hardly be treated as in the nature of an ordinary easement and, therefore, the true nature of the contest was, I should have thought, rooted in trespass, and the proper period of limitation is twelve years from the time the defendant's possession became adverse.

Now, both the Courts below have found that the staircase was put up nineteen years ago, and, therefore, the presumption, in my opinion, would certainly be that from that date the possession was adverse. I have hesitated to state that conclusion definitely because of some considerations which have been suggested from the Bench in the course of the argument, considerations lending colour to the possibility at any rate that the possession may have been permissive. But there is only one ground upon which the plaintiff could possibly succeed and overcome the three main difficulties I have indicated, and that is, that the defendant erected the staircase upon a definite agreement with his landlord, plaintiff's predecessor-in-title, that whenever called upon to do so he would pull the staircase down. That never appears to have been the plaintiff's case, and it is on the face of it extremely improbable that any person situated as the defendant was would have consented to such an agreement, for after building the staircase at considerable expense he might have been called upon a month later to pull it down.

We have been asked to remark the case for a finding upon this question, but doing so would, in my opinion, be little less than a direct invitation to perjury. It would be making an entirely new case for the plaintiff and a case which, having regard to ordinary human conduct amongst people of this class, is so improbable as to be almost negligible.

In my opinion, then, the only proper decree to be made was that of the Original Court, and I think that the decrees of the learned Judge of first appeal ought to be reversed and the decree of the Trial Court restored with all costs upon the plaintiff throughout.

HEATON, J.—I agree that the decree of the first Court should be restored. The suit is one for an injunction and nothing else; and on the facts found it is brought more than six years after the date at which it could have been brought. Therefore, the suit is time-barred in virtue of Article 120 of the 1st Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. The circumstances of the case do not, to my thinking, suggest any good reason why we should allow a remand for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to hunt about to see whether he can find some reason, possibly produce some evidence, to show that after all the suit might not be time-barred.

Decree reversed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 4, 9—Appeal—Death of respondent—Legal representative not brought on record—Abatement of appeal—Application to set aside abatement—Sufficient cause—Ignorance of appellant.

It is the duty of a person who is prosecuting an appeal to keep himself informed of the existence of his adversary, and unless special reasons are shown why this duty has not been performed, an application to set aside an abatement of the appeal by reason of the legal representative of a deceased respondent not having been brought upon the record within the period of limitation allowed for that purpose should not be entertained [p. 595, col. 1.]

A mere plea of the ignorance of the appellant that a respondent had died is not a sufficient cause for setting aside an order of abatement under Order XXII, rule 9 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 595, col. 1.]

In cases of this kind the question of sufficient cause should be determined with reference to the facts of each case. [p. 595, col. 1.]

Application for setting aside the order of abatement passed by the Judicial Commissioner on 30th January 1918, on Miscellaneous Application No. 4 of 1918, for substitution of parties in Second Civil Appeal No. 286 of 1917.

Mr. P. C. Gupta, for the Applicant.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under Order XXII, rule 9, for the purpose of having set aside an order passed by me on the 30th of January 1918, by which it was directed that the applicant's appeal should abate.

The facts are that the appeal was drafted in the month of May 1917. The memorandum was submitted to the Assistant Registrar of this Court for examination on the 25th May 1917 but it was not actually filed in Court until the 23rd of July 1917, upon which date an order was passed that the case was to be put up under Order XLI, rule 11. Subsequently having been put up under that rule it was directed that notice should go. A date having been fixed and notice having been sent to the respondent, the process-server reported that the respondent had died about the month of June 1917. It was on these facts that the order for abatement was made; and now the case for the applicant is that he can show sufficient cause for not having made his application for substitution of parties within the period of six months fixed by the law of limitation.

His case is that he lives in the city of Lucknow, that respondent lived in the town of Kursi in Bara Banki which is not more than 18 or 20 miles away. It is admitted, moreover, by the applicant's learned Counsel that his client is the Zaminder of a village which is situated not very far from the town of Kursi.

On the other hand an affidavit has been filed on behalf of the opposite party and with it has been exhibited a certain letter, said to have been written by the Mukhtar of the applicant in which he addressed the son of the deceased respondent in the month of October last and from the language of which it appears that the Mukhtar was very well aware of the fact that the respondent Lalu had died. The applicant who is here in person denies that this letter was written by any agent of his. The law on the subject has been considered in a ruling to which the learned Counsel for the opposite party has referred me, to be found in 24 Indian Cases at page 275 [Govind Prasad v. Ganga Prasad (1)]. That is a ruling of a Judge of this Court and it follows a judgment to be found in the Punjab Record for 1911 Case No. 60 [Mir Nawab v. Hardeo (2)].

Mr. Gupta has drawn my attention to another Bench case of the same Court in which the law has been laid down in a different sense. It seems to me that in cases like this the question of sufficient cause is to be determined with reference to the facts of each case. I agree with Mr. Piggott in thinking that a mere plea of ignorance of the fact that the opposite party had died is not a sufficient cause for setting aside an order of abatement. It surely is the duty of the person who is prosecuting the appeal to keep himself informed regarding the existence of his adversary; and unless special reasons are shown why this duty has not been performed, I think applications of this kind should not be entertained. Following the principle laid down by Mr. Piggott in the case cited by the opposite party I hold that no sufficient cause is shown.

I dismiss the application with costs.

A sale of a minor's property under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act is not a proceeding to which section 59 of the Act is applicable so as to compel the aggrieved parties to sue within 6 months of the sale. Section 59 is inapplicable to cases protected by Regulation X of 1831. [p. 599, col. 1.]

Regulation X of 1831 does not only apply to such estates of minors as are ordinarily taken charge of by the Court of Wards; Ryotwari lands owned by minors also come within the protection of the Regulation. [p. 598, col. 2.]

Where the patta erroneously stands in the name of the minor's mother, that fact does not preclude the minor from invoking the aid of Regulation X of 1831. [p. 598, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J.—Section 2 of Regulation X of 1831 includes the estates of minor sole proprietors not under the charge of the Court of Wards. This section and the preamble to the Regulation and the foot-note to section 20 of Regulation V of 1804 make it clear that the prohibition extends to minors' estates of every description not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards. The section does not apply to minor members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, who have by birth merely an undivided interest in the estate. [p. 599, col. 2.]

Muthiah Mudaliar, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 3 and the 2nd respondent not appearing in person or by Pleader, the Court (Seshagiri Aiyar and Bakewell, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The facts of the case are not in dispute. The appellant, plaintiff, was taken in adoption by a Ryotwari land-holder. The patta for the lands in dispute stood in his name. After his death, the patta was transferred to the name of the adoptive mother. She did not pay the Government revenue, and the lands were brought to sale and purchased by the 2nd defendant. The suit is to recover possession. The Subordinate Judge has found that there was no fraud on the part of the 1st defendant in allowing the property to be sold for arrears of revenue. We accept that finding. He has further found that the suit is barred by limitation as it was brought more than six months after the plaintiff attained his majority; vide section 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act.

The main argument before us was that section 59 of the Act has no application to the facts of this case. The property was admittedly sold when the plaintiff was a minor. Regulation X of 1831, section 2, enacts that no property of a minor shall be sold for arrears of revenue. Section 63 of Act II of 1864 provides; "Nothing in the Act shall be held to bar the operation of the provisions of Regulation V of 1804 and of Regulation X of 1831 in respect to the sale of lands of minors and other disqualified land-holders." It seems, therefore, clear that the sale of the land was without jurisdiction. Section 44 of the Act, which permits a sale for non-payment of revenue, must be read subject to section 63 of the Act which in terms preserves to minors the rights they enjoyed under Regulation X of 1831. It was, however, held in Raja Goundan v. Raja Goundan (1) that a sale of a minor's property under Act II of 1864 is covered by section 5) of the Act. Reliance was placed in that judgment upon Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (2). In this latter case the Judicial Committee had to deal with a case to which the provision of the Bengal Revenue Recovery Act was applicable and they pointed out that irregular as well as illegal sales should be appealed against to the Commissioner. We do not think that pronouncement is any authority for the proposition that a sale which is prohibited by a legislative enactment should be regarded as a proceeding intra vires the powers of the Collector so as to invite the provision of section 59 of the Act.

The next point is whether the present sale is not against the provision of Regulation X of 1831. It was contended on the authority of Krishna v. Mekamparum (3) that the estate of the minor referred to in the Regulation must be of such magnitude and importance as can be managed by the Court of Wards. Regulation V of 1804, which was in force when Regulation X of 1831 was passed, makes no reference to the extent of the property which alone can be taken under the control of the Court of Wards.

Ordinarily, no doubt, the Court will not interfere with private management where the estate is not considerable; but there is no ground for saying that the Regulation provides only for a particular class of estates. In our opinion, Krishna v. Mekamparum (3) is not reconcilable with the language of either Regulation V of 1804 or of Regulation X of 1831. Moreover, there is no evidence in this case that the authorities considered that the estate should not be taken up by the Court of Wards. It does not follow that because the Court did not take up the management, it would not have done so, if appealed to.

Mr. Muthiah Mudaliar next argued that as the patta stood in the name of the adoptive mother and as she was the defaulter, the property was rightly sold under the Act. Section 2 of Regulation X of 1831 speaks of the estate having come to the minor by inheritance, and prohibits the sale of such an estate. The provision for sale where the pattadar makes default cannot be spelled out of this Regulation. It is true that Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan (4) holds that the Revenue Authorities are not bound to give notice to the real owner, so long as the patta stands in the name of some other person. That was a case of vendor and purchaser. There has been no similar decision in the case of father or mother and son. Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan (4) refers specially to Regulation XXVI of 1802, which relates to the case of a purchaser not taking steps to have the registry transferred to his name. Moreover, it is doubtful whether in the face of section 2 of Regulation X of 1831 the provision of Act II of 1864, which enables a sale where the person in whose name the patta stands makes default in the payment of revenue, are applicable to the sale of properties belonging to minors.

As there are earlier decisions of this Court which we think require reconsideration, we have resolved to refer the following questions for the opinion of the Full Bench:—

(1) Whether a sale of a minor's property under Act II of 1864 is a proceeding to which section 59 of the Act is applicable so as to compel the aggrieved parties to sue within 6 months of the sale?

(2) Whether Regulation X of 1831 only applies to such estates of the minors as are ordinarily taken charge of by the Court of Wards?

(3) Whether the fact that the patta stood in the name of the mother of the minor, precludes the latter from invoking the aid of Regulation X of 1831?

This second appeal came on for hearing before this Full Bench on 4th and 5th March 1918.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and S. Panchapakasa, for the Appellant, argued that section 44 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act must be read with section 63, whereunder the rights of minors under Regulation X of 1831 are preserved. Minor's properties, whether Ryotwari or under the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards, cannot be the subject of sales under Act II of 1864. The fact that the patta stood in the name of the minor's mother will not make her the defaulter, as minors' estates form an independent class intended for special treatment.

Mr. S. Muthia Mudaliar, for the Respondents, argued that a minor's Ryotwari lands are not an 'estate' within the meaning of Regulation X of 1831. Krishna v. Mekamperuma (3). The prohibition of sale does not extend to them.

As the patta stood in the mother's name, she was the defaulter and Act II of 1864 does not take account of the real ownership. The real owner cannot insist on notice of sale Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan (4). The sale was, therefore, rightly held.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—I do not think that the decision in Krishna v. Mekamperuma (3) is any authority for the proposition mentioned in the Order of Reference. In that case, a sale of a permanently settled mitta at a time, and in respect of arrears which accrued due, when some but not all of the joint proprietors were minors, was held not to be prohibited by Regulation X of 1831. The learned Judges were of opinion that an estate so owned was not one of which the Court of Wards could have assumed management under Regulation V of 1804, and that Regulation X of 1831 only applied to estates "which might have but had not been taken under the Court of Wards". Regulation V of 1804 imposed no restriction on the Court of Wards with reference to the nature of the minor's property, and consequently the reasoning of the learned Judges in Krishna v. Mekamperuma (3) has no bearing on the present case where the sole owner of the land is a minor. It has, however, been strenuously contended before us that, as the minor's lands are Ryotwari, they are not an estate within the meaning of Regulation X of 1831, and that the sale of Ryotwari lands during minority is not prohibited by the Regulation. The estates of minors under the management of the Court of Wards had been protected from sale for arrears of revenue by Regulation V of 1804, and Regulation X of 1831 resites that doubt had been entertained as to the liability of the estate of a minor not taken under the management of the Court of Wards to be sold for arrears of revenue. The doubts must have arisen with reference to section 5 of Regulation XXVI of 1802, which empowered the Collector "where lands may be attached for arrears of revenue" to cause the lands of the defaulting proprietor to be sold. This Regulation must be read with Regulations XXV and XXVII of 1802 which were passed on the same day. It is, no doubt, true, as appears from sections 1 to 3 of Regulation XXV, that it was then the intention to fix a permanent assessment on all lands liable to pay revenue to Government but this was to be a gradual process, and the intention was soon abandoned. The provisions of Regulation XXVI, however, are not limited to such cases. The preamble recites the necessity that the property of landed estates being Malguzari, or paying revenue to Government; should in the event of default be liable to sale for the purpose of making good the public revenue assessed on such lands, and shows that it was not intended to limit the power of sale to cases of permanently settled lands only. By section 2 the Collectors are required to keep public registers for the purpose of registering the landed property paying revenue to Government; terms which are perfectly general, as are also the terms of the succeeding sections. Section 5 confers a power of sale where lands may be attached for arrears of revenue and the subject of attachment for arrears of revenue was dealt with by the succeeding Regulation XXVII of 1802. In that Regulation again proprietor was defined so as to include "all actual proprietors of land who pay the revenue assessed upon their estates immediately to Government." Regulation II of 1806, which provided for the establishment of Zillah or District Courts in Districts in which the Permanent Settlement had not been introduced, enacted in clause 4 that "in cases where the engagements may be contracted with the ryots or individual occupiers of land they shall be regulated by the Regulations of A. D. 1802 and by such subsequent Regulations as may particularly apply to them." Section 6 also provided that Regulations XXVII and XXVIII should be extended to all Districts in which Zillah Courts might be established under the Regulation and should be, observed by Collectors as well as Zemindars or farmers in their engagements with the ryots or immediate occupiers of the soil. The necessity for this provision, so far as Collectors are concerned, is not apparent, but, however this may be, this express extension of Regulation XXVII cannot be construed as meaning that Regulation XXVI was not to apply to Ryotwari lands. It has always been treated as applicable to them. Seshagiri v. Pichu (5), Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (6), Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan (4). It is no doubt true that sales of Ryotwari lands for default of payment of revenue were at first rare, and that the coercive process provided by Regulation XXVII was usually resorted to, a procedure, it may be observed, which might eventuate in sale. There is, therefore, no foundation for the contention that Ryotwari lands owned by minors do not come within the protection of Regulation X of 1831 and the answer to the second question is that there is no such distinction as suggested.

As regards the third question, the answer must be in the negative. It was the duty of the responsible officer under Regulation XXVI of 1802 to register the plaintiff as the owner on his father's death, and the fact that he erroneously registered the widow of the deceased cannot affect the plaintiff's rights, and would of itself render the subsequent sale for arrears of revenue in question void as regards the minor, apart altogether from the Regulation, as held in Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (6).

In Subramania Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan (4), the Bench of three Judges were dealing with a case where the registered proprietor had transferred his interest but the transfer had not been registered and was, therefore, void as against Government by the provisions of section 3 of Regulation XXVI, and the registered proprietor was, therefore, held to be the defaulter under the Revenue Recovery Act. That decision does not apply to the present case.

(6) 13 M. 89; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 772.

GOPAL V. SARJU.

The answer to the first question must also be in the negative. Section 63 of the Revenue Recovery Act II of 1864 provides that nothing therein shall be held to bar the operation of the provisions of Regulation X of 1831 in respect to the sale of lands of minors and other disqualified proprietors. This clearly renders the provisions of section 59 of that Act inapplicable to cases protected by Regulation X of 1831, and it is unnecessary to rely on the further ground that, even in the absence of section 63, the provisions of section 59 would not apply to lands exempted from sale by Statute.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree.

SPENCER, J.—I agree as to the answers to be given to the questions in the Order of Reference. I must confess to having been a little puzzled by the form in which the second question has been put. It would indeed be strange if the scope of an enactment were to be limited by notions of what is a considerable estate or of what estates are ordinarily taken charge of by the Court of Wards, seeing that 'ordinary' and 'considerable' are relative terms. No doubt it is within the discretion of the Government, upon receiving the reports of Collectors, to decline to order the Court of Wards to superintend particular estates of incapacitated proprietors (vide Chapter III of Madras Act I of 1902). But I can find no authority for the suggestion that an estate must be of any definite size or must not be an estate of ryotwari lands in order to give the Court of Wards jurisdiction over it.

In Regulation V of 1804 the only description given of the estates to which the Regulation applies is that they must be estates of land or other property paying revenue directly to Government. This would include the holding of a minor ryotwari pattadar. The Regulation provided for the appointment of guardians by the Zillah Court to minors succeeding as heirs to the joint possession of estates; and Regulation X of 1831 extended this provision to the heirs of single as well as joint possessors of estates, but it was afterwards repealed in 1890 by the Guardians and Wards Act so far as it related to the property of minors not under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. This may have been in consequence of the decision In the petition of Subramanyan (7) as to the powers of the District Court over minors under Act XIV of 1858. The second section of Regulation X of 1831, which forbade the sale for arrears of revenue, accruing subsequently to his accession, of estates of minors not under the charge of the Court of Wards has remained ever since unrepealed. This includes the estates of minor sole proprietors not under the charge of the Court of Wards, like that of the plaintiff in this suit. This section and the preamble to the Regulation and the foot-note to section 20 of Regulation V of 1804 make it clear that the prohibition extends to minors' estates of every description not subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards, and this answers the second question referred to us. But, of course, if a minor is a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law and as such has at birth merely an undivided interest in an estate, no guardian can be appointed by Court as the manager of the family represents the family and to such cases the Regulation will not apply.

Guardian and ward—Guardian spending more than income of estate upon ward, whether entitled to recover excess—Accounts filed by guardian and accepted by Court—Presumption of correctness.

A guardian who, without taking the leave of the Court, chooses to spend upon the ward more than the income of the ward's property is not entitled, after his guardianship has determined, to come forward and sue the ward personally for the excess amount so expended. [p. 601, col. 1.]

GOPAL V. SARJU.

It is the duty of a Court which appoints a guardian to examine into the accounts submitted to it by the guardian periodically to the best of its ability and to satisfy itself that they are properly prepared. A presumption of correctness attaches to such accounts after they have been scrutinized and accepted by the Court. [p. 600, col. 2.]

Messrs. S. N. Sinha and R. N. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Babu Hari Kishen Dhaan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a somewhat peculiar case. The appellant Gopal was for a number of years the duly appointed guardian of the defendant-respondent Sarju. His guardianship came to an end on the 29th of March 1916, when the District Judge, after declaring that Sarju had come of full age, discharged the plaintiff from his office. This present suit was brought by the plaintiff for the purpose of recovering from the minor a sum of Rs. 944-13-6 which he alleged to be due to him on account of his dealings on behalf of the minor during the period of guardianship. In support of his claim the plaintiff put in certain accounts which he had filed from time to time in the Court of the District Judge during the period he was acting as the defendant's guardian. He relied principally upon these accounts for the purpose of establishing his claim to the money in suit; and one of the issues raised in the Court of first instance was whether those accounts were to be presumed to be correct and whether the defendant had a right to impeach their correctness.

The Munsif who tried this suit seems to have been of opinion that there was no presumption in favour of the correctness of these accounts and that the defendant was at liberty to impeach them. He also pointed out that the original accounts had not been produced and he dismissed the suit in accordance with his finding on this issue. He did not deal with any of the other issues which were raised.

The case came up in appeal before the District Judge, and here again the question as to the presumption to be made in favour of the correctness of the accounts filed in the District Judge's Court was brought up for discussion. On this point the learned Judge observes that he does not consider that there could be any presumption against the defendant that the accounts which had been so filed were correct. He pointed out that they were not produced until the plaintiff had been urged to produce them and that on the face of them they appear to be fictitious.

Pausing here I wish to observe that in my opinion the Judge is in error when he states that there is no presumption in favour of the accounts filed by a guardian in the Court which has appointed him. These accounts have been scrutinized by the Court and accepted, and it is indeed strange to find the District Judge now saying that on the face of them they appear to be fictitious, bearing in mind that they are the very accounts which he himself and his predecessor accepted at the time they were filed.

I can hardly think that the learned District Judge means to say that the Court to which the accounts of a guardian are submitted for examination is under no obligation to scrutinize them and satisfy itself regarding their correctness. If the learned Judge entertains any such notion I take the present opportunity of correcting it. It certainly is the duty of the Court which has appointed a guardian to examine into the accounts submitted to it periodically to the best of its ability and to satisfy itself that they are properly prepared. After this I observe the learned Judge has gone on to examine the various items in the account put forward by the plaintiff and has given various reasons (not always good reasons, I fear) for coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case.

However, it will not be necessary for me to discuss the various items in the plaintiff's account in view of the argument which has been put forward on behalf of the defendant-respondent. It is clear from the order of a Judge of this Court who appointed the present plaintiff the guardian of the minor that he was to be entitled to a reasonable allowance for the maintenance of the minor. There is certainly nothing in the order appointing him which justifies any claim by the plaintiff for anything more than a reasonable allowance for the maintenance of his ward. So far as I can ascertain, the principal piece of property which belonged to the ward in this case was a house which brought in a rent of about Rs. 10 or Rs. 11 a month. According to the account submitted by the plaintiff he has been spending sums which were considerably in excess of the income of the property which was under his care; and the question arises whether a guardian who chooses to spend upon the ward more than the income of the ward's property is entitled, after his guardianship has determined, to come forward and sue the ward personally for the excess amount so expended. In my opinion he is not; and if this view of the legal situation of the parties be accepted, there is an end to this case. According to the finding of the learned Judge, which is not seriously disputed here, a reasonable sum for the maintenance of the ward during the period of seven years for which the plaintiff acted comes to about Rs. 420 and in any case to less than a sum of Rs. 500. On the other hand, as the learned Judge points out, the income of the property during this period ought, on the plaintiff's own showing, to have been over Rs. 500. It is said that a number of the items which the plaintiff spent on the minor's behalf were necessary, for example moneys spent upon his marriage ceremonies and moneys spent upon the repairs of the minor's house. The answer to this is that the guardian was under no obligation to incur any expenditure in excess of the income of the property. It is not pretended that the guardian ever consulted the Court before he spent these various amounts, otherwise he might perhaps have been protected, had the Court passed an order authorizing him to raise money for these purposes. But if, without taking the leave of the Court, he has spent money out of his own pocket upon what he believed to be the necessities of the minor he ought not, in my opinion, to be allowed to recover. I think, therefore, that on this ground the decree of the Court below ought to be maintained.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Howrah dated the 24th May 1915. The plaintiff is a Muhammadan lady. She brought the suit claiming partition of a 2-annas share in the property which she said she was entitled to. The parties are relations. The plaintiff claimed her title under a document called a heba bil ewaz, that is, a gift for consideration. The document bore date the 26th Bysakh 1303. It was executed by her late father-in-law Sujauddin Nazir, who also registered it. There is no doubt about the execution and the registration of the document. The reason why the document was given is stated to be this. The plaintiff married in Bysakh 1302 the defendant No. 1, who was the only son of Sujauddin. The dower was stipulated, according to the Muhammadan marriage register, to be a sum of Rs. 10,000—Rs. 5,000 being prompt and Rs. 5,000 deferred. Only a sum of Rs. 500 was paid at the time of the marriage and it appears from the register that it was the intention all along that the dower payable to the plaintiff was to be secured in a proper manner. So about one year after the marriage Sujauddin executed this heba-bil-ewaz. At that time Sujauddin was entitled to a 3-anna 15 gunda odd share in Towji No. 95 of the Hooghly Collectorate. By the deed in satisfaction of Rs. 800, a portion of the dower, he made over to the plaintiff a two-anna share out of the 3-anna 15-gunda share to which he was entitled. Sujauddin subsequently on the death of his sister inherited another two annas. Immediately following the deed what was done does not appear clear from the evidence, but it is not suggested in this case that the document remained in the possession of Sujauddin. The registered document, so far as appears from the evidence, presumably was made over to the plaintiff. There is a lot of evidence in this case as to whether the plaintiff was actually in receipt of a definite portion of the rent or whether Sujauddin was actually receiving it. These parties were all living in the same house—living presumably on the income of the property—and it would be unusual in a case of that nature for the daughter-in-law to receive from the hands of the father-in-law this income of the property that had been given to her in lieu of a portion of the dower, and then to have to pay a portion of it towards the family expenses. But what is important is that on the 4th June 1908 when Sujauddin was alive, the plaintiff applied for and obtained registration of her name in the Collectorate in respect of this two-anna share claiming it under the deed of heba-bil-ewaz already mentioned. That seems to me to be an important transaction that had taken place. It was a definite recognition of the gift both by the Collectorate and by Sujauddin. Then we come to an earlier suit. The present defendant No. 12 brought a partition suit in which Sujauddin was impleaded as a defendant. He set up the plea that the suit was defective for want of parties, on the ground that he had given to his daughter-in-law, the present plaintiff, two annas out of his share in satisfaction of a portion of her dower. There was a compromise in that suit and the terms of the compromise provided, although the present plaintiff was not a party to that compromise, that two annas out of Sujauddin's share should belong to the present plaintiff. It is quite true that subsequently that compromise was set aside on the ground that three Pardanashin ladies were not bound by the terms thereof, but still the clear admission made by Sujauddin recognising the heba-bil-ewaz cannot be got rid of. The learned Judge's view that, because at the instance of these three Pardanashin ladies who claimed under totally different rights the compromise was not set aside, therefore, the admission of Sujauddin in the written statement and the sole-nama could have no evidentiary value for and against anybody in the world is obviously inaccurate. Then followed the death of Sujauddin. Sujauddin's family consisted of, besides the defendant No. 1 his only son, five daughters. Four of these daughters are defendants in the present case and the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are the children of the remaining daughter who is dead. The case obviously is one in which these daughters and the children of the dead daughter may no doubt feel a certain amount of disappointment, on the ground that Sujauddin seems to have treated his only son's wife on a more liberal basis than if he had permitted his property to devolve according to the ordinary rules of succession under the Muhammadan Law. But a person may form a deep attachment for his only son and he may wish to benefit that son and may give him a larger share in the property than what the son would inherit, and that is no reason why a deed like this duly executed and duly registered should not be given due effect to. The learned Judge seems to have been misled by an inaccurate reading of the decision of this Court in the case of Rahimjan Bibi v. Imanjan Bibi (1) That case does not establish the proposition that the learned Subordinate Judge says it does. That case is a very different case, because there the heba- bil-ewaz was never parted with by the donor. Of course in those circumstances where the document was retained by the donor without any evidence that he ever intended to benefit the donee there was no gift, nor was there any possession, either actual or constructive. That was a case where the evidence established clearly that the deed was not acted on. The deed in the present case was no doubt fully acted upon.

Then a point was made on the form of the gift. That turns on the words in the deed as to the nature of the enjoyment which the donee was entitled to have. The terms of the gift are clearly unqualified, because the words are that the donor gives up the entire right, title and interest in the two annas and vests the same in the donee by executing the hiba-bil-ewaz. The donor Sujauddin then describes the mode of enjoyment of the gift and he says, "by getting your name registered and by paying the revenue to the Collectorate you with your sons born of your womb out of the loins of my said son and grandsons, etc., in succession shall continue to hold and enjoy the same." It is said that that condition in the gift restricts the former part of the document and, therefore, so controls it that it is a gift of a limited interest not recognised by the Muhammadan Law. But the ordinary rules applicable to gifts apply to the Muhammadan Law like any other system of law, and one of these rules is that a gift is not invalidated by an invalid condition being attached to it. That system has been recognised apparently by the Muhammadan Jurists from the earliest period as cited in Baillie's Digest of Muhammadan Law, Second Edition, page 546. If those conditions as to the form of enjoyment cannot control the form of the gift, it is absolute and unqualified. I think that in this case the learned Judge's finding that this document has not been acted on and was intended to defraud the daughters of the living Muhammadan, who had a right to dispose of his property in any manner he thought fit, cannot be supported. It may be a misfortune to these ladies that their father's affection for his only son was so great that he treated him and his wife on so generous terms that they reduced the share which they would have got by inheritance. But that does not make the document an invalid one. I think that effect must be given to this document, properly executed by the deceased Sujauddin and properly registered and subsequently acted on by registration in the Collectorate and by other acts which leave no doubt in my mind that it was intended by the deceased Sujauddin to pass this property from himself to his daughter-in law, the plaintiff in the present suit. The present appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the judgment of the learned Judge set aside and in lieu thereof there will be a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to a two-anna share in the property under and by virtue of the hiba-bil-ewaz referred to in the plaint and the case must be remitted to the Court of first instance to effect the partition of the plaintiff's share in accordance with that declaration. The costs of this appeal will be borne by the respondents. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs. The costs of the Court of first instance will be dealt with by the learned Judge at the time he makes the partition.

Appeal against the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 17th September 1917, PRAN KRISHNA BHADURI v. KESHAB CHANDRA ROY.

Babu Hari Kishen Jhaon, for the Applicant.

Babu Salig Ram, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application must be allowed. It seems that a suit was pending in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow, the subject-matter of the suit being a small strip of land. The plaintiff claimed possession. The defendant denied the plaintiff's right. A commission was issued to a Pleader of the Court and his report was received. There can be no doubt that, so far as it went and for whatever it was worth, the report of the Commissioner was unfavourable to the plaintiff. Upon this the plaintiff filed an application under Order XXIII, rule 1, asking for leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. I have before me the allegations which were contained in that petition. One was that the suit had been brought on a presumption that the entries in the khalsa and map were correct and that they correctly showed the position of the plaintiff's house. Another allegation was that it had now become apparent that, although a certain "gocha" described as No. 15 was shown in the khalsa, nevertheless it was not shown in the map. It was alleged, therefore, on these two grounds that the suit could not proceed. Why it could not proceed I cannot imagine. Clearly if there was any mistake in the allegations contained in the plaint which were due to wrong presumptions or wrong information given to the plaintiff, the plaintiff could have applied for amendment of the plaint. However, the Subordinate Judge without giving any reasons for his decision accepted the petition and allowed the case to be withdrawn.

There were no sufficient grounds upon which an application of this kind should have been granted. Mr. Salig Ram who appears for the plaintiff says that his client, if not entitled to possession, might have had a very good case for asking for a declaration of his right of easement. All I have to say is that if he has any such case he can ask for amendment of the plaint and sue for this relief in the alternative. The Court below was not justified in allowing the withdrawal of the suit on the grounds stated; and I, therefore, set aside the order and direct the Court to resume the case at the stage where it was left. The plaintiff will be given full opportunity of amending his pleadings and the other party will be given an opportunity of meeting any new case set up. Costs in this Court will be paid by the plaintiff opposite party.

(Order set aside.)

Partition Act (IV of 1893), s. 4, order under, whether decree—"Court", whether includes Appellate Court—Application under s. 4, when to be made—"dwelling house," meaning of.

An order made under section 4 of the Partition Act in the course of a suit for partition is a decree within the meaning of section 2, Civil Procedure Code, and is, therefore, appealable. [p. 605, col. 1.]

The word "Court" in section 4 of the Partition Act includes the Appellate Court, which like the trial Court is bound to make an appropriate order under the section upon any member of the family, who is a share-holder, undertaking to buy the share of the transferee. [p. 605, col. 2.]

An application by a member of a family, who is a share-holder in the family dwelling house belonging to the family, under section 4 of the Partition Act need not necessarily be made upon the institution of the suit for partition by a transferee of a share in the house, but may be postponed till after the preliminary decree. The operation of section 4 extends to the appellate stage of the suit. [p. 605, col. 2.]

The word "dwelling house" in connection with its conveyance on partition generally means not only the house itself, but also the land and appurtenances which are ordinarily and reasonably necessary for its enjoyment. [p. 605, col. 2; p. 606, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Hooghly, dated the 18th February 1915, reversing the order of the Munsif, Additional Court, Howrah, dated the 28th November 1913, and remanding the case to his Court with certain directions.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Hooghly made under section 4 of the Partition Act (IV of 1-93) in the course of a suit for partition. Under section 8 of the Act such an order must be deemed to be a decree within the meaning of section 2, Code of Civil Procedure, so that an appeal lies therefrom to this Court. The property in question is a small property about 15 cottahs in area. There are some buildings upon it and a part of the area is occupied by a tank. The property was originally joint property belonging to three brothers. On the 9th October 1911 one of the three brothers (defendant No. 1 in the suit) sold his one-third share to the plaintiff, a stranger to the family. The suit for partition was instituted by the plaintiff on the 27th February 1913 and the preliminary decree was made on the 20th November 1913. Then a Commissioner was appointed, who made a plan and carried out a division of the property which was subsequently adopted by the Court in the final decree which was made on the 28th November 1913. In their written statement the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (the owners of the remaining two-thirds share of the property) claimed the right to purchase the share sold, but thereafter they seem to have taken no active part in the proceedings up to the final decree. From the final decree, however, they preferred an appeal and in the memorandum of appeal and at the hearing they again claimed and insisted on their right of purchase under section 4 of the Act. The learned Subordinate Judge thereupon made the order under that section to which the plaintiff takes exception. The points raised on behalf of the plaintiff are two in number.

It is contended in the first instance that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction, after the final decree in the suit had been made in the trial Court, to make an order under section 4. As to that I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge. The terms of section 4 are quite general. It says that where a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family has been transferred to a person who is not a member of such family and such transferee sues for partition, the Court shall, if any member of the family being a share-holder shall undertake to buy the share of such transferee, make a valuation of such share and so forth. There seems to be no reason why the word 'Court' should be confined to the trial Court and should not include the Appellate Court. The appeal is a continuation of the suit. If the section applies to the Appeal Court, as in my opinion it does, that Court, like the trial Court, is bound, upon any member of the family who is a share holder undertaking to buy the share of the transferee, to make an appropriate order in pursuance of which the steps necessary to carry out the provisions of the section will be taken either in the one Court or in the other.

It has been held in a number of cases that an application under the section need not necessarily be made upon the institution of the suit but may be postponed after the preliminary decree [Khirode Chh Ghosal v. Saroda Prasad (1)]. If that is so an undertaking to buy given to the Co after the stage at which the preliminary decree is made, may or must be accepted, there seems no reason why the operation of the section should be restricted to the trial stage and should not also extend to the appellate stage of the suit.

Some reliance was placed on section 10 of the Act. That section provides that the Act shall apply to suits instituted before its commencement in which no scheme for the partition of the property has been finally approved by the Court. The section merely defines how far the Act is to have retrospective operation. For the present purpose the section appears to be entirely irrelevant.

The contention, therefore, that the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction in my opinion fails.

The second point turns upon the meaning of the word 'dwelling house' as used in section 4. It has been said that the word 'house' is an ambiguous word and possibly some ambiguity attaches also to the compound word 'dwelling house.' In connection, however, with a conveyance or a partition of a dwelling house, the word will generally mean not only the house itself but also the land and appurtenances which are ordinarily and reasonably necessary for its enjoyment [Rhodes Chandra Ghosal v. Saroda Prosad (1)]. As I have said, the area of the whole property is only 15 cottahs. There are buildings upon it in which the defendants live, and the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the land which was allotted to the plaintiff in accordance with the Commissioner's report is a curtilage appurtenant to the defendant's house. It is said that this finding rests on no evidence. The learned Subordinate Judge had before him the report of the Commissioner and the Commissioner's map. That being so, it is difficult to say that the learned Judge had before him no materials sufficient in law to support his conclusion.

No objection has been taken to the form of the Subordinate Judge's decree by which the final decree of the trial Court was set aside and the case remitted to that Court to be dealt with according to the directions of the Subordinate Judge. To put the matter beyond doubt, it becomes well to add, as to the costs which have been incurred in the trial Court, that the costs will be in the discretion of the Subordinate Judge. Subject to this addition to the Subordinate Judge's decree, the appeal should be dismissed with costs, one gold mohur.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

—Formal possession, effect of, against stranger to decree —Mortgage decree against mortgagor after sale of equity of redemption—Purchaser of equity of redemption, position of.

Formal possession, the nature of which is described in Order XXI, rule 96, of the Civil Procedure Code, is no possession at all against any party whose rights are not affected by the decree. [p. 607, col. 2.]

J made a simple mortgage of certain groves to M. in 1895. In 1907 he transferred the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who got into possession of the property. Subsequently to the transfer the mortgagee obtained a mortgage-decree against J. and in execution purchased the property himself. Formal delivery of possession was made to the mortgagee, who afterwards sold the property to the defendant. The latter dispossessed the plaintiff, who thereupon brought a suit to recover possession of the property:

Held, (1) that the mortgage-decree having been obtained against J. after the transfer of the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, the latter was not affected by the decree; [p. 607, col. 2.]

(2) that the delivery of formal possession did not affect the plaintiff who was no party to the decree, and that, therefore, he was entitled to recover possession of the property. [p. 607, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has sprung out of a suit in ejectment brought by the plaintiff-respondent Syed Asghar Husain for recovery of actual possession of certain groves situated in a village called Sewan. There were five defendants impleaded in the case, and it is necessary to set out some of the facts in order to show how these defendants came to be interested in the proceedings. The groves in question belonged to a man called Jagannath, who in the year 1895 made a simple mortgage of them in favour of one Munna Lal. Munna Lal has died since and was represented in the suit by the 4th and 5th defendants Hussaini and Hanuman. A suit was brought upon this mortgage and a decree was obtained upon it in the month of November 1908. It is admitted that the only defendant impleaded in that case was the mortgagor Jagannath. After the decree the property was sold in execution and was bought by the representatives of the mortgagee on the 25th of October 1909. Later on, that is to say, in the month of March 1910, formal delivery of possession was made to the purchasers. The 4th and 5th defendants subsequently sold their rights in the property to the third defendant Syed Tasadduq Husain, who was the principal contesting defendant in the present case and who is the appellant before me. Subsequent to the mortgage which he made in the year 1895, Jagannath sold his equity of redemption in these groves to the 2nd defendant Zakir Husain. This transfer was made in the year 1907, and in the year 1915 Zakir Husain sold his interest in the property to the plaintiff Asghar Husain. The plaintiff came into Court alleging that he and his predecessor-in-title had been in actual possession of the mortgaged property since the date of the transfer of the equity of redemption by Jagannath. It was alleged that subsequent to the 6th of January 1916 the third defendant, that is, Tasadduq Husain, had unlawfully taken actual possession of the property and had cut down 30 trees. The plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to the actual possession of this property and that Tasadduq Husain had no right to actual possession, and he, therefore, asked for a decree for damages in respect of the trees which had been cut down.

It has not been disputed before me that the plaintiff in the present suit is entitled to possession. But the position taken up by the defendant-appellant is that the plaintiff's right is only a qualified right and that as the defendant-appellant is in actual possession of the property, he is not liable to be turned out by the plaintiff until the plaintiff has offered to pay the sum which is due in respect of the charge held by the appellant on the property.

The Courts below have both held that the plaintiff was entitled to actual possession, that the appellant here has no right to actual possession and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

After hearing much argument in the case and considering what judgment should be given, I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Court below is perfectly correct. The only matter for consideration is which of these two parties is entitled to actual possession of this property. We start with the admitted fact that in the suit which was brought to enforce the simple mortgage executed by Jagannath in the year 1895 the only defendant was the mortgagor

Jagannath. It is now clear that at that time Jagannath had disposed of all his interest in the property in favour of the second defendant Zakir Husain, who was the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiff. It consequently follows that the decree for sale, which was obtained upon the basis of the simple mortgage, in no way affected the rights of the transferee of the equity of redemption and that under the execution proceedings and the delivery of formal possession which took place in the course of these proceedings the representatives of the mortgagee, who had purchased the property in execution, had no right whatever to immediate and actual possession as against the transferee of the equity of redemption. It is now well established that formal possession, the nature of which is described in Order XXI, rule 96, is no possession at all as against any party whose rights are not affected by the decree. This has been laid down in a long series of rulings; one of these, to which reference may be made, is a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported as Runajit Singh v. Bunwari Lal Sahu (1). The Courts below have found as a matter of fact that after Jagannath transferred the equity of redemption in the year 1907 the transferee, that is Zakir Husain, was in possession of the property and there is documentary evidence on the record to support this finding. Certain Khasras were produced, which demonstrated that Zakir Husain was recorded as being in actual possession between the Fasli years 1315 and 1320. After the year 1320, for some reason which was not explained to the satisfaction of the Courts below, the entry in the Khasra was altered. There can, I think, be no doubt that the finding as to actual possession is in every way justified. It is to be remembered that the mortgage which was executed by Jagannath in 1895 was a simple mortgage and conferred no right of possession upon the mortgagee. Consequently when Jagannath transferred the equity of redemption in the year 1907, it must be taken that he was entitled to transfer actual possession of the property and that such possession actually followed the transfer, and so it appears to me to be well established that the person in actual possession of this property was the transferee of the equity of redemption and his successor-in-title. As against him, for the reasons I have already given, the formal delivery of possession which was effected in favour of the auction-purchasers was of no avail whatever and did not amount to any disturbance of the possession of Zakir Husain. Now we find it proved that the defendant-appellant is in actual possession of the groves and that he has cut down trees and for the reasons just given, it must be held that his possession is that of a trespasser. He has got no right to resist the claim brought by the present plaintiff for restitution of actual possession. As regards any remedy which the defendant-appellant may have in view of the fact that he is the representative of the auction-purchasers under the mortgage decree, all that need be said is that his rights, whatever they were, have been extinguished by limitation. It is no longer possible for him to bring a suit for sale inasmuch as a period of 12 years has expired. On the other hand, he cannot be allowed by his own wrongful act to take possession and to resist the suit of the plaintiff, who was in actual possession, for the purpose of enforcing any claim he may have had as the representative of the mortgagee. To allow that would be to allow a party to take advantage of his own wrong. I am quite clear, therefore, that the defendant-appellant here has no right to remain in possession of this property and to call upon the plaintiff to redeem it. The case has been properly decided. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

SRINIVASA AIYANGAR, J.—The plaintiff's father Kadiriyasami on the 15th September 1893 mortgaged to Sabapathi Chetty, the 2nd defendant, what may generally be termed the Zemindari Estate of Doddappa-naikanur. The mortgagee sued to enforce his security in Original Suit No. 3 of 1901 on the file of the District Court of Madura and obtained a decree for sale on October 1st, 1901. He transferred the decree on May 28th, 1906, to Mr. Ramabhadra Naidu, the 1st defendant, who executed the decree, brought what presumably were the mortgaged properties to sale and purchased them himself after obtaining the necessary sanction from Court. Kadiriyasami Naicker, the mortgagor judgment-debtor, however, died before the final execution and sale. The 1st defendant after his purchase obtained a sale-certificate from Court and got possession of the properties which it was assumed he purchased. The Zemindari of Doddappanaikanoor consists of the 2 villages of Doddappanaikanoor and Sempatty together with their hamlets. In the said two villages there are ayan punja garden lands of about 5462 kulis (a kuli is about 5/7th of an acre) besides waste lands, hills and forests which the mortgagor owned as Zemindar. Besides these, there were pannai (home-farm) lands in which the Zemindar was entitled to both the warams. The total extent of such pannai lands in the Zemindari is in dispute and it is difficult to ascertain it from the evidence on the record.

The question in dispute in appeal is about the extent of pannai lands purchased by the 1st defendant in the Court sale. According to the plaintiff, an extent of 226 kulis, which at the time of the mortgage to Sabapathi Chetti was admittedly in the possession of one Kamulammal, the widow of the predecessor of Kadiriyasami, was not included in the mortgage or the suit or the decree or the execution-sale and did not pass to the 1st defendant as purchaser; while according to the 1st defendant, the said lands and in fact all the pannai lands within the geographical limits of the Zemindari, whether in the possession of Kadiriyasami, the Zemindar, or not, were included in the mortgage and were thereafter included in the suit and the decree and were sold.

[His Lordship next discussed the evidence and concluded:—]

I, therefore, come to the conclusion that the sale did not include the 226 kulis, though it is true that the 1st defendant and the mother of the plaintiff were under the mistaken impression that they were so included.

It remains now to deal with another contention of the 1st respondent. Though the sale-certificate did not include the 226 kulis, it appears to be true that the lands on which there were encumbrances were placed in the possession of the 1st defendant under section 319 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, by an order of Court—see Exhibit III (a) at page 83 of the printed papers. Among the properties so delivered are 63 and odd kulis out of the 226 kulis subject to encumbrances created by Bommuthayi after the date of the mortgaged decree for the purpose of raising money to pay the mortgagee decree-holder as stated above. The 1st respondent's contention is, whether the sale certificate included these lands or not, inasmuch as by an order of Court the 1st defendant was placed in possession (though such possession was symbolical) of a portion of these lands in the purported execution of the sale-certificate, the only Court which can determine whether the lands so delivered were included in the sale-certificate or not, was the Court which was executing the previous decree; and that can be done only on an application to that Court and not by a separate suit. I think we must give effect to this contention. It has been held in several cases in this Court that questions arising between the decree-holder purchaser and the judgment-debtor as regards the properties directed to be sold by the decree and purchased in execution sale are questions relating to the execution of the decree and must be determined under section 47 of the Code. The latest of such cases is Gunniah Vencatachalapathy Aiyar v. Perumal Iyer (1). Mr. K. V. Krishnasamy Aiyar for the appellant contends that there is no case in which the question as to what passed under the sale, apart from the question of the validity of that sale, was held to be a matter relating to execution under section 47. That may be so, but I see no reason to think that questions such as we have here are not questions relating to execution. The series of sections relating to obstruction by judgment-debtors, to possession being given to a decree-holder or to a purchaser in execution of a decree all assume that the judgment-debtor is to come in by way of an application in execution-proceedings if he was not satisfied with either the delivery of possession or with the order directing the sale. The order directing delivery of possession to a purchaser under section 319 of the old Code, which corresponds to Order XXI, rule 96, of the present Code, is a judicial order—see Prau Krishna Dhar v. Juramoni Chowkidar (2). The appellant asked that his present suit should be converted into an application under section 47 of the Code. But it is to be observed that any application on the date, when the present suit was instituted, to rectify any error in the proceedings in execution of the mortgage decree would be barred by limitation, as more than three years had elapsed since the date of the order of the delivery of possession, and the Limitation Act of 1908 does not extend the time for making the application on the ground of minority, though under the Limitation Act of 1877 such a disability would be taken into account in computing the period of limitation. In Chidambaram Chetty v. Karuppan Chetty (3) this Court decided that the new Limitation Act applied to applications of this sort and that a person, who by reason of minority would have an extended period of limitation under the old Act for making an application, cannot after the new Act came into force claim the benefit of the exemption under the old Act.

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 133; (1912) M. W. N. 44; 10 M. L. T. 527.

KATHIRAYASAMI NAICKER v. RAMABADRA NAIDU.

Following that decision I hold that the plaintiff is not entitled now to ask us to convert his suit into an application.

A technical objection was taken to the frame of the suit by the 1st respondent. It was said that the plaintiff did not ask for possession of these 226 kulis of land but asked only for an injunction, and inasmuch as he was not in possession at the date of the suit, his suit should be dismissed as he has not prayed for the proper relief. No such objection was taken in the lower Court and we are not inclined to uphold his contention. If necessary, the plaintiff should be given permission to amend the prayer in the plaint and we think he is in the circumstances of the case entitled to a decree for possession of the lands not covered by the sale to the 1st defendant, except the 68 6 3 kulis which the plaintiff is not entitled to recover by a separate suit. The lands so excepted are those described in Schedule D of the plaint. The plaintiff will also be entitled to mesne profits on the lands now decreed to him. That will be the decree in the appeal. The plaintiff and the 1st defendant will pay and receive proportionate costs both here and in the Court below.

I ought to draw attention to the fact that the translation of the portion of Exhibit II (f) which contains the description of the properties mortgaged, which is the most important portion for the purpose of this appeal, is incorrect.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I agree.

The appeal having been posted to be spoken to on 4th April 1917 and the Miscellaneous Petition coming on for hearing on the same day before Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim and Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar, the Court made the following ORDER.—We think it better to have a report after enquiry by the lower Court on the point in dispute between the parties raised in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1008 of 1917, namely, whether “No. 2802” in Schedule C of the plaint is a mistake for “No. 2801” and whether what is claimed in Schedule E is really “No. 2801.” Time for the submission of the report will be till the re-opening of this Court after the ensuing summer recess.

In compliance with the above order, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura submitted the following REPORT.—I have been directed by the High Court to report whether No. 2802 in Schedule C of the plaint is a mistake for No. 2801 and whether what is claimed in Schedule E is really No. 2801.

* * * * *

On the above evidence, therefore, I have no hesitation in saying that the paimash No. 2802 in plaint Schedule C is a clear mistake for paimash No. 2801.

The land claimed in Schedule E is waterspread or the tank-bed and the extent given is 20 kulis. Defence 1st witness, the Kurnam, says that the paimash No. of the tank bed is 2802 and its extent is 20 kulis. So, his evidence places the matter beyond all doubt, and, therefore, what is claimed in Schedule E is really not paimash No. 2801 but paimash No. 2802. I find the point accordingly.

(2) 1 Ind. Cas. 450; 13 C. W. N. 694.

The Appeal and Civil Miscellaneous Petition coming on for hearing after the return of the report of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, in compliance with the order of Court dated the 4th April 1917, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding and the plaint will be amended in accordance with it and the decree will follow.

The appellant will bear the costs of the 1st respondent in this petition.

Landlord and tenant—Lease in consideration of services—Option of landlord to accept money-rent in lieu of services or to eject tenant—Landlord, right of, to eject on tenant's refusal to perform services.

Where a lease was granted prior to the date of the Bengal Tenancy Act in consideration of the tenant undertaking "to render those services which his predecessor had rendered in the house of the landlord's predecessors and to duly perform those which he would be required to do in the landlord's house at the time of marriages", with an option to the landlord, on the tenant's failure to perform the services, to recover Rs. 2 as rent in lieu thereof or to eject the tenant:

Held, that the lease was a perfectly good one and under its terms the landlord was not bound to accept Rs. 2 in lieu of the services, but was competent to eject the tenant, in the event of the latter's refusal to perform the services. [p. 612, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 27th March 1916, reversing that of the Officiating Munsif, Additional Court, Patiya, dated the 18th November 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakraborty (with him Babu Phanindra Kumar Sinha), for the Appellant.—Plaintiff's case is that the defendants are her service tenants and that they refused to perform certain services which they were bound to perform according to the terms of a kabuliyat executed by the defendants, and, therefore, they are liable to be ejected. The defendants pleaded that they were not service tenants but were mokarari istimrari ryots. The Trial Court found that the tenancy created was an ordinary one and not a service tenancy and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The lower Appellate Court decreed the suit, holding that the tenancy was a raiya tenancy with quit rents burdened with service and the performance of services formed the consideration or condition for which the tenancy was created and was not an abwab, vague and indefinite.

The kabuliyat would show that defendants agreed to pay Rs. 4 for the lands in suit, out of which Rs. 2 was to be paid in cash and for the balance Rs. 2, defendants were to work on begar (gratuitous labour) for 4 days in every year and if this begar (gratuitous service) were not performed, the plaintiff would be at liberty to realise Rs. 4 in full and also damages. The male as well as the female members of defendants' house from generation to generation would have to perform those services in the house of the plaintiff, as they were doing from before and would also perform services at the time of marriage in the plaintiff's house.

The services reserved are vague and indefinite, because the kabuliyat states that the executant is to render those services which he and his females used to render on the occasion of marriage ceremonies. The services claimed by the plaintiff are in the nature of an abwab. I rely on a case reported as Apurna Ohurn Ghose v. Kasam Ali (1). No doubt, the tenancy came into existence before the passing of the Bengal

SANCHIKAM DE BAHARI V. HARA PRIYA THAKURANI.

Tenancy Act, but in cases of permanent tenancies created before the Bengal Tenancy Act section 179 of the Act would not empower the landlord to recover any abwab from the tenant.

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The kabuliyat says: "If you fail to render the gratuitous services on requisition, then I shall be competent to recover the value thereof as a part of the rent."]

[FLETCHER, J.—If on consideration of those services the lease was granted, it is a good lease.]

The rate of interest at the rate of one anna per rupee per month in case of default is exorbitant and ought not to have been allowed by the lower Appellate Court. The rate comes to 75 per cent. and is, therefore, penal. There are cases on this point and I rely on Upendra Lal v. Ataula (2) and Basuntla Coommar Roy v. Baksu Mollah (3).

[FLETCHER, J.—The cases cited are under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The question as to rate of interest was not taken before the lower Courts.]

If it is considered penal, it can be reduced here.]

Babus Khitish Chunder Sen and Probbhat Chunder Dutt, for the Respondent, were not called upon in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 27th March 1916, reversing the decision of the Munsif at Patiya. The suit was brought for ejectment on the ground that the defendant refused to render the services that he was bound to render under the terms of a lease. The case that the defendant set up was that he was not bound to render any services, and the only question is whether on the terms of the lease the defendant is liable to be ejected on refusal to perform the services he agreed to render to the landlord. In the lease, the rent is stated to be Rs. 2 and the supply on requisition of four persons to do gratuitous labour. The lease then recites, "You will regularly render these services which your predecessors have rendered in the house of my predecessors and will duly perform those which you are required to do in my house at the time of marriages". This lease is dated prior to the date of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That such a lease is good there seems to be no doubt where the tenant was given the lease in consideration of his performing certain particular services. There is no reason in this case why, if the tenant does not wish to perform the services, he should not give up possession of the land.

Then it is said that the tenant can get rid of the requisition by paying Rs. 2 in lieu of it.

It is quite true that the lease gives the landlord an option either to recover Rs. 2 as rent if the tenant fails to perform his services or to eject the defendant. The landlord is not bound to accept Rs. 2 under the terms of the lease. He can eject the tenant in the event of the tenant refusing to perform the services. Nothing has been shown to us why a lease in consideration of the performance of such services is not a perfectly good lease.

Then it is said that the contractual rate of interest was penal, namely, the interest which was stipulated for if the defendant made default in the payment of Rs. 2, the money-rent that was reserved by the lease. There is nothing to show that the rate was penal. The contract was made before the Bengal Tenancy Act and the parties were at liberty to make any stipulation they thought fit. Because the interest is high, it does not follow that it is penal. Many contracts contain a stipulation for interest at a rate going to a considerable amount. Because certain learned Judges in one case came to the conclusion that the rate of interest in that particular case was penal, it is no ground for saying that all the rates of interest in other contracts, where the rates contracted for are as high as the one which the learned Judges held to be penal, are also penal. It is not a pure question of law whether the rate mentioned in the contract is or is not penal. It involves a consideration of the facts. No facts were considered in this respect in either of the Courts below and it is much too late now to raise the question as to the rate of Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 20, 21—Limitation, saving of—Interest, payment of—Co-mortgagor, payment by, whether binding on other co-mortgagors—Mortgage—Contract giving one of two options to mortgagee—Mortgagee, position of—Waiver as to one option, effect of—Interest, default in payment of, waived, effect of.

Where payment of interest as such is made by one of several co-mortgagors, such payment cannot in view of section 21 of the Limitation Act save limitation under section 20 of that Act except as against that co-mortgagor, unless it is shown that the other co-mortgagors authorised the payment. [p. 614, col. 1.]

A contract which gives the mortgagee one of two options does not bind him to either of them, if he chooses to stick to the other; in other words, it is open to him to waive the benefit of an acceleration, if the contract leaves him such an option; and that option cannot be taken away by Statute, unless there is anything to show that the grant of such an option is illegal or forbidden by law. [p. 615, col. 1.]

For example, where a mortgage-deed provided for the repayment of the principal with interest in 12 years and further stipulated that if the mortgagors failed to pay interest regularly every year, the mortgagee would be at liberty to sue for the recovery of the entire money due on the said deed before the expiry of the period fixed for redemption:

Held, that the mortgagee was at liberty to waive the default in the payment of interest and to wait for the expiry of the period fixed for redemption before bringing his action. [p. 614, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 30th June 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Purot Lal for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Syed Fazir Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent for the recovery of money due on a mortgage, effected by Mubarak Ali and Waris Ali in lien of Rs. 1,000 on the 26th April 1895, and a deed of further charge, executed by the same persons for Rs. 300 on the same date. Waris Ali died and is represented by defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

The deeds aforesaid provided for the repayment of the principal sums secured thereby with interest at 14 annas per cent. per mensem, compoundable yearly, within 13 years; and one of the covenants in both the deeds was that if the mortgagors failed to pay the interest regularly every year or to fulfil the conditions comprised in the deeds of mortgage and further charged or transferred the mortgaged property or if the title of the mortgagors was disputed by any claimant or was found defective by reason of the existence of any prior incumbrance on the mortgaged property, the mortgagee shall be at liberty (ikhtiar hai) to sue for the recovery of the entire money due on the said deeds before the expiry of the period fixed for redemption.

Mubarak Ali, one of the mortgagors, paid Rs. 250 on the 14th December 1899 about the deed of mortgage and Rs. 41 on the 25th March 1901 about the deed of further charge towards interest as such. These payments are not disputed. The mortgagee alleges that Mubarak Ali also paid on behalf of himself and the heirs of Waris Ali Rs. 30 on account of interest on the deed of mortgage and Rs. 20 on account of interest on the deed of further charge on the 26th May 1907. The defendants deny having made any such payments. The Court below found against them and held that the claim was in any event within time from the date of those payments of interest as such.

The evidence adduced in support of the payments consists of the statements of Lachhman Das, the son of the plaintiff, Kanjan, a servant of his, and Narayan Das, one of his former servants. Their statements are corroborated by the ac-account-books filed by the plaintiff. In the account-books Rs. 50 are entered as having been paid by Mubarak Ali on behalf of himself and Waris Ali on the 26th May 1907 about the two deeds in suit. The account-books do not say that the said payment was made towards the interest as such; but Mubarak Ali admits in his evidence that he did not pay anything towards the principal money due on the deeds in suit. The irresistible inference, therefore, is, apart from anything which Narayan Das says on the point, that the payment in question was made towards the interest due on the said deeds.

That payment cannot, however, save limitation except as against Mubarak Ali, if the claim was otherwise barred by time, because there is no satisfactory evidence to show that the heirs of Waris Ali authorised the said payment. The decisions in Krishna Chandra Saha v. Bhairab Chandra Saha (1), Domi Lal Sahu v. Rishon Dobay (2) and Velayudam Pillai v. Vaithyalingam Pillai (3) do not apply, because the mortgages in those cases were made by single individuals, and the persons against whom the payments were sought to be proved as saving limitation were persons who had derived their title from the mortgagor. Section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) allows a fresh period of limitation to be computed from the time when the interest due on a debt or legacy is paid as such before the expiration of the prescribed period by the person liable to pay such debt or legacy. Where such debt or legacy is payable by several persons either as joint contractors, partners or executors, section 21 declares that nothing in the preceding section shall render one of such persons chargeable only by reason of the payment made by or by the agent of any other or others of them. The suit was filed within 12 years from the date of the expiry of the period fixed for the redemption of the mortgage and further charge, and as regards the heirs of Waris Ali the important question for consideration arises whether the plaintiff was at liberty to waive the default in the payment of interest and to wait for the expiry of the period fixed for redemption before bringing his action.

Article 132 of the Indian Limitation Act allows a period of 12 years from the date when the money sued for becomes due. But no money can become due, where there are covenants of an alternative nature, by reason of the failure of one of them, if the mortgagor chooses to waive its benefit. In Kishori Mohun Roy v. Ganga Bahu Debi (4), where a mortgage by conditional sale provided that on repayment of the principal but with interest in three years from the date of the mortgage, the land should be re-conveyed to the mortgagor and contained a further covenant that upon default in payment of interest half-yearly, the whole principal and interest should become due, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the period fixed for redemption of the mortgage was not affected or altered by the covenant in the deed of mortgage making, without reference to redemption, the whole principal become due upon failure to pay interest at a certain time.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants relies on the decision in Gaur Din v. Jhuman Lal (5), which follows the decision in Reeves v. Butcher (6). The latter decision, however, rested on the terms of a contract which were of a peculiar nature. The contract there provided that the lender shall not call in the principal sum for a period of five years, if the borrower should so long live and should duly and regularly pay the interest. The binding character of that covenant depended on the borrower not dying earlier and making no default in the payment of the interest due; on the happening of either of those events that covenant became automatically annulled, and the further provision, contained in the deed, authorizing the borrower to call in his money, if default was made in the payment of any quarterly interest, came into operation, as if the former covenant had not been in existence. The decision in Hemp v.

MUBARAK ALI v. GOPI NATH.

Garland (7) arose out of an instalment bond to which Article 75 of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable in India. The provisions of that Article have no bearing on cases governed by Article 132.

A contract which gives the mortgagee one of two options does not bind him to either of them, if he chooses to stick to the other, for as pointed out in Maharaja of Benares v. Nand Ram (8), to tie up the creditor to a covenant inserted for his benefit, regardless of that to which he agreed for the benefit of the borrower, "would be to punish a creditor for forbearance shown to his debtor and compel him to press his demands at the earliest opportunity and insist upon speedy and full satisfaction of his claim". Section 63 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) authorizes every promisee either to dispense with or remit wholly or in part the performance of the promise made to him. It is not, it is true, open to him to stop the running of the period of limitation, if it has once started. But if the contract gives him an authority to dispense with or remit the performance of a promise at a specified time or in a specified manner, or an option to refuse to avoid a contract, because a certain promise has not been performed at a specified time or in a specified manner, the limitation would not start running till the contract which he has refused to avoid is not broken; in other words, it is open to him to waive the benefit of an acceleration, if the contract leaves him such an option; and as observed in Ram Parshad v. Qadri (9), that option cannot be taken away by Statute, unless there is anything to show that the grant of such an option is illegal or forbidden by law, except by a clear and unequivocal declaration of an intent, such as the first portion of Article 75 embodies. In Juneswar Dass v. Mahabeer Singh (10), where a person engaged to pay the amount borrowed with interest on the day named and hypothecated certain land by way of security, with a condition that in the event of the said land being sold in execution of a decree before the date fixed for redemption, the mortgagee shall be at liberty to sue at once for the recovery of the debt, and before the term fixed for repayment expired, the mortgaged land was sold in execution of a decree obtained by another creditor on a subsequent mortgage, their Lordships of the Privy Council in repelling the plea of limitation observed:—"Their Lordships must not be supposed, in coming to this decision, to give any countenance to the argument of Mr. Arathoon that this suit would have been barred, if the limitation of six years under clause 16 had been applicable to it. They think, upon the construction of this bond there would be good reason for holding that the cause of action arose within six years before the commencement of the suit." Their Lordships were inclined to consider that limitation would begin to run from the date fixed for payment and that the cause of action arose, that is to say, the money became payable, on that date and not on the date on which the hypothecated property was sold in execution. It is true that their Lordships did not consider it necessary to decide that point in the view they took of the period of limitation applicable to the case before them; but as pointed out by Banerji, J., in Gaya Din v. Jhunan Lal (5), an expression of opinion by their Lordships on a matter of that kind is entitled to great weight. In Sitab Chand Nahar v. Hyder Malla (11), where a mortgage deed provided for the payment of the mortgage money by four instalments, the plaintiff to be at liberty in case of any default to sue either for the amount of that instalment or for the whole amount due on the bond, Banerji and Ram-pini, JJ., observed (page 285) that the right to enforce immediate payment on the happening of the first default was optional with the creditor and might be waived, if he chose to do so. In Nettakkavuppa Goundan v. Kumarasami Goundan (12) effect was given to the privilege of the obligee not to exercise the option of payment before the specified date, if the interest was not regularly paid. In

Narna v. Ammani Amma (13) it was held that a hypothecatee was not bound to take advantage of a clause in his bond which entitled him to demand the principal money in case the default was made in payment of interest before its due date, and that a suit restricted to a claim to recover the principal and interest at the rate originally agreed upon was not barred by time, if brought within 12 years from the date fixed for the repayment of the principal, but beyond 12 years from the date of the first default in the payment of interest.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants relies on the decision in Tulshi Ram Shukul v. Muhammad Hadi (14), but the circumstances of that case were similar to those of Dwarka Prasad v. Raja Ram (15), for the suit in each case was, on the true interpretation of the bond, beyond time even from the date fixed for the payment of the mortgage money. That was the plea raised by the debtor in either of those cases and though the decision in the former of those cases went further than the defence, it made no difference, because on the decision of the question how the period fixed for payment of the mortgage money was to be calculated the suit in either event would have been barred by time.

It is also contended that the principle of waiver recognised by Article 75 of the Indian Limitation Act cannot be extended to Article 132. But the question is not one of extending the principle of that Article but of applying Article 132 in the light of the terms of each contract.

Article 132 cannot supersede or disregard a waiver authorized by contract, where it is made. A person is presumed to act for his own benefit, and the subsequent acceptance of part of the interest by the mortgagee, coupled with the admission of Mubarak Ali that when he made the payment the mortgagee told him that it was not necessary for him to have made the payment and that he could apply the money to his other and more urgent purposes, shows that the mortgagee had deliberately exercised his option and chosen to wait till the time fixed for the payment of the mortgage money had expired. This is the cause of action on which he relied in the plaint and the claim was, therefore, within time.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

The only question in controversy between the parties in this appeal is whether plaintiff is entitled to cesses.

The judgment of the learned Munsif has been read over. The arguments of the Pleaders of both parties were heard. It appears from the patta granted by plaintiff's predecessor in interest to the defendant that the latter is to pay an annual jama of Rs. 90, including cesses. tract. The learned Pleader for the appellant, however, refers me to the decision in the case of Mohanund Sahay v. Saidunnessa Bibi (1). It appears that the learned Munsif considered the effect of this decision and I quite agree in the view expressed by him. The circumstances which led to the contract embodied in the patta are peculiar. It appears that the defendant's father held a mokurari jama of Rs. 128 under the plaintiff's predecessor. Owing to the outbreak of malaria of a virulent type among the tenantry many of the tenants died while some deserted the village. Consequently there was a considerable falling off in the income of the defendant's father. He accordingly surrendered the jama. The plaintiff's predecessor then remained in khas possession for sometime and saw that the income from the tenants was only Rs. 60. He then persuaded the defendant to take fresh settlement at an annual rental of Rs. 40 including cesses. The defendant would sustain a loss of Rs. 30 annually if he agreed to the terms proposed by the landlord, plaintiff's predecessor. If under these circumstances the defendant accepted the lease and the plaintiff's predecessor granted it, can it be reasonably supposed that the intention of the parties to the contract was that the defendant would be called upon to pay the cesses in excess if any imposed in future? In my opinion, having regard to the circumstances under which the lease was accepted by the defendant, the grantor of the lease had no idea of increasing the rent or cesses and that is why the term "there will be no increase or decrease of the jama thus fixed" was incorporated in the patta. It was stipulated that the jama would never be increased. As the jama included rent as well as cesses, it was tantamount to an admission of the grantor of the patta that neither the rent nor the cesses would be increased.

In this view I dismiss the appeal with costs and affirm the decree of the first Court.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose, I, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this case, and the appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent and cesses. The defendant holds the land under a mokurari lease at an annual rental of Rs. 90 with cesses. While the defendant was holding the lands there was a road-cess re-valuation, in which the valuation was enhanced. The tenant defendant paid cess at the enhanced rate for three years but thereafter he refused to pay the cess at the enhanced rate. The Courts below have erred in holding that the defendant is not liable to pay the cess at the enhanced rate. The parties did not, at the time of the origin of the tenancy, think of the contingency which has now happened, and so the defendant cannot get out of the statutory liability when there is no contract to that effect. Under section 41 of the Cess Act the defendant is liable to pay the enhanced cess claimed, i.e., upon the profits which he is now making. Refers to Mohanund Sahay v. Saidunnessa Bibi (1).

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysack, Babu Surendra Nath Guha, and Babu Norendra Nath Chowdhury, for Babu Bepin Behari Ghose II, for the Respondent, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Burdwan affirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The plaintiff, who is the landlord, sued for rent the defendant, who was a tenure holder under him. The only question in the appeal as it was in the Courts below is, 'Is the defendant liable to pay the cesses or did the landlord plaintiff undertake by the contract to bear that liability?' It is a perfectly clear case, because the property was let out at Rs. 90 per annum including the cesses. The landlord might wisely or unwisely have agreed to that contract and it may be a misfortune that the cesses have been so considerably increased. But notwithstanding that the landlord clearly undertook by contract as between himself and the tenure-holder that he would bear the cesses. That being so, the view adopted by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 47—Suspension of easement by agreement, whether extinguishes easement—Transfer, sale in execution, whether is—Rule against perpetuities.

Plaintiff entered into an agreement with one N, by which the latter admitted the former's right to discharge rain water on to the latter's house, and the plaintiff agreed not to exercise the right so long as N, or his descendants remained owners of the house; if, however, the house was transferred, plaintiff was to resume the enjoyment of the easement. The house was sold in execution of a decree and was purchased by the defendant who had notice of the agreement.

Held, (1) that the sale in execution was a transfer within the meaning of the agreement; [p. 618, col. 2.]

(2) that the plaintiff, having purchased the house with his eyes open, could not be allowed to plead that he was not bound by the contract entered into by his predecessor-in-interest; [p. 618, col. 2.]

(3) that the rule against perpetuities had no application to the case. [p. 618, col. 2.]

An easement is not extinguished by cessation of user, where the cessation is in pursuance of a contract between the dominant and servient owners. [p. 618, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amballa, dated the 20th April 1917, confirming that of the Munsif, 2nd class, Jagadhri, District Amballa, dated the 10th February 1917, decreeing the claim.

Lala Jagan Nath and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are correctly stated in the judgments of the lower Courts. Briefly, the plaintiffs' ancestors entered into an agreement on the 3rd of January 1866 with one Nanun Singh, the then owner of the house of the defendant, by which Nanun Singh admitted their right to discharge their water through two paraulas on to the defendant's house, while the other side agreed not to exercise it so long as Nanun Singh or his descendants remained owners of the house. If, however, the house was transferred, then they would have a right to resume the enjoyment of their easement. The house of Nanun Singh has now been sold in execution of a decree to the defendant-appellant, and it is perfectly clear from the order of the executing Court, dated the 26th April 1916, that the defendant was duly informed of the agreement in question and purchased the property with his eyes open. In these circumstances he cannot plead that he is not bound by the contract entered into by his predecessor-in-interest.

There can be no manner of doubt that this suspension of the user by the dominant owner does not extinguish his right of easement. As pointed out in G d dard on Easements at page 209, a suspension of user by agreement, or the temporary substitution, by agreement or for convenience, of another way for that to which the right is claimed, is not an interruption in the enjoyment which will defeat a claim by prescription, for under those circumstances there is constructive enjoyment of the easement, and such non user will not rebut the presumption of a grant. To the same effect are the remarks at page 569 of the same book, and also the provision in section 47 of the Indian Easements Act, which lays down that an easement is not extinguished, where the cessation is in pursuance of a contract between the dominant and servient owners. In view of these authorities and having regard to the terms of the contract referred to above I am of opinion that the plaintiffs, who suspended the enjoyment of their right in favour of a particular person or his descendants, are entitled to resume it; and that the defendant has really no answer to their claim.

It is argued that the contract infringes the rule against perpetuities, but I fail to understand how the said rule has any application to the temporary suspension of a right which undoubtedly belonged to the plaintiffs. Nor am I prepared to accede to the contention that the word 'transfer' should be restricted to a voluntary transfer, and was not intended to include an involuntary alienation in execution of a decree. It is perfectly obvious that the object of the agreement was to grant a concession to a certain family, and it seems to me that the word intiqal is wide enough to include all alienations, whether voluntary or involuntary.

The suit is clearly one for the grant of injunction, and I do not think that the remedy by way of damages would be equally efficacious. Accordingly I confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 1136
OF 1915.

December 8, 1917.

KHATUBAI—PLAINTIFF

versus

MAHOMED HAJI ABU AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS.

Muhammadan Law—Hindu Law—Custom—Halai Memons settled in Kathiawar, whether governed by Hindu Law or Muhammadan Law.

As regards inheritance and succession Halai Memons settled in Porebunder in Kathiawar did not retain Hindu Law at the time of their conversion to Islam, nor have they by immemorial custom adopted Hindu Law. In these matters, therefore, they are governed by Muhammadan Law and not by Hindu Law. [p. 617, col. 2.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Jinnah and Mr. Davar, for the Plaintiff

Messrs. Setalvad and Desai, for Defendant No. 1.

Messrs. Kanga and Taraporewalla, for Defendant No. 2.

Messrs. Bahadurji and Davar, for Defendants Nos 3 and 4.

JUDGMENT.—In the year 1897 the Government of India, being minded to amend the personal law of Cutchi Memons as regards in particular inheritance and succession, caused a public notice to be inserted in (inter alia) the Bombay Government Gazette (Exhibit L) and the Porebunder State Gazette (Exhibit M) with a view to ascertain the wishes of the community on the subject. The notice is issued from the Judicial Department of the Government of Bombay and is described as a "public notice to the Memon community by the Government of Bombay at the desire of the Government of India." In that notice the following passage occurs, viz.—

"The Memon community in India is divided into two sects, the Halai Memons and the Cutchi Memons. The former without exception follow the Muhammadan Law in all respects and are not, therefore, affected by the proposed legislation."

The question I have to decide in the present suit is in effect whether that passage is correct. In other words, are Halai Memons without exception governed as regards inheritance and succession by Muhammadan Law as stated in the notice, or by Hindu Law as is the case with Cutchi Memons? In particular, it will be material to consider whether, as regards this personal law, there is any difference between Halai Memons settled in Bombay and Halai Memons settled in Porebunder and other parts of Kathiawar, which territory is, I assume, included in the expression "India" as used in the passage I have quoted.

The dispute in question arises over the succession to the estate of a Halai Memon named Haji Abu Haji Habib (hereinafter called "the intestate"), who died intestate at Bombay on the 30th November 1914. The intestate left him surviving two married daughters, the plaintiff and one Ayshabai (since deceased), one son, the first defendant Mahomed Haji Abu, and a widow, the second defendant Bibabai. The third and fourth defendants are respectively the husband and the minor child of the deceased daughter Ayshabai.

The plaintiff contends that the estate of the intestate devolves according to Muhammadan Law, in which case she, as a daughter of the intestate, would take $\frac{7}{32}$ of the estate. In this she is supported by the third and fourth defendants, who as representing the deceased daughter Ayshabai would take another $\frac{7}{32}$, thus leaving $\frac{14}{32}$ for the first defendant and $\frac{4}{32}$ for the second defendant. On the other hand the first defendant contends that the estate of the intestate devolves according to Hindu Law, in which case he, as the only son of the intestate, would take the whole estate subject to the right of the second defendant to maintenance as the widow of the intestate.

Virtually, however, the contest is between the plaintiff and the first defendant, as the other defendants have only taken a formal part in the trial before me. So too as regards Counsel, the fight has been almost wholly conducted by Mr. Davar for the plaintiff and by Mr. Setalvad for the first defendant. It will accordingly be convenient to refer to defendant No. 1 as the defendant.

The intestate's estate is valued at over two and a quarter lacs and consists mainly of property in Bombay, viz., five immoveable properties there valued at Rs. 1,40,000 and a share in a cutlery business there valued at at least Rs. 60,000. The remaining important asset is an immoveable property at Porebunder said to be worth Rs. 25,000.

As regards the intestate himself, it is common ground that he was born at Porebunder in the Native State of that name in Kathiawar; that he came to Bombay for business purposes some thirty-three or forty years before his death; that in Bombay he started and developed a lucrative cutlery business, in which at the date of his death he still held a ten annas share; and that he was about sixty-two when he died.

As regards the community from which the intestate came, the following information will be found in Volume VIII, page 162, of the Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency (1884 Edition) under the heading of "The Musalman population of Kathiawar", viz.:

"Memons are a large class in Kathiawar, numbering no less than 58,400. They are of two divisions, Cutchi Memons who are supposed to be the descendants of converted Lohanas and to have come originally from Sind, and Halai Memons the descendants of converted Kachhias. The Halais have an hereditary chief or mukhi who lives at Dhoraji. Memons are husbandmen and in towns are dealers in groceries and cloth. As a class they are hardworking and quiet, but rather stolid and apathetic. The two classes do not intermarry; the men of both shave the head and wear beards."

From this statement, it would appear to be erroneous to assume that all Memons in Kathiawar are Halai Memons as the defendant invites me to do. Further, the public notice in the Porebunder State Gazette (Exhibit M) would hardly have been published unless there was a community of Cutchi Memons in that State. I mention this as possibly forming an explanation of some of the decisions in the Kathiawar Courts, where the parties are merely described as Memons and it is not stated whether they are Cutchi Memons or Halai Memons. It would further appear from the above statement, that Halai Memons did not originally emigrate from Sind as Cutchi Memons did, but were local inhabitants of Kathiawar who became converts to Islam. Lohanas, I may explain, are traders (see Gazetteer, page 149) and Kachhias are husbandmen (see Gazetteer, page 143).

The first point that arises for decision is as to whether the onus of proof is on the plaintiff or the defendant. In my judgment it is quite clear that in this Court the onus of proof is on the defendant to show that the succession to the intestate's estate is governed by Hindu Law. Halai Memons are admittedly Muhammadans. Prima facie, therefore, Muhammadan Law governs the succession to their estate, and in this respect there is no difference between original believers and converts to Islam: see Bai Baiji v. Bai Santok (1). Further the actual practice of this Court is in accordance with that presumption, for its records in evidence in this suit (see Summaries, Exhibits A41, A45 and A46) show that for the last sixty years and upwards the estates of Halai Memons have been invariably administered in this Court according to Muhammadan Law. Indeed so far as this Court is concerned, it would appear that hitherto nobody has had the courage even to argue that Halai Memons are governed by Hindu Law, whether as regards succession or anything else.

That Khojas and Cutchi Memons are governed by Hindu Law in matters of inheritance is well known. This is the result of the leading case known as the Kojas and Memons' case [Hirbae v. Sonabae (2)], which is reported in Perry's Oriental Cases, page 110, and was decided by Sir Erskine Perry in 1847 and has since been frequently followed. But in that very case the learned Judge was careful to distinguish Halai Memons from Cutchi Memons. At page 115, he says:—

"A branch of the caste, the Halai Memons, who are settled in Kathiawar, are said to observe every portion of the Muhammadan Law, including the injunctions as to the division of an inheritance."

This, it is true, is merely a dictum, as Sir Erskine was not there deciding the case of a Halai Memon; but it is nevertheless a dictum the authorship and age of which must demand respect. Further, the dictum was the result of evidence actually given in the case. Fortunately we have in this Court Sir Erskine's original notes of the evidence, and they are Exhibits P in the present suit. These notes show that three of the Cutchi Memon witnesses, viz., Haji Joosab Haji Belladina at page 55, Haji Fazul Jaffer at page 87, and Haji M. Saccor at page 91, all testify that Halai Memons unlike Cutchi Memons follow the Muhammadan Law of inheritance and succession. This evidence would appear to be that of deceased persons against their interest, for prima facie these witnesses were interested in claiming that Hindu Law was their personal law, and the admission that the other branch of the community of Memons followed a different law was a point in favour of their adversaries. Sir Erskine's dictum is of further importance, as there is no other reported case on the point either in the Privy Council or in any Indian High Court.

I lay stress on this sixty years' practice of the Bombay High Court in applying Muhammadan Law to Halai Memons' estates and on the absence of any reported decisions, as there appears to be a lamentable misunderstanding on these points not only in the Porebunder State Court but also in other Courts in Kathiawar. On this very point I am now considering, viz., the onus of proof, the Huzar Court (which is the highest and final Court in Porebunder State) has decided that a recent Privy Council decision has abolished any distinction between Cutchi Memons and Halai Memons, and that consequently as regards Halai Memons the burden of proof is on those who contend for Muhammadan Law. This decision of the Huzar Court (Appeal No. 37 of 1915-16) is Exhibit 10D and was given by the Sar Nyayadhish (Mr. A. H. Dave) in September 1916, after the present suit had been started, and in direct conflict with a previous decision in 1900 of a former Sar Nyayadhish (Mr. N. R. Majmudar), who had held in Exhibit K (Appeal No. 2 of 1898-99) that the onus of proof was on those who contended for Hindu Law. I wish to speak with all courtesy of the decisions of other tribunals, and nonetheless so because they have been endeavouring to follow what they believe to be the law in Bombay. But it would be quite wrong of me, particularly in a case of this importance, to use language which would imply any doubt on my part as to what has hitherto been decided or not decided in the Bombay High Court or in the Privy Council. The decision which the learned Sar Nyayadhish cites in support of his proposition is Abdurahim Haji v. Halimabai (3) and the proposition he derives from it is as follows:—

"Here it is quite clear that the distinction between Cutchi Memons and Halai Memons has been done away with and it has been held that all Memons as a general rule are governed by Hindu Law until a custom to the contrary is proved. The onus, therefore, would lie on the other side asserting that Muhammadan Law applies."

This is on page 2 and then on page 3 the learned Judge again says:—

"The recent Bombay High Court decision in Abdurahim Haji v. Halimabai (3) clearly shows that the distinction between Cutchi and Halai Memons is done away with and that all the Memons as a general rule are governed by Hindu Law save where a local custom to the contrary is proved."

I may observe that the learned Judge was in error in thinking that the decision was that of the Bombay High Court. It was a decision of the Privy Council on appeal from the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa, but was reported in the Indian Law Reports because of its interest to Bombay lawyers. As regards the case itself, it is sufficient for me to say that it dealt with Cutchi Memons and is no authority whatever on the devolution of the estates of Halai Memons. It is true that the head-note in Abdurahim Haji v. Halimabai (3) speaks of Memons, but a head-note is not an authority, and it is quite clear not only from the facts of the case but also from Lord Haldane's speech and his frequent references to Cutchi Memons that their Lordships were dealing with Cutchi Memons and Cutchi Memons alone, despite some insulated passages where for brevity the expression used was "Memons".

The onus of proof being then on the defendant, what must he prove to discharge such onus? The test laid down by the Privy Council in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Siwanantha Perumal Sethurayar (4) is as follows:—

"Their Lordships are fully sensible of the importance and justice of giving effect to long established usages existing in particular districts and families in India but it is of the essence of special usages, modifying the ordinary law of succession, that they should be ancient and invariable and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence, and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends."

The decision of the Madras High Court which the Privy Council thus affirmed is reported as Sivanananja Perumal Sethurayar v. Muttu Ramalinga Sethurayar (5) and the learned Judges said at page 77:—

"What the law requires before an alleged custom can receive the recognition of the Court and so acquire legal force is satisfactory proof of usage so long and invariably acted upon in practice as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular family, class, or district or country; and the course of practice, upon which the custom rests, must not be left in doubt but be proved with certainty."

In this connection I should state that defendant's Counsel at the outset of the case said that he did not rely on any custom peculiar to this particular family as compared with that of other Halai Memon families in Porebunder.

That being so, I think the defendant must prove, first, that the intestate at the date of his death was governed by Porebunder or Kathiawar custom with respect to inheritance and succession among Halai Memons and secondly, that such Porebunder or Kathiawar custom, unlike that of Bombay, is to administer Hindu Law in such a case.

My reason for confining the custom to Porebunder or Kathiawar is this: If Bombay is to be included or if to use a colloquial expression the intestate was a Bombay man, it would be quite hopeless to contend that any such custom prevails in Bombay. On the contrary, as I have already stated. Bombay administers Muhammadan Law to Halai Memons. The summary exhibit A41, I have already referred to, relates to some thirty-nine Probate or Administration grants of Halai Memons dying from 1852 onwards. The summaries Exhibits A45 and A46 relate to some thirty-two suits for administration or partition of Halai Memon estates from 1874 onwards. In all these cases it is Muhammadan Law which is applied, and though in many of them the decrees are by consent, yet one frequently finds that those consent decrees are approved by the Court on behalf of infants, which of course it could not do if Hindu Law applied. Two of the petitions in Exhibit A41, viz., Nos. 27 and 34, are by the Administrator-General of Bombay and in view of Mr. Slater's long experience I attach importance to that. In not one of the seventy-one proceedings contained in the above three Exhibits is there any suggestion that any of the Halai Memons therein mentioned or their ancestors were ever governed by Hindu Law, whether in Kathiawar or elsewhere, or that at any time during their lives there was any change in their personal law of succession from Hindu to Muhammadan consequent upon a migration to Bombay.

It is also in evidence (Exhibit A18) that the defendant has (at a cost of about Rs. 1,450 in merely Court fees and stamps) searched some 412 Probate or Administration grants in this Court between 1799 and 1900. One may, I think, infer that the object of this expensive search was to discover grants by this Court of Halai Memon estates according to Hindu Law, and that as no such grant was put in evidence, it does not exist. So much for the records of the Bombay High Court.

As regards the oral evidence it is also to the same effect. Even the defendant and some of his witnesses admit that Bombay Halai Memons are governed by Muhammadan Law, and the rest of his witnesses state that they do not know what law is applied in Bombay. Indeed defendant's Counsel in opening stated that it was not necessary for him to contend that Halai Memons in Bombay were governed by Hindu Law. At a later stage it appeared that some time might be saved by a frank admission that Bombay Halai Memons were governed by Muhammadan Law. The admission eventually made was, however, half hearted and useless, but it had this result, viz., that plaintiff's Counsel was forced to supplement his oral evidence by his documentary evidence and thus to establish his case on a firmer basis than any mere admissions of Counsel.

Before returning to the question whether the intestate was a Porebunder man and bound by Porebunder custom, there is, I think, an important consequence which follows from my holding that in Bombay Muhammadan Law is applied to Halai Memons, and that is this, viz., that prima facie Muhammadan Law is the personal law which those Halai Memons or their ancestors brought with them when they came from Kathiawar to Bombay. That presumption seems to me to follow from the converse presumption, viz., that a Hindu or Muhammadan family migrating from one part of India to another is presumed to retain the personal law by which it was governed in the country from which it started: see Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagadish Chunder Dhabal (6), Abdurahim Haji v. Halimabai (3), Mayne, 8th Edition, page 55.

In this respect Indian law differs considerably from English Law, for under English Law the immoveable property would devolve according to the lex loci and the moveable property according to the lex domicilii, and in a normal case there would be no difficulty. Here, in Bombay, amongst Hindus and Muhammedans it is the personal law which regulates the succession to immoveables and moveables alike. If then the personal law has to be ascertained, the presumption to be raised will depend on whether the one known quantity is the personal law of the original domicile or that of the new domicile. If it is the former, the person in question will presumably carry his old law with him to the new domicile. If it is the latter, and it is quite clear that he is in fact being governed by the personal law prevalent in the new domicile, then prima facie that is the law he brought with him from his old domicile.

The evidence in the present suit shows that there are some 3,000 or 4,000 Halai Memons in Bombay, the majority of whom live in two particular streets. Not one of them has been called to testify that on migration this personal law as regards succession was changed from Hindu to Muhammadan Law. I put the specific question to several of the plaintiff's witnesses and to one of the defendants, and not one of them had ever heard of such a change in any member of their community. Mr. Setalvad in his reply did indeed claim that one such case arose in connection with the father of instance No. 6, but I will deal with that one alleged case later. If then, in the view I take, it must be presumed that the original personal law of those 3,000 or 4,000 Bombay Halai Memons or their ancestors was Muhammadan when they were in Kathiawar, the result is I think to increase the already heavy burden of proof on the defendant. The presumption may, of course, be rebutted by proper evidence like any other presumption, but the evidence to be adduced in support of that rebuttal will require particularly close scrutiny. As far as Kathiawar and Bombay are concerned, the only authority cited to me as an instance of variation of custom is Ahmedbhoy Hubibbhoy v. Cassumbhoy Ahmedbhoy (7), a case of Khojahs, where it was held that in Bombay a son could not claim partition in his father's life-time, though he might do so in Kathiawar.

Turning now to the first point which the defendant must prove, viz., that the intestate at the date of his death was governed by Porebunder or Kathiawar custom with respect to inheritance and succession amongst Halai Memons, I think the defendant has discharged the onus of proof and that he is right on this point. I put aside the defendant's story about his father's retirement, for I am satisfied by the evidence of other witnesses and to some degree by the books, Exhibits A42 and A47, that his father continued in business in Bombay up to practically the date of his death. So too I reject a good deal of the defendant's evidence on commission as being exaggerated or unreliable. Witness after witness on commission deposed in chief that the intestate spent most of his time at Porebunder, but on cross-examination could not say how many months each year the intestate spent in Porebunder and Bombay respectively, and was further obliged to admit that he (the witness) was in Africa for years at a time, and presumably, therefore, knew little or nothing about the intestate's movements. But putting all that unreliable evidence aside, there remains, I think, a substratum of fact which is sufficient to show that the intestate did not lose his Porebunder domicile of origin. On this point I think that, as soon as the defendant proves that the domicile of origin was Porebunder, the onus of proof shifts and it is then for the plaintiff to show that the intestate acquired a domicile of choice in Bombay. The intestate went originally to Bombay for business, and I am far from being satisfied that he intended to make Bombay his permanent home. It is true that he had a house and other landed property at Bombay, and that business ties detained him there most of each year, but on the other hand he built a house at Porebunder where he went every year, and it was at Porebunder that all family events took place, such as births, marriages and so on. Porebunder seems to me to have been his real family home. He was a Shethia there as well as at Bombay and while it is quite clear that he was known in Bombay as Porebundervalla (see for instance the conveyance of 9th March 1905 to the intestate), I doubt the accuracy of those few witnesses who say he was known in Porebunder as Bombayvallah. I need not discuss the law of domicile. Its main features are well known and are exemplified in such cases as Winans v. Attorney-General (8) and Huntly (Marchioness) v. Gaskell (9). Nor do I overlook the fact that in India for a change of personal law it is necessary to prove not only a change of domicile but also an adoption of the law of the new domicile. In the view, however, which I take it is unnecessary to go into this. In my judgment the intestate lived and died a Porebunder man and was consequently governed by the law of Porebunder at the date of his death.

I must next consider what is the law of Porebunder governing the rights of inheritance and succession to the estate of deceased Halai Memons domiciled in that State. This is a question of foreign law and like all questions of foreign law must be proved as a fact. To avoid misunderstanding I may explain that I use the word "foreign" in the sense in which it is frequently used in private international law, viz., as outside the jurisdiction of the Court dealing with the matter. In that sense "foreign" does not necessarily denote even a difference in allegiance. In an English Court, for instance, Scottish law and Scottish judgments may be said to be foreign law and foreign judgments, and vice versa. [Cf. the argument of Mr. Sergeant as he then was in Mirrlees Charity, In re Mitchell v. Attorney-General (10).] As is pointed out, however, in the cases cited in Trufort, In re, Trafford v. Blanc (11), evidence as to foreign law is often unsatisfactory and one is left to ascertain that law as best one can. To some degree that remark applies here, for the defendant's evidence, although voluminous, is of a character to invite close criticism whether one looks at his expert or other oral evidence or at the Court decisions which he relies on.

KHATUBAI V. MAHOMED HAJI ABU.

Before turning to that evidence, however, I think it useful to say something of the earlier conditions of Kathiawar, for as I have already pointed out, the custom which the defendant sets up must be proved to be ancient and invariable.

Turning then again to Volume VIII of the Bombay Gazetteer, I find this written at page 324 under the heading "Justice" with reference to the condition of affairs in 1842:—

"Of civil or criminal law,' wrote Captain, afterwards Sir George, Jacobin 1842, 'the people of Kathiawar have no idea, nor do they seem sensible of the want; but such is ever the case in barbarous communities. Each caste manages its affairs by panchayats or council', where the leading men resemble some of our own select vestries in meeting to talk and eat at their neighbour's expense. The result is generally a fine on the offending party, also to be laid out in eating, besides any mode of adjustment that may be decided on...';—

Then at the bottom of the page.

"The above was written twenty-two years after the Gaikwar had handed over the general control of the tributaries in Kathiawar to the British Government. What the state of the judicial administration of the province was at the beginning of the century (i.e., 1800) may be gathered from the reports of Colonel Walker. 'The administration of justice amongst the Marathas,' he writes, 'was entirely neglected. Nothing can exceed the confused and indistinct notions which they entertained on this head...Almost every crime was commutable for money, and fines were considered a regular branch of the revenue. The only object the Maratha Government had in view in Kathiawar was the collection of tribute. It consistently disregarded all other branches of administration, and left the chiefs' both large and small, to deal with their subjects as they chose.'"

Turning to page 326 the Gazetteer proceeds:—

"These rough methods of obtaining justice were resorted to because there were no tribunals to which the injured could apply for redress, or any chance of cases being decided by the chief to which they applied. There were no Courts, no definite procedure, and no desire to see justice done between man and man. ² Cases were occasionally referred for arbitration, and when the chief interfered, he administered justice principally through a system of ordeals and oaths..."

Then again at page 332:—

"Since 1863 the Chiefs' Civil and Criminal Courts have gradually improved in efficiency. Previous to 1863 Courts of Justice hardly existed. There was no regular procedure and no constituted Courts. Any crime could be commuted for fine, and sentences of imprisonment depended entirely on the caprices of the chief. By degrees regular Courts were instituted; the farmer of revenue no longer assumed judicial power. Courts of first instance were subject to Courts of Appeal; Codes based on the model of the British Penal and Criminal Procedure Codes were drawn up in the larger and more advanced States...Private property became more respected; complaints of loss by individuals began to be listened to; travellers could journey without an armed escort, and with much less fear than formerly of being molested and robbed."

At page 333, after citing statistics of civil and criminal suits down to 1882, the Gazetteer proceeds:—

"These tables show that there is a considerable amount of work done in the State Courts and that they are freely resorted to. A comparison with the remarks quoted at the beginning of this chapter shows what a vast improvement has taken place in the judicial administration of the country, and consequently in the social condition of the people, during the last forty or more correctly during the last twenty years" (viz., from 1864 to 1884).

Now these extracts show that there is a considerable practical difficulty in the defendant's way, for down to a comparatively recent date there are no Courts to whose records he can resort as showing what the devolution of property has been amongst the Halai Memons in Porebunder or elsewhere in Kathiawar. Further, if the country was in such a lawless state as that depicted in the Gazetteer, and I think I must presume that that statement is substantially accurate, it seems to me to increase the difficulty in proving an ancient and invariable special custom of inheritance distinguishing Halai Memons from other Muhammadans. I recognise on the other hand that the absence of early records assists the defendant to some degree, because it affords some explanation why his evidence is substantially confined to quite recent instances of devolution. On the whole, however, I think that these extracts as to the early history of Kathiawar tell against the defendant rather than in his favour.

As regards the status of Porebunder State and its Courts, I think it is sufficient to say that Porebunder State is now a first class State in Kathiawar and is outside the King's Dominions, and that the decisions of its Courts are final and there is no appeal to the Privy Council. This appears from Hemchand Devchand v. Asam Sakarlal Chhotamal (12), a most interesting and instructive case as to the history of the Kathiawar Courts, where the Privy Council held in effect that the jurisdiction exercised in the Courts of the Political Agent and Assistant Political Agents in Kathiawar was political rather than judicial (see pages 23-29): that consequently the decisions of those Courts were not, strictly speaking, judicial decisions and accordingly appeals lay not to the Privy Council but to the Governor of Bombay in Council and from him to the Secretary of State in Council. On page 24 it is stated that in the cases which fall within the power of the Chiefs (as, e.g., Porebunder) their decision is final and no judicial appeal lies to any British authority. The use of the word "judicial" may leave open the possibility of an appeal to the Governor in Council, and in the present case it was suggested that the defeated party in Exhibit 10D had presented or proposed to present such an appeal. I need not, however, deal with that question.

As regards the Porebunder Courts themselves, the Court of first instance appears to be the Munsif's Court, the Appeal Court to be that of the Nayayadhis and the final Court is styled the Huzur Court. The President or Chief Judge of the Huzur Court is, I understand, called the Sar Nyayadhis. According to the evidence of Mr. Varajlal Ranchodji, a Porebunder Pleader called on behalf of the plaintiff, the Porebunder Courts decide cases on the authority of Bombay, Madras and other Indian High Courts, and they also follow their own judgments. (See questions 30 and 31.) They have, however, no law reports of their own, and consequently one has to ascertain the facts and decisions as best one can from such judgments on the Court records as are exhibited in evidence in the present case.

Turning next to the evidence, I may explain that the defendant's witnesses on commission are described as Exhibit Com. 1, Exhibit Com. 2, and so on, following the order of the depositions, and that any exhibit of each such witness is Exhibit Com. 1A, Exhibit Com. 1B, or Exhibit Com. 2A, Exhibit Com. 2B and so on, as the case may be. Unfortunately this order is one numeral different from that on commission and, therefore, the commission numbers and exhibit marks must be disregarded. The rest of the defendant's exhibits are described in the usual way for defendants, viz., Exhibit 1, Exhibit 2 and so on, but in cases where several exhibits relate to the same subject-matter they have the same numbers but a different lettering. Thus the Porebunder litigation over the estate of Haji Kasam Haji Khan Mahomed, and to which I frequently refer in this judgment, is Exhibit 10A, Exhibit 10B and so on. As regards the five most important pedigrees, (viz., Exhibit 13A, B, etc.) individuals on each pedigree bear separate numbers. Thus the intestate is No. 16 on pedigree Exhibit 13B; and the above Haji Kasam is No. 4 on pedigree Exhibit 13A and is also No. 13 in the table of instances hereinafter mentioned.

As regards the plaintiff's exhibits they first exhaust the alphabet, and then go back to A with the addition of consecutive numbers, e.g., Exhibit A37, Exhibit A38 and so on. Possibly if preparation had been made for this deluge of exhibits a simpler classification might have been devised, but once started it was impracticable to alter.

15. Dealing with the evidence itself, one usually expects foreign law to be proved by expert evidence, unless it is practicable (which is not the case here) to proceed by letters of request addressed to the foreign tribunal. The only expert called by the defendant is Mr. N. J. Maru (Exhibit Com. 12), who is a retired Judge. His evidence does not, however, satisfy me on the point. It is practically confined to two decisions. One is Exhibit 8, a decision of his own in 1896 when Munsif, and the other is Exhibit 10D which I have already mentioned. The reader of those exhibits can see for himself how those two decisions were arrived at, and Mr. Maru's evidence does not, I think, profess to assist one in that respect. Further Mr. Maru is inaccurate in stating (question 6) that after his decision in 1896 it was taken for granted by all the Porebunder Courts that Porebunder Memons were governed by Hindu Law, for Exhibit K (which I have already mentioned) shows that in 1900 the Sar Nyayadhish decided that Muhammadan Law applied, and he accordingly reversed the decision of the then Munsif to the contrary effect and commented very severely on the unsatisfactory way in which the case had been dealt with in the Court below.

As regards the plaintiff's witness Mr. Varajlal Ranchodji, he was only asked in cross-examination as to the general effect of the decisions in the Porebunder Courts and in the Courts of the Political Agent at Rajkot, which are reported in the Kathiawar Law Reports. Here again the decisions in question are exhibited: and I think he is accurate in saying that in Porebunder there is a conflict of decisions: but the latest (viz., Exhibit 10D) is that Hindu Law governs Halai Memons.

Mr. Setalvad has, however, urged strenuously that the solution of the question as to what is the law of Porebunder is quite easy. One has merely to look at the latest decision in the Huzur Court, viz., Exhibit 10D, and see and apply the result arrived at irrespective of the reasoning or the mode by which that result has been reached. In my opinion this proposition is utterly unsound. It is a misuse of authority—foreign or home—to apply a decision blindfold without knowing the fact or the steps by which it has been arrived at. In the present case Exhibit 10D, which is the latest decision in the Huzur Court, is the Appeal No. 37 of 1915-16 decided in September 1916, which I have already commented on. Now that decision is based in part on a finding as to what was the law as laid down by the Privy Council or in Bombay. That finding was, therefore, so far as the Porebunder Court was concerned, a finding as to foreign law and, therefore, a finding of fact. But as I have already pointed out, that finding of fact was erroneous for the foreign law in question (viz., Bombay Law) is the exact opposite of what the Huzur Court thought it to be. Moreover, that erroneous finding of fact had the serious result that the onus of proof was thereby thrown on the wrong party, and it was in that way that the actual decision was arrived at, viz., that Hindu Law applied. Under these circumstances it seems to me that I ought not to accept Exhibit 10D as conclusive of the law of Porebunder. A judgment based on facts A and B is not necessarily an authority on facts A and C. If, therefore, the foreign law is in fact not B but C, how can one say what the decision of the tribunal would have been if the foreign law had been proved to them to be C and not B? At any rate in Exhibit 10D it would have had this result that the onus of proof would have been thrown on the other party, and this might easily have led to a different decision being arrived at.

In this connection I may observe that the Huzur Court in Exhibit 10D reversed the decision of the Court of the Appeal, which after a first or second rehearing on review had eventually held that Muhammadan Law applied. A copy of this decision of the Court of Appeal was unfortunately not produced before me, but it is quite clear from Exhibit 10D that such a decision was given and that it was to the effect I have already mentioned.

This litigation, which culminated in Exhibit 10D, began indeed in 1904 with a suit by a widow named Zulikhabai to establish her alleged rights under her husband's Will (Exhibit 23). On the 3rd of August 1909, the Huzur Court in Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1908-09 held the Will valid by reason of the acquiescence of the heirs and passed a decree in favour of the widow, modifying in that respect the order of the lower Court. That is Exhibit 10A. Subsequently Zulikhabai died and her son by another husband claimed to be entitled to enforce that decree. One attempt seems to have failed in March 1912. (See Exhibit 10H.) On the 3rd of March 1915, the Court of the Nyayadhish dismissed a similar application with costs. That is Exhibit 10B and is in Suit No. 521 of 1912-13. An appeal No. 16 of 1915-16 from that decision was, on the 31st of June 1915, dismissed by the Sar Nyayadhish. (See Exhibit 10C.) Subsequently in Civil Review No. 1 of 1915-16 the Appellate Court reversed its previous decision and held that the applicant was entitled to succeed as heir to the property in question. (See Exhibit A15.) Up to that point it does not appear to have been considered, or at any rate closely considered, whether Hindu Law or Muhammadan Law applied, but the fair inference from Exhibit 10D is, I think, that after Exhibit A15 the Appeal Court must have been directed by the Huzar Court to make a specific finding on that point, for it was that finding, viz., that the governing law was Muhammadan Law, which was eventually reversed in Exhibit 10D.

So much for that complicated litigation. There is this item of interest about it, viz., that the present plaintiff's husband was a party to it and there contended in favour of Hindu Law, and eventually succeeded on that footing in defeating the applicant's claim to the property. I had better, however, deal with this when considering the oral evidence taken in the present suit.

The previous decisions of Porebunder Courts are conflicting just as those in Exhibit 10 (A to H) are. Mr. N. J. Maru's two decisions in 1896 and 1911 (Exhibits 8 and 29) are opposed to that in 1900 of the Sar Nyayadhish in Civil Appeal No. 2 of 1895-99 (Exhibit K), which I have already alluded to. Mr. Setalvad lays great stress upon Exhibit 8, because that decision was based on specific instances and did not rely on any case law. Exhibit K was, however, a decision of a superior Court and in face of that I cannot accept Exhibit 8 as conclusive. I draw particular attention to Exhibit K, for it is a case where I entirely agree with the lines on which the Court approached the case. The learned Sar Nyayadhish first decided on whom the onus of proof lay and then having decided (and in my opinion rightly) that the onus was on those who contended for Hindu Law, he examined the evidence and eventually held that the onus had not been discharged. This decision in Exhibit K was dissented from in Exhibit 10D, where the Huzar Court thought that in view of the decisions in the Privy Council and elsewhere the Sar Nyayadhish had taken an entirely mistaken view of the law. The only decision subsequent to Exhibit 10D is Exhibit 9, which was decided by Mr. Modi in October 1916 in Suit No. 117 of 1915-16, but as it only purported to follow Exhibit 10D, I need not deal with it.

In the result, therefore, I am of opinion that the Porebunder decisions cited to me do not establish that by special custom Hindu Law is the law governing succession amongst Halai Memons, for it has yet to be seen what view the Porebunder Courts will take when it is proved to them that the Bombay Courts have not swept away the distinction between Cutchi Memons and Halai Memons, but on the contrary apply Hindu Law to the one and Muhammadan law to the other. I may perhaps add that Trufort, In re, Trafford v. Blanc (11), which dealt with the question as to the binding effect of a foreign judgment notwithstanding an erroneous view as to English Law, does not apply, because in the present case the parties are not the same as in Exhibit 10D. On the other hand, I cannot ignore Exhibit 10D as being a decision after the death of the intestate, as was done in Lynch v. Paraguay Government (13), where the Court of Probate refused to recognise an act of the Paraguayan Legislature passed after a testator's death, but purporting to confiscate his property. This latter case is of some interest on the question whether a Court administering moveable assets is bound to follow the law of the foreign domicile in all respects. The subject is further dealt with in Mr. Pawley Bate's Treatise on the Doctrine of Renvoi in Private International Law at page 105, but I pass it by as I do not think any difficulty of that sort really arises here.

KHATUBAI V. MAHOMED HAJI ABU.

As I am now dealing with legal decisions, it is perhaps convenient to refer to the other Indian cases outside Porebunder which were cited to me by Mr. Setalvad. A dozen, viz., Exhibits 1—8, 33, 34, 35 and 37, are all decisions in the Court of the Political Agent at Rajkot which are reported in the Kathiawar Law Reports. Many of them relate to Memons of Bantwa and it is not shown whether they were Cutchi Memons or Halai Memons. Exhibit 1, a decision in 1896 of Captain Hyde Cates, the then Acting Judicial Assistant, has been frequently cited and apparently relied on, e. g., in Exhibit 1CD. But never was there a more unfortunate leading case. Exhibit A43 shows that the actual decision arrived at in Exhibit 1 was reversed by the Governor of Bombay in Council, and that the parties were Cutchi Memons. Counsel did indeed suggest that this was a mistake by the Governor in Council, and that I ought to look at the earlier proceedings, but this I declined to do as in no event could Exhibit 1 be set up on its legs again. Exhibit 2 is perhaps the best case for the defendant, for there Mr. Jardine in effect gave up his contention that Muhammadan Law applied. This contention was not, however, essential, as his client won on another point and obtained the dismissal of the suit. Consequently the value of the admission is much diminished. In some other cases it appears to have been assumed that Hindu Law applied, or else previous decisions such as Exhibits 1 and 2 were followed without comment. In none of them do I find such evidence as would satisfy the test as to custom laid down by the Privy Council in Ramalakshmi Ammal v Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (4) and which I have already quoted. Further, as I have already pointed out, the Privy Council in Hemchand Derchand v. Azam Sakarlal Chhotamlal (12) laid stress upon the fact that the jurisdiction exercised in the Court of the Political Agent is political. Its decisions can hardly, therefore, be cited in a Court of Law as judicial decisions.

Under the above circumstances I think that the alleged custom has not been judicially proved to exist in those districts of Kathiawar over which the Political Agent has civil jurisdiction; and that in any event Porebunder State is outside these districts and that its Courts are not bound by the above decisions in the Kathiawar Law Reports: and that it does not necessarily follow that its customs are the same as elsewhere in Kathiawar. In the result, therefore, I think that the above decisions in the Kathiawar Law Reports are of no assistance to me in determining the present case.

Counsel for the defendant also relied on Exhibit 31 (a), (b) and (c), a case in the Courts of the Junagadh State in Kathiawar. It is sufficient, however, to say that there the Appellate Court in Exhibit 31 (b) based its judgment on the supposition that in the Bombay Courts Hindu Law applied to all Memons, which as I have already said is not the fact.

The remaining case relied on by the defendant came from Coorx in the Madras Presidency and is Exhibit 11 (a) and (b). This is, however, open to the same objection as Exhibit 10D, for the Judge of first instance appears to have relied on Exhibit 1 and other cases as establishing Hindu Law, and then to have thrown the onus of proof on the defendant to establish Muhammadan Law. On appeal, the District Judge does not appear to have dissented from this view, and accordingly I need only add that both the learned Judges appeared to have thought the evidence as to custom conflicting.

The conclusion, therefore, which I have arrived at is that the Court decisions, whether inside or outside Porebunder, are not such as I can rely on as showing that the special custom alleged by the defendant has ever been satisfactorily established.

This brings me to a particularly important part of the case, viz., the oral evidence as to custom. It is voluminous and troublesome, for it involves a detailed investigation of the devolution of a large number of estates of deceased Halai Memons. Most of the individuals have long names, but collectively there is little variety. Hence there is a considerable risk of confusion, which is increased by the necessary dullness and monotony of the bare records of their lives, families and properties, for that is all that is material in the present suit. Mr. Setalvad and Mr. Davar have, however, tackled this tedious evidence with exceptional patience and lucidity, and in particular the various summaries that have been prepared under their advice will be found of great assistance in deciding what the evidence really amounts to. This is very necessary, as a mere reading of the commission and trial evidence straight through from beginning to end is more likely to hypnotize the reader than to assist him in a critical analysis of the evidence.

The evidence in support of the defendant's case was all taken on commission, apart from that of the defendant himself and one formal witness. On this commission the defendant examined some twenty-seven witnesses, who between them depose to the fifty instances of Hindu succession which are set out in the summary called "Table of Instances" and therein numbered consecutively, 1, 2, 3 and so on. Of these fifty instances thirteen are either duplicates or are for some other reason withdrawn by Mr. Setalvad, viz., Nos. 20, 24, 27, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 41, 42, 46, 47 and 48. The number of instances eventually relied on by him is thus reduced to thirty-seven. Of these thirty-seven, I reject the evidence in support of twenty-one of them, viz., Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 9, 10, 12-15 (inclusive), 21, 22, 23, 26, 28, 33, 37, 40, 43 and 49. This leaves sixteen instances, viz., Nos. 5, 7, 8, 11, 16, 17, 18, 19, 25, 32, 36, 37A, 38, 39, 44 and 45, which may be said to be established, leaving for further consideration the question what weight should be given to such sixteen instances.

I have the following general criticisms to pass on the thirty-seven instances relied on by Mr. Setalvad. In the first place, they are all recent or comparatively recent. Only four of them, viz., Nos. 25, 26, 36 and 39 are shown to be instances of deaths prior to 1900. Of these, I have rejected No. 26, and consequently the earliest instance established is No. 25 in the year 1884. This alone is, I think, a serious flaw, for the alleged custom must be proved to be ancient and immemorial before I can accept it. The Court will of course on satisfactory evidence make all proper presumptions from matters occurring within living memory, but these recent instances contrast unfavourably in point of age with the Bombay records to the opposite effect, such as the evidence before Sir Erskine Perry in 1847 which I have already alluded to. One must also bear in mind that all the sixteen established instances except No. 25 were from 1896 onwards, and were consequently within the period covered by the above-mentioned decisions in the Porebunder and Kathiawar Courts. If then these decisions were either based on a misunderstanding of Bombay law or were conflicting, the devolution in many of these sixteen instances may be due to legal advice founded on such decisions. In this connection, I think the plaintiff's husband may be substantially accurate when he said: "My Pleader told me there are two laws, Hindu and Muhammadan Law, and that I could act under whichever law I thought fit" (see Questions 55 and 112, pages 155 and 163).

Secondly, only five of the thirty-seven instances, viz., Nos. 1, 4, 5, 6 and 25, are supported by any documentary evidence. Of these I have rejected Nos. 1, 4 and 6, thus leaving only two, viz., 5 and 25. This alone necessitates caution, particularly when I find that the persons alleged to have been excluded from the succession are nearly all females, not one of whom has been called by the defendant. Indeed I had at the trial several reminders of the danger of accepting mere verbal statements on succession. Two of the witnesses, viz., Exhibit Com. 13 and Exhibit Com. 19, were proved by documents to be utterly wrong in their statements about Hindu succession, while one of the plaintiff's witnesses, viz., No. 10 who appeared to be an intelligent and respectable businessman, had either not grasped the distinction between a deed inter vivos and a grant of Letters of Administration or else was entirely wrong in his positive recollection of what had taken place with reference to his deceased father.

Thirdly, a good deal of the evidence is of a loose general character. Names and dates and particulars of property, if any, are often not given; or again witnesses say a daughter got no share, when in fact there has hitherto been no division of the property. Much of it too is hearsay and the parties really involved are not called. Again witness after witness says confidently in examination-in-chief that daughters of various deceased persons got no share, and then in cross examination is shown to have no personal knowledge, but to have really guessed at the truth and to have based that guess on the alleged custom.

Fourthly, I think there is a want of candour in the evidence in chief. For instance, witness after witness deposed in chief to the length of time the intestate was at Porebunder each year, but on cross-examination was shown to have little or no personal knowledge of the matter as he was in Africa at the time. Again 18 of the 27 witnesses deposed to instance No. 1 and stated that the widow and daughter got no share. This was literally true; whether it was substantially true is another matter, for the facts elicited or proved by the plaintiff and not mentioned in examination-in-chief tend to show that before any division was made the estate in question was lost. Alleged family history which is unsupported by any documentary evidence is apt to be difficult to check in cross-examination, at any rate when the instances given are very numerous as here. Want of candour, therefore, in one instance gives rise to the suspicion that other similar instances might have been proved unreliable if better materials for cross-examination had been in Counsel's possession, or if some chance question had brought the true facts to light.

Fifthly, as regards the witnesses themselves. I reject the evidence of Exhibit Com. 1, as, in my opinion, he is a paid witness who has denied the payment. He admits that in other litigation he was paid for his services by other parties, but denies any payment in the present case. He admits moreover borrowing Rs. 300 from the defendant, but says he repaid it before his cross-examination, and in this statement the defendant concurs. But I find that the Rs. 300 was borrowed on the 27th September 1915, just one week after the admission of the plaint, and that although the cross-examination ended about 12th September 1916, the defendant's books up to the close of the year, viz., 26th October 1916 do not show any repayment, and on the contrary show that the amount was carried forward to the then new year. The defendant says this was because he did not return to Bombay and tell his Mehta about the repayment till January 1917, and that in fact he spent the repaid loan in distribution to the poor at Porebunder in Ramzan, viz., July 1916, as was noted by the entries made in January 1917. The defendant, however, admits that no receipt or other writing was given to Exhibit Com. 1 on the alleged repayment, and I cannot accept their story as to this Rs. 300 being a repaid loan. It would also appear that there is enmity between Exhibit Com. 1 and the plaintiff. At any rate the former obtained a decree for Rs. 6,400 against plaintiff's husband: he also took criminal proceedings which were unsuccessful against plaintiff's husband: and he has also been in litigation with the plaintiff's mother-in-law. He is hardly, therefore, an unbiassed witness, nor does he explain why he was excluded from the Porebunder Jamat for some three years. Exhibit Com. 1 is, however, the principal witness for the defendant, and the other witnesses seem to have modelled their evidence very largely on his, which is not altogether satisfactory seeing that Exhibit Com. 1 seems to be a semi-professional witness.

29. Another important witness is Exhibit Com. 2 and he also is I think unreliable. In question 107 he denied positively having distributed Ibrahim Nur Mahomed's estate (instance No. 24) according to Muhammadan Law, whereas in his evidence in the Porebunder litigation, Exhibit 10E, he admitted the fact. So too in question 153 his answer about Hawabai, a daughter of Haji Abu Jiwa, getting some money by way of charity appears to be inadmissible as hearsay, but if admissible is contradicted by the sale-deed, Exhibit A1, according to which she took a share under Muhammadan Law and sold it to her brothers for Rs. 925. Exhibit Com. 21 repeats this false story about charity in question 36, and accordingly I reject his evidence too. I may also remark that Exhibit Com. 2 was the second arbitrator in Bombay Suit No. 22 of 1911 (see Exhibits H and I), by whose award the estate of one Haji Abdul Rehman Khamisa was distributed according to Muhammadan Law. Possibly, Khamisa although originally a Porebunder man may have acquired a Bombay domicile, in which case the award becomes of less importance. It is also noteworthy that in the Porebunder litigation in June 1916, this witness only gave two instances of custom (see Exhibit 10E), while on commission in September 1916 he mentions fourteen instances.

So, too, witnesses Exhibits Com. 7 and 9 give no instances of custom in the Porebunder litigation, but give four or five instances respectively on commission. Further in Exhibit 10G, witness Exhibit Com. 9 says:—

"If any daughter or some sush comes to me for a share, I would say" 'Give according to Sareh' (i. e., Muhammadan Law).

Three months later on commission he says (Question 40): 'If a Memon's daughter were to approach the Jamat for a share in her father's property I would drive her out. I don't remember to have deposed in the Sar Nayayadish Court in Abu Haji Suleman's case that I would award to a female her share if she were to approach me.'

This change of front seems to me to afford some ground for Mr. Davar's suggestion that it is due to Exhibit Com. 1 that this witness and also some others have added to or varied their evidence in the short interval between the Porebunder litigation and the commission in the present suit. Be that as it may, I cannot accept Exhibit Com. 9 as a reliable witness.

Exhibits Com. 13 and 19 I must reject as being contradicted by written documents. Indeed Exhibit Com. 13 went so far as to deny that his wife got any share in her father's estate which is quite at variance with Exhibit O and Exhibit Q.

If I make no further comment on the other commission witnesses, it must not be assumed that I implicitly accept their evidence so far as it goes. I will only add that as the defendant's evidence is practically all taken on commission, he is endeavouring to establish a custom on the evidence of witnesses not one of whom (except himself and Exhibit Com. 3) will have been subject to personal scrutiny by any Court. It is only fair, however, to say that Exhibit Com. 3 struck me favourably during the short time he was in the witness-box before me. He is not, however, an independent witness, being a brother-in-law of defendant No. 1 and the duly constituted attorney of defendant No. 2 (see his written statement).

As regards the twenty-one instances which I said I had rejected, I should perhaps explain briefly my principal reasons for such rejection. Instance No. 1 is too doubtful, in view of the allegations that the property was not divided and was eventually lost. These allegations seem to me substantially true. In No. 2 the division was after this suit began: it was made in Africa; and really rests on hearsay evidence, the sons and daughters not being called. Instance No. 3 depends on the evidence of witnesses Exhibits Com. 1 and 21, whom as I have already said I consider unreliable. In instance No. 4 the widow claimed a share according to Muhammadan Law and her claim went to arbitration. The award (Exhibit Com. 8 A) appears to have been based on Hindu Law, but in view of the claim being contrary to the alleged custom I can hardly accept the instance as a satisfactory one. Instance No. 6 is too doubtful. I think the release (Exhibit 4A) amounted to a distribution according to Hindu Law, and was not a winding up of a partnership as Mr. Davar contends. On the other hand, the release is dated the 11th October 1915 and by that time the present suit had been started. Further it is clear from the sale deed, Exhibit A, and the suit, Exhibit A36, that the estates of the father and a step-brother of instance No. 6 devolved according to Muhammadan Law. The pedigree, which I have marked Exhibit 13F, shows the children the father (Haji Abu Jiwa) had by his two wives, and in this connection Hawabai, the daughter, must not be confused with the daughter-in-law of the same name, nor with another daughter named Hurbai. It was Hawabai, the daughter, whom the defendant himself (see questions 134-135) and his witnesses (Exhibits Com. 2 and 21) stated took a share by way of charity or as a poor sister, a statement which as I have already said I reject, having regard to the sale-deed Exhibit A1. It was then ingeniously argued by Mr. Setalvad that I should regard the case as a striking example of Hindu Law applying to Porebunder residents and Muhammadan Law to Bombay residents, on the ground that instance No.

KHATUBAI V. MAHOMED HAJI ABU.

6 and his brother No. 10 remained in Porebunder while their father went to Bombay, as did their step-brother, the subject of suit Exhibit A36. This contention I do not accept. The release Exhibit 4A is too recent to warrant that conclusion, for amongst other things it may have been prompted by late decisions in the Porebunder Courts. On the other hand it is clear from Exhibit A1 that the father's estate devolved according to Muhammadan Law, as did also that of one of the step-brothers of instance No. 6. Instance No. 10 is a brother of No. 6 and is only deposed to by witness Exhibits Com. 1 and 2, the former of whom falsely denies that Hawabai got a share according to Muhammadan Law.

Instance No. 9 is another example of the unreliability or want of candour of witnesses Exhibits Com. 1 and 2. The examination-in-chief contains the usual answer that the daughter got no share. It appears, however, from the cross-examination and also from the evidence of the defendant himself (questions 399-408) that instance No. 9 had a vacant piece of land and a house. The vacant land he sold to his sons in his life-time, so the story about the sons' separate houses which they afterwards built on his land may be eliminated. The remaining property, viz., the house, has not yet been divided.

Instances Nos. 12 and 13 are only given by witness Com. 1. He has muddled up instance No. 12 with another case: and as regards No. 13 he had not the candour to state in examination-in-chief that No. 13 was the testator in the Porebunder litigation (Exhibit 10A and B) and that No. 13 left a Will (Exhibit 23) by clauses 4, 8, 10, 11 and 12 of which he gave directions for division according to Muhammadan Law.

Instances Nos. 14 and 15 are brothers of No. 13. Both died in Africa and may have been domiciled there. Apart from witnesses Exhibit Com. 1 and 2, instance No. 14 is only deposed to by Exhibit Com. 5 and instance No. 15 by Exhibit Com. 14. Exhibit Com. 5, however, was not present at the alleged division, and his statement that the daughter got no share appears to be based solely on his allegation as to custom, and the daughter is not called. Exhibits Com. 5 and 1 differ by seven years as to the date of the death of instance No. 15. Consequently it becomes doubtful whether any daughter survived No. 15 and so was in a position to take.

Instances Nos. 21, 22 and 23 are only deposed to by Exhibit Com. 1.

In instances No. 26, the sons gave each daughter Rs. 700 or Rs. 800 on returning from Africa. This would roughly correspond with the amount the daughters would have taken under Muhammadan Law, and consequently this instance seems too doubtful.

In instance No. 28 it would seem doubtful whether the property consisted of more than a valueless equity of redemption. Be that as it may, the daughter was required to join in the sale.

Instance No. 33 depends on witness Exhibit Com. 13.

In instance No. 37 there was litigation in the Courts of Pretoria with reference to the minor daughters, and the decree is not produced.

Instance No. 40 is only deposed to by Exhibit Com. 19 and there is no evidence that this instance left any property.

Instance No. 49 is also too doubtful to rely on. He admittedly left no landed property, and I am not satisfied that he left any moveable property, although he may at one time have been "worth about two to three thousands."

As regards the sixteen instances which may be said to be established, I do not think their collective weight is great having regard to the general comments I have made, and in particular those as regards age and the absence of documents. Even as regards instance No. 5 where there is a document, Exhibit Com. 5A, there is a doubt whether the property in question was not partnership property. Mr. Setalvad says, however, that quality as well as quantity is supplied, if I add to these sixteen instances the fifteen instances referred to in the judgment of Mr. Maru, Exhibit 8. This I cannot do. For one thing I have not got the depositions or record in that suit. Even if I had, I should have to consider whether they are admissible under section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act and if so, they would have to be weighed against the instances to the opposite effect given in Exhibit K, and also presumably in that judgment in the Porebunder Court of Appeal which was reversed by the Huzur Court in Exhibit 10D and which, I much regret, has not been produced before me despite my enquiries as to why it was not forthcoming.

As regards the evidence of the defendant himself, I think he adds little to what was said on commission, but I should say a word about his general evidence on the five pedigrees Exhibits 13A to E. The case as opened to me was that these five pedigrees all showed Hindu succession. In examination-in-chief the defendant, beyond saying generally that the pedigrees were correct, gave no evidence as to how the various estates devolved. In re-examination I gave leave to adduce this evidence having regard to Counsel's opening, and accordingly the defendant testified generally that in no case did a daughter or widow take a share according to Muhammadan Law. Cross-examination, however, proved that he had little or no personal knowledge on the point and in many instances he did not even know whether the persons in question had left any property. The pedigrees may, therefore, I think, be disregarded, except in so far as they contain persons enumerated in the table of instances which I have already dealt with.

I next turn to the plaintiff's evidence in opposition to the alleged custom. It consists of thirteen trial witnesses and two commission witnesses. Taking the trial witnesses first, witnesses Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 13 are good types of the trading community. They gave their evidence well and I accept it. Witness No. 9 was of a superior position and his evidence also was useful. Witness No. 1 is the Pleader I have already referred to, and witnesses Nos. 7 and 8 were only formal witnesses. Witnesses Nos. 4 and 6 are not as important as others, and No. 10 may, I think, be disregarded. Nos. 11 and 12 are the plaintiff and her husband.

These witnesses depose between them to numerous instances of Muhamamdan succession, but the bulk of them relate to persons domiciled in Bombay. Three instances are, however, proved to my satisfaction as being cases of Muhammadan succession amongst Halai Memons domiciled in Porebunder State, viz:—

(a) Saleh Mahomed Haji Vali of Ranavav, who died on 2nd November 191C. The distribution of his estate is evidenced by Exhibits O and Q, and by the oral testimony of his brother (witness No. 2). It is clear that he remained a Ranavav man. Even the defendant admits that (see questions 11-119). This deceased was instance No. 34 in the Table of Instances but was naturally enough abandoned by Mr. Se'alyad.

(b) Sulleman Hussam Kalli of Ranavav, who died in 1901. I think the release Exhibit A17 bears out the evidence of witness No. 2 (see questions 47-49 and 103-105) and of witness No. 13 (see questions 13-20 and 69-70), to the effect that the widow took a share according to Muhammadan Law. It is clear that this deceased remained a Ranavav man. And

(c) Osman Hamid of Porebunder, who died in 1877. This is an important case deposed to by witness No. 3. The release Exhibit U1 shows clearly that the widow and daughter took shares according to Muhammadan Law. The deceased was clearly a Porebunder resident (see Questions 20 and 37). His pedigree is Exhibit U5.

Other instances are given of alleged residents in Porebunder State, e. g., Mahomed Juma Chaya (question 50) and Mahomed Jusub Patel (question 54) by witness No. 2 : and Haji Mahomed Juma (question 47) and Jusub Ahmed (question 69) by witness No. 5. The last of these is borne out by the conveyance, Exhibit A16, but it would seem from question 163 of witness No. 5 that he resided mostly in Bombay. The other three cases rest mainly on hearsay and I think it safer to reject them although the dividing line between them and some of the defendant's instances which I have accepted may be a narrow one.

I may add that witness No. 2 gives an excellent example of Muhammadan succession in the case of his father Haji Ahmed, who was originally a Porebunder man but was probably a resident of Bombay at his death on the 31st July 1885. The plaints Exhibits S1 and S2 in the Administration Suits Nos. 33 and 34 of 1886: the family agreement Exhibit T1 (which states that the shares "are according to the Muhammadan Law and agreeably to the opinions of Kazis (Judges) and Moulvis (lawyers)": the decree Exhibit T2 which approved the agreement on behalf of minors and the release Exhibits T3 by a brother and his sisters, all prove an instance of the custom which exists among Halai Memons in Bombay in a way which is in striking contrast to the type of evidence put forward on behalf of the defendant. Two other similar instances as regards Bhavnagar are given by witness No. 4 with reference to his grandfather and father and are supported by plaints Exhibits V1 and W1, decrees Exhibits V2 and W2 respectively. Further the defendant's witness Haji Ibrahim Geega (the treasurer of the Bhavnagar Jamat in Bombay) admitted this, and indeed claimed that he himself was governed by Muhammadan Law and had never heard of any alleged change of personal law on migration from Kathiawar to Bombay. I attach importance to this latter statement for the deponent is an independent witness: he is in a responsible position as treasurer, and he impressed me very favourably.

The evidence of the plaintiff herself on the question of custom I propose to treat as I do in effect that of the defendant, viz., to disregard it. As regards the plaintiff's husband he claimed in the Porebunder litigation (Exhibits 10A—E) that Hindu Law applied. Consequently in the present suit he was in rather an embarrassing position, which he did not improve by fencing with the questions. He left an unfavourable impression on my mind; and the defendant may legitimately point to question 110 as showing that this witness could not give any instance in his family of a daughter getting a share. As against this it must be borne in mind that the deponent is only aged 30, so his personal experience is limited.

Nor do the plaintiff's two commission witnesses carry the plaintiff's case any further. Exhibit Com. A, after saying that he had heard Porebunder Memons were governed by Hindu Law, went on to depose to the case of Salā Mahomed Haji Vali where the witness held the widow's power-of-attorney, and where (as I have already said, she took a share according to Muhammadan Law (see Exhibit O. Exhibit Com. B deposes principally to the same instance. He is only 28 and I do not think his evidence on the other cases is of any real assistance. The plaintiff at one time proposed to call other witnesses on commission, but she appears to have had some difficulty in getting them to attend. At any rate two warrants were issued against proposed witnesses (Exhibit N) but without result.

This leads me to a point on which the defendant naturally relies, viz., the comparative weakness of the plaintiff's Porebunder evidence as compared with the defendant's. In considering this point I must also consider whether there is any reasonable explanation of those sixteen recent or comparatively recent instances which the defendant has established, as opposed to the three contrary instances which the plaintiff has established. One possible explanation is that some at any rate of these sixteen instances may be due to legal advice founded on a misapprehension of the Bombay decisions with reference to Cutchi Memons or Khojas. If the Judges themselves in Porebunder and elsewhere were under this misapprehension, it is likely that some Counsel are either of the same opinion or have advised their clients in accordance with that opinion.

Another possible explanation may lie in the legislation which was proposed for Cutchi Memons and which was based on the principle that each Cutchi Memon should have the option either to retain Hindu Law or else to adopt Muhammadan Law as regards inheritance and succession. The original Bill was a private Bill No. 17 of 1885 (see Bombay Government Gazette for 1885, part VI, page 52) and as drafted it applied to Memons generally without distinguishing Cutchies and Halais. This was rectified in the later and official Bill No. 13 of 1896 (see Bombay

KHATUBAI P. MAHOMED HAJI ABU.

Government Gazette for 1896, part VI, page 149) which was confined to Cutchi Memons. Exhibit M shows that the Police notice, Exhibit L, was also advertised in the Porebunder State Gazette. One may assume that the Government of India took this step, because it did not wish legislation in British India to prejudice the community of Halai Memons who are partly within and partly without British India. At any rate it seems probable that the Porebunder Halai Memons were consulted as to their wishes. Witness Exhibit Com. 2 says (question 63):

"In 1897 the leaders of the Memon community were asked by the Administrator to state what law they followed in matters of inheritance and succession. We said that we have adopted Hindu Law. We were told that the Bombay Government wanted to know whether the Porebunder Memons and the other Memons of Kathiawar wanted to follow Muhammadan Law. We replied in the negative."

Witness Exhibit Com. 5 is much to the same effect. He says (question 41):—

"The leaders of Jamat had assembled at my shop. I was present there. They decided to inform the Administrator that the Jamat has approved of Hindu Law of inheritance by which they were governed."

The phrase "adopted Hindu Law" is a curious one for Exhibit Com. 2 to use, seeing that the defendant's case is that Hindu Law has been retained and not adopted; but in view of what Exhibit Com. 5 says, too much stress must not be laid on that phrase. I think, however, it may well be that although the Jamat was not convened (see Exhibit Com. 5, question 72), the community got an impression that they had a choice as to which law should be adopted and that the leaders having once decided on Hindu Law, it would be improper to act contrary to that decision or to give evidence against it. But how those leaders arrived at that decision is another matter. Exhibit Com. 2, who is now a leader, does not even know the injunctions of the Koran upon which the Muhammadan Law of inheritance is based. He says (questions 134-135):

"We believe that those who do not follow the Sareh (Koran) are Kafars (infidels). The point of inheritance is based on custom and I do not know whether the question of inheritance is treated of in the Sareh. I do not know how many matters the Sareh comprises. I have not learnt it."

I do not say that the above explanations have been legally proved, for, except in so far as they are legitimate inferences from the evidence, they must be considered as hypothetical. It is one of the misfortunes of commission evidence that at the trial Judge and Counsel have to take this evidence as they find it and irrespective of the course the case may take when heard. But disregarding the above explanations, one still has to remember that the onus of proof is on the defendant.

I have now dealt with most of the leading contentions which were urged on me with such force by Mr. Setalvad and Mr. Davar. Mr. Setalvad did indeed urge on me one other, viz., that the Kerjahas and Memons' case (2) should be adopted as the standard of proof, and that the defendant's evidence in the present case was at least as strong as that which Sir Erskine Perry thought sufficient to establish Hindu succession in 1847. I think, however, that the true test is that laid down by the Privy Council in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (4) which I have already mentioned, for I have no reason to suppose that there is any difference in Porebunder law as to the requisite proof of a custom. Accordingly I do not propose to discuss the question whether the evidence before Sir Erskine would nowadays satisfy that test. But I may add that the practical result of Sir Erskine's decision is hardly calculated to induce the Court to modify the strict standard of proof required for a custom. Cases such as Jan Mahomed v. Datu Jaffar (14), Mangaldas v. Abdul Razak (15) and Advocate-General v. Jimbubai (16) show the difficulty of saying where the law of inheritance and succession begins and where it ends, and there appears to be still much uncertainty as to the precise legal position of Cutchi Memons and Khojas. Unfortunately the efforts of Government to remedy by legislation this uncertainty in the law and consequent hardship came to naught.

I should also mention that my attention was drawn to section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act; and also to the ruling of the Privy Council in Garuradhwaja Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (17), to the effect that a witness may state his opinion as to the existence of a family custom and give as the grounds thereof information derived from deceased persons: but this must be independent opinion based on hearsay and not mere repetition of hearsay. In considering the evidence I have borne this ruling in mind, though possibly I have been too lenient in its application to some of the defendant's instances which I have held to be established.

There was one extraneous matter which had little or no bearing on the question of custom, but which affected the plaintiff and defendant personally, and which occupied unfortunately a good deal of time. The defendant alleged in effect that this action was brought out of spite because of a quarrel about a house he had bought for the plaintiff, and because of his subsequent refusal to execute certain repairs. The threats alleged by the defendant were after the Municipal notice to repair, which was received by the defendant about the 26th July 1915, (see Exhibit 19). Unfortunately for this contention the evidence of Mr. Daphtary (plaintiff's witness No. 8) shows clearly that this litigation was contemplated months before, viz., in January 1915, shortly after the testator's death. The power of attorney (Exhibit A3) from the plaintiff to her husband, which had been engrossed about the 28th January 1915, was executed on the 16th July 1915, and consequently before the Municipal notice. The documentary evidence, therefore, so far as it goes, is against the defendant. As regards the oral evidence I may disregard the plaintiff's husband, but I think the plaintiff is just as likely to be telling the truth as her brother the defendant, and as she is supported by the documents I decide this point in her favour. But it is quite a bye point, and only material on credibility and costs.

I now turn to my conclusions.

Viewing the case as a whole, does the evidence satisfy the test required to prove a custom in a Court of Law? After weighing all the evidence to the best of my ability, and after giving due consideration to the arguments of Counsel, I am of opinion and so hold that it does not, and that the defendant has not discharged the onus of proof which lies upon him.

The result is that in my judgment the testator was governed by the Muhammadan Law of inheritance and succession at the date of his death, and that accordingly the defendant fails in this suit.

The formal issues are:—

(1). Whether the intestate Haji Abu belonged at all material times to a family of Halai Memons who were settled in Porebunder?

(2). Whether as regards inheritance and succession, Halai Memons so settled in Porebunder as aforesaid (a) retained Hindu Law at the time of their conversion to Islam; or (b) have by immemorial custom adopted Hindu Law?

(3). Whether Halai Memons so settled as aforesaid are governed by Hindu Law as regards inheritance and succession?

(4). Whether the intestate at the date of his death was governed by (a) Muhammadan Law; (b) Hindu Law as regards the inheritance and succession to his moveable and immoveable properties (i) in Bombay and (ii) outside Bombay?

(5). Whether the plaintiff has any and, if so, what interest in the property left by the intestate?

I answer these issues as follows;—

(1). Yes.

(2) and (3) No.

(4). By Muhammadan Law.

(5). Yes. As one of the co-heirs of the intestate she is entitled to a 7/32 share of his estate.

I will hear Counsel on the precise form the decree should take and also on the question of costs.

SUBRAMANIA AIYAR v. NARAYANASWAMI VANDYAR.

My final word at the present stage of the case is to thank Mr. Setalvad and Mr. Davar for the great assistance they have been to me in one of the most laborious cases I have ever had to deal with.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 634 of 1916.

October 30, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Justice Seshagiri
Aiyar and Mr. Justice Napier.

SUBRAMANIA AIYAR—PLAINTIFF—

versus

NARAYANASWAMI VANDYAR

alias NARAYANASWAMI THEVAR—

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 83—Tender of mortgage money—Deposit of more than amount due, validity of—Non-acceptance, wrongful, by mortgagee—Redemption, suit for—Cessation of interest—Interest to plaintiff from date of suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act I of 1908), O. XXIV, r. 2—Petition for deposit asking for costs, legality of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 38—Tender, nature of.

The deposit of a larger sum than is due to the mortgagee, from which the latter is asked to take whatever is due to him, is valid under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and from the date of such deposit interest on such amount ceases to run. [p. 639, col. 2.]

Where a mortgagee wrongfully refuses to receive the amount deposited and the mortgagor is forced to bring a redemption suit, he is entitled to interest after the date of the service of the plaint and summons on the defendant. [p. 641, col. 1.]

Properties in schedule A were mortgaged to defendant in 1902. A portion of these properties covered by schedule B was subsequently mortgaged to one R. R. sued on his mortgage and brought the schedule B properties to sale, which were purchased by the plaintiff subject to defendant's mortgage. Plaintiff paid the money due on schedule A mortgage into Court and presented a petition, requiring that defendant should accept it and give possession of all the properties or that he should take from the amount deposited whatever was due on the schedule B mortgage and deliver to him the schedule B properties, and that the Court should provide for the costs. Defendant refused to receive an unspecified proportionate amount, but was willing to deliver to plaintiff the title-deeds of the Schedule B lands only on receiving the entire amount due on schedule A properties. Plaintiff in consequence, sued for redemption of schedule B properties, the whole amount deposited remaining in Court.

Held, (1) that as a larger amount was deposited in Court than was due under the schedule B mortgage, the tender was valid and interest ceased to run from its date; [p. 640, col. 2; p. 641, col. 1.]

(2) that under Order XXIV, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, plaintiff was entitled to interest after the date of the service of the plaint and summons on the defendant. [p. 641, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—The rule as to tender is part of the law as to performance of a contract as laid down in section 38 of the Contract Act. [p. 640, col. 2.]

If parties make a bona fide attempt at performing their contracts, the rights of the parties should not be defeated by technicalities. There is no rule that where a person tenders a large amount and asks for a change, he should not have the benefit of the tender. [p. 640, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Napier, J.—Section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act does not contemplate the exercise of any discretion by the Court in the matter of making either party liable for costs or granting any relief. If a tender under the section is accompanied by a prayer for costs and the Court refuses to take action thereon, the tender is bad. The tender is equally bad if, in making the deposit, the mortgagor requires the Court to ascertain the amount due on the mortgage. [p. 641, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree, dated 19th January 1916, of the Court of the District Judge, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 200 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Original Suit No. 69 of 1913.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and S. Rangachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—This suit is for redemption. Although the question of the priority of the two mortgages in dispute is not easy to determine, I shall proceed on the same assumption on which the Courts below have acted throughout. The defendant obtained a mortgage of the A schedule properties in 1902. On a portion of these properties which are included in the B schedule, there was a mortgage to one Bava Rowther. This Rowther brought a suit on his mortgage. The properties were put up to sale and the present plaintiff purchased the B schedule properties alone in 1908, subject to the defendant's mortgage. After he became the purchaser, the plaintiff presented an application under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, in January 1912, calling upon the defendant to receive the amount due and to deliver up the title deeds. This application is Exhibit Q. In it petitioner states that he has paid into Court the whole of the money due on the mortgage of the A schedule properties, and asks the defendant to accept the amount and to give him possession of all the properties. Then he makes an alternative request to the effect that, if the defendant is willing to receive the principal amount due in respect of the B schedule properties alone, he may draw out that sum from Court and give possession of the B schedule properties. The reply of the defendant is Exhibit R. I will use his own language in referring to it. In paragraph 2 he says: "As there is only an offer to pay only the proportionate amount, I am unwilling to accept the same. The petition does not state how much is the proportionate amount and I am not willing to accept it." In paragraph 5 he says that he is willing to hand over the B schedule lands alone on receiving the whole of the amount of the mortgage due upon the A schedule properties. As the parties were not able to come to terms, the Subordinate Judge passed this order, upon the plaintiff's petition: "counter-petitioner refuses to receive the money. Petitioner is referred to a regular suit. This petition is dismissed." Thereupon the present suit was brought. It is admitted that ever since the 9th of January 1912 when the money was deposited by the plaintiff, it has remained in Court and has not been drawn out by him. In the present suit the plaintiff asked that he should be allowed to redeem the B schedule properties on payment of Rs. 1,800 and odd out of the sum of Rs. 3,650 deposited by him. The defendant raised various objections. He stated the same grounds which he put forward in the counter-petition. He also raised the plea that the plaintiff was only a benamidar and as such was not entitled to redeem the property. The Subordinate Judge found all the issues against the defendant and gave a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for. He found that the sum of Rs. 1,852-3-10 mentioned in the plaint was the correct amount payable in respect of the B schedule properties. In appeal, the District Judge confirmed the findings of the Subordinate Judge upon all the points, except upon the question of interest and meane profits. He held that the plaintiff was the real owner, and that the defendant is only entitled to the proportionate amount due upon the B schedule properties. But he was of opinion that the tender was not a valid one and that, consequently, interest did not cease to run from the date of its deposit in Court. That is the main point to be decided by us.

I am unable to agree with the District Judge on the question of the validity of the tender. Section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act says: "The mortgagor or any other person entitled to institute such suit may deposit...to the account of the mortgagee the amount remaining due on the mortgage." The second paragraph says: "The Court shall call upon the mortgagee by notice to state the amount then due on the mortgage and his willingness to accept the money in full discharge of such amount." The section does not say that nothing more than the amount actually due should be paid. Of course if the money deposited is less than the amount payable to the mortgagee, the section will not be satisfied; but where more than the amount due is paid, I fail to see anything in the section to compel me to hold that the amount remaining due has not been paid. The English authorities to which I shall presently refer support the view I have taken. In the earliest case on the subject, Wade's case (1), the resolution, as it is called, is thus stated: Resolution 3: "A tender of more than is due is good." This decision was followed in Douglas v. Patrick (2) by a Bench of four Judges including Chief Justice Kenyon. Ashhurst, J., said: "There is no doubt a tender of the greater includes the smaller sum." Buller and Grose, JJ., use almost the same language. These two cases and others were considered in Dean v. James (3). Four Judges of the King's Bench headed by Denman, C. J., accepted the correctness of the earlier decision. Little-dale, J., said: "This case falls within the 3rd Resolution in Wade's case (1), that if a man tender more than he ought to pay, it is good, for omne majus continet in se minus, and the other ought to accept so much of it as is due to him." In Bevans v. Rees (4) the Chief Baron and three other Barons affirmed the proposition laid down in the earlier case. The Chief Baron said: "I am prepared to say that, if the creditor knows the amount due to him and is offered a larger sum and without any objection on the ground of want of change makes quite a collateral objection, that would be a good tender." I may mention in this connection that there are some curious decisions in the English Courts to the effect that where a debtor on paying a larger sum asks the creditor to take what is due to him and return the balance with a change, that will not be good tender. I have not examined this matter very carefully to see on what principles this exception as regards a claim for change is based. Probably it is due to the idea that the creditor should not be put to any trouble in accepting a tender. I do not think that, in this country, where we are not obsessed by technicalities of such a narrow description, we shall be justified in accepting a rule that where a person tenders a large amount and asks for a change, he should not have the benefit of the tender. Apart from this rule as to the claim for a change, the decisions I have referred to affirm the principle which has been consistently laid down since Wade's case (1). All these decisions were passed before the Transfer of Property Act was enacted. I feel no doubt that the framers of the Act had these decisions in their mind in drafting the rule as to tender and deposit. It is to be remembered that the rule as to tender is a part of the law as to the performance of a contract. Section 38 of the Contract Act, which uses the term 'offer', lays down three conditions. The offer must be unconditional; it must be made at a proper time and place; and the thing offered must be produced for inspection.

So far as I have been able to see, there are no provisions in any English Act relating to tender. The practice is referred to in Bullen and Leake, pages 710 and 711. There is an analogous provision in the rules of the County Court.

Now I shall refer to a few Indian decisions which were quoted on behalf of the respondent. All that was decided in Venkatrama Aiyangar v. Ringaswami Aiyangar (5) was that the mortgagee should not be compelled, before accepting the tender, to decide a dispute which has arisen between the parties as to the extent of the subsisting interest of the mortgagor in the equity of redemption. I do not think that this decision is against the view I have enunciated. In Lal Bateka v. Arcot Narainaswami Mudaliyar (6) Sir Arnold White, C. J., and Ayling, J., held that an offer to pay such amount as may be due on a settlement of account, if the payee would execute an indemnity bond, is not a valid tender. To use the language of the Contract Act, in that case there was no unconditional tender. In Subbai Goundan v. Palani Goundan (7) where a tender of money which was less by nine pies was made, the learned Judges seem to have held that it was not a valid tender. If I were deciding that case, I would have applied the maxim de minimus non curat lex; however, that may be, the principle that where a man tenders less than what is actually due it is not a good tender, is the only proposition that must be taken to have been laid down in that case. In Ayyankutti Mankondan v. Periyasami Kavandan (8) it was held by Coutts Trotter and Kumaraswami Sastriyar, JJ., that, where a bond contains a stipulation by way of penalty and the debtor deposits in Court what he considers to be reasonable compensation for the penal claim, it is a valid tender.

The principle to be borne in mind, especially in this country, is that the parties should be given an opportunity of making a bona fide attempt at performing the contract. If that requirement is complied with, the rights of the parties should not be defeated by technicalities. Of course, if the law imposes conditions, we are not at liberty to disregard them on the ground they are against justice. I am of opinion that the tender in January 1912 was valid. At any rate so far as the ceasing of interest after the date the defendant was served with the summons in the present case is concerned, I entertain no doubt about it. The defendant was informed by the plaintiff that the money was already in Court; he was told what the exact sum was which was due and payable to him; he was further told that he could draw that amount from Court.

The Courts below have found that the exact amount mentioned in the plaint was the sum which was payable to the defendant and nothing more.

Under these circumstances the principle of Order XXIV, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code applies, and the plaintiff is entitled to interest after the date of the service of the plaint and the summons on the defendant. I would modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by giving interest to the plaintiff from the date of the service of the plaint and summons on the defendant. The parties are entitled to proportionate costs in this Court and in the Court below.

NAPIER, J.—I have found some difficulty in holding that there was a deposit within the meaning of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act for, in my opinion, the petition which was filed with the deposit was not a petition contemplated by the section. The section requires that the mortgagor should deposit, to the account of the mortgagee, the amount remaining due on the mortgage, and that thereupon the Court should give written notice to the mortgagee, and he, on presenting a petition stating the amount then due on the mortgage and his willingness to accept the money so deposited, is entitled to receive the money. Now the appellant, according to the language of his petition, sought something different. He asked the Court to pass an order "directing the counter-petitioner to hand over all the said othi lands with the produce to the petitioner on receiving the othi amount of Rs. 3,650 or directing the counter-petitioner to hand over the lands along with the produce brought in auction on receiving the proportionate amount, making the counter-petitioner liable for the costs and granted other reliefs." This petition is clearly not contemplated by the Act. This Court has, under its powers to make rules given by section 104 of the Act, framed Rules for the Original Side which, though not applicable to the present case, indicate the scope of the section. They require that the mortgagor should file an affidavit stating the facts of the case and in addition to depositing the amount due on the mortgage, deposit in Court a sum sufficient to provide for the costs of the mortgage, etc. They do not contemplate the exercise by the Court of any discretion, in the matter of making either party liable for costs or granting any relief. I am clear, therefore, that if the Court had refused to take any action on this petition the proceeding purported to be taken under section 83 would have been bad. However, the Court did give notice to the mortgagee and I must take it that it treated the application as being in proper form. The mortgagee did not take objection that the mortgagor had not deposited the amount remaining due on the mortgage, so as to enable him to decide whether he would accept the money so deposited in full discharge of the amount as calculated by him. Just as it was the duty of the mortgagor to deposit the amount remaining due, so it was the duty of the mortgagee to state the amount then due on the mortgage. It appears to me that, if he had stated the amount as some figure under the whole othi amount and had claimed to receive that amount out of the total amount deposited, he would have been entitled to do so. It is on this footing alone that I can find that the proportionate amount on such properties was, in fact, deposited. If the petition was to be read as requiring the Court to ascertain what the proportionate amount was, I should certainly hold that there was no proper deposit, but in the view that the petitioner left it to the mortgagee to take whatever sum under the total amount, which he thought he was entitled to as proportionate, I am not prepared to say that the deposit was not good. I agree with the order of my learned brother.

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Denial of landlord's title—Forfeiture of tenancy—Determination of tenancy—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 111 (g).

A denial by a tenant of his landlord's title in a suit for rent causes a forfeiture of the tenancy enabling the landlord to eject the tenant as a trespasser. [p. 642, col. 2.]

In order to determine a tenancy on the ground of denial of title by the tenant, it is not necessary that any notice should be given or a prescribed act should be done by the landlord. It is sufficient if something is done by the lessor to show his intention to determine the lease. [p. 643, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna.

Rai Bahadur Purnendu Naryan Sinha and Mr. Panchanan Benerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohammad Husan Jan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment of the defendant No. 1 from two plots of homestead land in Mouza Dariapur Sher, and in the alternative for mutharja rent for 1320 to four annas kisht of 1323 Pasli. The Mouza was partitioned in 1894 and the lands in dispute, bearing Batwara Khasra Nos. 65 and 67, fell in Touzi No. 98. The plaintiffs now hold the entire 16 annas of Touzi No. 98. The defendant No. 1 holds the lands as tenant thereof. He denied the title of the plaintiffs to khas possession or to rent and set up the title of one Nur Jahan, wife of defendant No. 2, to the lands in suit. Nur Jahan was impleaded as defendant No. 2 in the suit and after her death her husband was substituted in her place. There was no appearance in the Courts below by Nur Jahan or her husband. The suit was contested by defendant No. 1 only.

The Courts below have concurrently held that the plaintiffs as owners of 16 annas of Touzi No. 98 are proprietors of the disputed lands which have fallen in their Touzi and that Nur Jahan, defendant No. 2, has no concern with the disputed lands. This finding as to the plaintiffs' title to the lands in suit is not pressed before me in this appeal. The plaintiffs are, therefore, owners of the lands in suit and the defendant No. 1 is tenant thereof. The Courts below have decreed the suit for possession in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant No. 1 has preferred this second appeal.

In 1907 the plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of rent from the defendant No. 1. In that suit the defendant denied the relationship of landlord and tenant and set up the title of Nur Jahan. The plaintiffs' suit was dismissed on 19th June 1908. The plaintiffs subsequently brought another suit for rent. The defendant No. 1 again denied the title of the plaintiffs and the relationship of landlord and tenant, with the result that the plaintiffs had to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The plaintiffs, therefore, in the present suit seek to recover possession of the property in this suit on the ground that the denial of their title by the defendant in the two previous suits for rent constituted a forfeiture of the tenancy. The Courts below have found as a fact that the lands in suit are homestead lands and are not governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that defendant No. 1 clearly and unequivocally denied the title of the plaintiffs in the previous suits referred to above. The attempt of the defendant to challenge these findings of fact is futile. In the first place, the appellant is not entitled to re-open the findings of fact in second appeal. Apart from this a reference to the written statement of the defendant, Exhibits 6 and 6 (1) in the previous suits, and his deposition in the suit of 1907 clearly go to show that the defendant No. 1 openly and clearly repudiated in toto the plaintiffs' title to the lands. It is also admitted, as held by the Courts below, that the lands when acquired were homestead lands and hence are not governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. This finding is not seriously disputed in the second appeal. The defendant not only denied the plaintiffs' title in the previous suits but persists in denying it in the present suit and in setting up the title of a third person. There can, therefore, be no doubt that defendant No. 1 has forfeited his right of tenancy in the lands in suit and is liable to be ejected therefrom. The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant, however, contends that the defendant is not liable to be ejected from the lands in suit, inasmuch as there is nothing to show that the plaintiffs did any act prior to the suit for ejectment showing their intention to determine the lease. Reliance is placed upon clause (g), section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, which runs as follows:—

“A lease of immoveable property determines by forfeiture, that is to say, (1) in case the lessee breaks an express condition which provides that on breach thereof the lessor may re-enter or the lease shall become void; or (2) in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself; and in either case the lessor or his transferee does some act showing his intention to determine the lease.”

This point does not appear to have been taken in the Courts below nor in the written statement. The defendant, to my mind, is not entitled to raise this point in second appeal, particularly when the decision on the point involves determination of facts which should have been raised in and determined by the Courts below. The defendant is a purchaser of the holding of the plots Nos. 65 and 67 from Kanhai Mahto and Gopi Halvai respectively by means of sale-deeds executed some 27 or 28 years ago, i. e., about the year 1888, the exact dates whereof are not disclosed. The origin of the tenancy is not at all known. Kanhai and Gopi must have held the lands for over 12 years prior to 1888, when they transferred the occupancy rights in the lands to defendant No. 1. The tenancy was, therefore, probably created before the Transfer of Property Act. If the tenancy was created prior to the Transfer of Property Act of 1882, clause (g) of section 111 will not apply, as clearly held in Padmanabaya v. Ranga (1), which was followed in Korapalu v. Narayana (2); vide also Ramnath Sil v. Siba Sundari Debya (3). It was for the defendant-appellant to show that the tenancy was created after the Transfer of Property Act in order to take advantage of the clause mentioned above. The defendant did not take this plea nor offered any evidence to show when the tenancy was created. He is not entitled in second appeal to raise this question.

Again even if the tenancy was created after the Transfer of Property Act, it appears to me that the clause does not require any notice to be given, nor a prescribed act to be done on the part of the lessor. It is sufficient if something is done by the lessor to show his intention to determine the lease. In the present case the defendant repudiated the plaintiffs' title in 1907 and the plaintiffs' suit for rent was dismissed. Subsequently the plaintiffs had to withdraw their second suit for rent on account of the denial of their title by the defendant. The plaintiffs, therefore, bring the present suit for ejectment treating the defendant as trespasser, as they are entitled to do so: vide Khater Mistri v. Sadruddi Khan (4), Nilmadhab Bose v. Ananta Ram Bagai (5) and Ramnath Sil v. Siba Sundari Debya (3). The withdrawal of the suit, with liberty to bring another suit, was an act done by the plaintiffs sufficient to indicate the intention of cancelling the lease and ejecting the defendant from the holdings. The plaintiffs have accomplished their intention by bringing the present action for ejectment.

It is thus clear that the plaintiffs are entitled to eject the defendant No. 1, whether the tenancy was created before or after the Transfer of Property Act.

I, therefore, hold that the defendant has forfeited the lease and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession in the present suit. The result is that agreeing with the views of the Courts below I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 14 (c), scope of—Arbitration, reference to—Award, erroneous view of law in—Court, whether can set aside award—Reference as to right to succession of Hindu alleged to be congenitally blind—Award giving life-interest, legality of.

An award cannot be set aside under clause (c) of paragraph 14 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the arbitrators have given an erroneous decision on a point of law. [p. 645, col. 2.]

Clause (c) of paragraph 14, of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, should be confined to cases like those where the arbitrator perversely and manifestly misapplies a rule of succession or applies to the parties a rule by which they are not bound. Where the arbitrator has applied his mind honestly and has arrived at a decision to the best of his ability, the fact that the Judge might take a different view is not a ground for holding that the award is illegal on its face. [p. 645, col. 2.]

Where a reference was made to arbitrators as to the right of inheritance of the plaintiff who was alleged by defendants to be congenitally blind, and the arbitrators awarded to plaintiff a life-interest in a fourth share in the properties subject to its becoming an absolute interest in case the plaintiff married:

Held, that the award was not liable to be set aside under paragraph 14 (c) of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 646, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in Appeal Suit No. 4 of 1916, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Amalapuram, in Original Suit No. 245 of 1912.

Mr. B. Narasimha Row, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sues for a share in the family properties. The defence is that he was born blind and that consequently he is not entitled to any share under the Hindu Law. A number of issues were raised, including the one on the question whether the plaintiff was congenitally blind. After the settlement of issues the parties agreed to refer the disputes to certain arbitrators. The agreement to refer is very general in its terms and apparently all questions of fact and law were referred to arbitrators. Upon the reference the arbitrators decided that the plaintiff was entitled to a life-interest in a fourth share in the properties subject to its becoming an absolute interest in case the plaintiff married.

On the submission of this award objections were taken by the plaintiff, on the ground that it was illegal on the face of it and the Court should not accept it. Both the Courts below have upheld this contention and have set aside the award.

In second appeal the learned Vakils have argued the case very elaborately; we have come to the conclusion that the Courts below are wrong.

Section 14 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code sets out the grounds on which an award may be set aside; clause (a) refers to the arbitrators not deciding what has been referred to them and to deciding matters not within their jurisdiction; clause (b) refers to an indefinite award; and clause (c) to an award whose illegality is patent upon the face of it.

In the present case the complaint is that the award is illegal as it apparently proceeded on the ground that the plaintiff, though not born blind, is not entitled to his full rights in the family. It may be observed in passing that the rights of the plaintiff were not beyond question until the recent decision of the Judicial Committee in Musammat Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prashad Singh (1). The arbitrators were of opinion, whether rightly or wrongly, that the plaintiff should not have anything more than a life-interest in the properties. Now the point is whether this conclusion is so patently illegal as to come within the mischief of clause (c) of section 14.

A large number of English decisions were quoted by Mr. Somasundaram for the respondents. They all assume that where an error of law appears on the face of the award the error can be remedied by Courts. The various dicta to be found on the subject all refer to the decision in Hodgkinson v. Fernie (2) as first enunciating this proposition. On examining that case we find this statement of the law in the judgment of Wallis, J., one of the ablest Common Law Judges of his time. If we may say so with respect, we share the doubt expressed by the learned Judge regarding the practicability and the soundness of enforcing the ancient principle referred to by him. Moreover the later decisions to which we shall presently refer and the Civil Procedure Code do not appear to have accepted the proposition that an erroneous view of law appearing on the face of the award vitiates it.

In King and Duveen, In re (3) Channel, J., said that if, on a question of law referred to the decision of an arbitrator he has given an erroneous decision, it should not be questioned by the Court. In Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan (4) the Judicial Committee have laid down the same principle. In Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (5) they say expressly that an arbitrator has jurisdiction to decide both on facts and on law and that the Courts have no right to sit in judgment over his views. In Adams v. Great North of Scotland Railway Co. (6) the same view was held, see also Dinabandhu Jana v. Chintamani Jana (7). As regards the decision in British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. v. Underground Electric Railways Co. (8) what was said by Lord Haldane in the House of Lords was that, if the result of an arbitration was induced by a wrong direction as to law given by a Court, the Appellate Court is not powerless and the Court below is not entitled to shelter itself under the award. It is true that the decision of a Division Bench in Landauer v. Asser (9) supports the contention of the learned Vakil for the respondents. But that case stands by itself and, although there are dicta of a very general character in the English reports, in no case except in the case in Landauer v. Asser (9) was an award set aside on the ground that the arbitrator had given an erroneous decision on law.

Coming to the Civil Procedure Code we think that clause (c) of section 14 should be confined to cases like those where the arbitrator perversely and manifestly misapplies a rule of succession or applies to the parties a rule by which they are not bound; we are not to be supposed to have exhausted the category of the cases which may come under the clause, but we do think that where the arbitrator has applied his mind honestly and has arrived at a decision to the best of his ability, the fact that a Judge might take a different view is not a ground for holding that the award is illegal on its face. We must reverse the decrees of the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of first instance for its being heard on the other objections taken to the award.

Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed;
Case remanded.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 23—Transfer of suit of Small Cause Court nature to ordinary jurisdiction of Munsif—Appeal—Remand, order of, for taking evidence for elucidation of obsolete or provincial expression, validity of,

ANHAYESWARI DEBI v. HATU SHIKKH.

A suit for the recovery of damages for the appropriation of a jack tree was instituted by a landlord against his tenant on the Small Cause Court side of a Munsif's Court invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction. The Munsif transferred the suit to his ordinary jurisdiction, on the ground that it involved questions of custom and title to immoveable property, and after taking evidence under the ordinary procedure made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal an objection was taken that as the suit was triable by a Court of Small Causes the appeal was incompetent. This objection was overruled:

Held, that though the procedure which the Munsif followed in transferring the suit to his ordinary jurisdiction was not strictly in conformity with the language of section 23 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, yet his order of transfer might be regarded as an order made under section 23 of the Act, so that his decision was a decision by a Court having jurisdiction to determine questions of title and was, therefore, open to appeal. [p. 646, col. 2; p. 646, col. 1.]

A suit can be remanded by an Appellate Court for the purpose of taking evidence in order to elucidate the meaning of an obsolete or provincial expression. [p. 647, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the Special Subordinate Judge, Assam Valley Districts.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakrabarti and Purna Chandra Roy, for the Petitioner.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy, Chowdhury and Satya Charan Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order by which the Subordinate Judge of the Assam Valley Districts in an appeal to his Court has directed the taking by the Court of first instance an additional evidence.

It appears that the suit in question, which was one for the recovery of damages for the appropriation of a jack tree, was originally instituted in the Court of the Munsif at Goalpara, the said Munsif being invested under section 25 of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, with the jurisdiction of a Judge of a Court of Small Causes for the trial of suits cognizable by such Courts up to the value not exceeding Rs. 100. The suit was instituted on what is spoken of as the Small Cause Court side of his Court on the 1st August. When the written statement of the defendants-tenants was filed, it appeared to the learned Munsif that the case was one which involved the question of custom and title to immoveable property. He thereupon on the 14th September 1914 made the following orders:—"This case should be heard under the regular procedure and transferred to the Munsif," and his next following order is, "the case transferred to the Munsif." He then proceeded to take evidence under the ordinary procedure and finally made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 10. Against that decision the tenants-defendants preferred an appeal to the Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, and that appeal finally came on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge to whom we have already referred. In his Court a preliminary objection was taken that the suit being one of a Small Cause Court nature no appeal lay to his Court. By his order dated the 7th December 1916 that objection was overruled by the learned Subordinate Judge, who eventually on the 7th July 1917 made the order of remand or rather the direction for the taking of further evidence of which we have already made mention. The present application of the plaintiff, who is the petitioner before us, is really directed against both those orders.

The contention before us is that the learned Subordinate Judge should have held that inasmuch as the suit was one of Small Cause Court nature, he should have on that ground dismissed the appeal which had been preferred to his Court. This is the question which in this Rule we have to decide, and inasmuch as it is not and cannot be disputed that the case as instituted was one of Small Cause Court nature, the question before us really is whether the Munsif's orders of the 14th September 1914 are to be regarded as an order made under section 23 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, and is the acceptance of a plaint presented under that section to him in his character as Munsif and, therefore, as a Court having jurisdiction to determine questions of title. Obviously the procedure which he followed was not strictly in conformity with the language of section 23. But from the judgment of the learned Munsif we find that his order was made in the presence and at the instance of both parties. That being so, when after that order made at the instance of both parties the plaint was transferred to and accepted by the Munsif and the trial proceeded in his Court, we are of opinion that we should agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the order was one in effect made under the provisions of section 23 of the Small Causes Courts Act, and that the order was followed by the presentation of the plaint to and its acceptance by a Court having jurisdiction to determine title.

It is, however, contended further that after the close of the hearing and before the delivery of judgment the tenants-defendants themselves presented a petition to the Munsif to the effect that the suit was one triable by the Court of Small Causes, that the plaint had not been returned to the plaintiff in the manner provided by section 23 of the Small Causes Courts Act and praying that that course should then be followed and the suit practically re-heard de novo. The Munsif did not accede to that prayer, but at the same time in his judgment gave expression to the opinion that the jurisdiction of the Court had not been affected and that leaving out of consideration the order in question, it might be held that the suit was still triable as a Small Cause Court suit, with only this exception that the evidence had been recorded at length and not in the summary way. But we are not able to agree with the Munsif in that view. The plaint having been accepted as a plaint properly presented to the Munsif and having been tried out as a title suit, he could not at the close of the hearing turn round and say that he was in effect exercising the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court Judge. But it is argued that this petition should be treated as creating an estoppel in favour of the plaintiff and should have been treated by the Subordinate Judge and should be treated by us as creating a bar to the presentation and the hearing of the appeal in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. To that view also we are unable to accede. The Munsif in effect did not grant the prayer of the tenants-defendants and hence the doctrine of estoppel can have no application.

With regard to the merits of the order of remand the appeal being competent, only one question has been raised before us. The evidence now to be adduced is to be taken in order to elucidate the meaning of an obsolete or provincial expression. To the taking of such evidence, having regard to the provisions of section 98 of the Evidence Act, there can of course be no objection. But it is said that while in the first Court the tenants-defendants relied upon evidence of custom, they now seek to shift their ground to base their defence upon grant. It is not, however, necessary for us to decide that point at this stage. In so far as we understand the judgment of the Subordinate Judge leading up to his order of remand, he treats the document as one which, if the meaning of the expression in question can be elucidated, may be used as evidence corroborating the other evidence of custom adduced in the first Court by the tenants-defendants. This is, however, as we have already said a question which we really need not decide at this stage. It may be more appropriately considered and decided after the final decision of the appeal by the learned Subordinate Judge.

For the reasons we have given we discharge this Rule. The opposite party is entitled to his costs, which we assess at three gold mohurs.

Rule discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 17, 20, 21, scope and applicability of—Application to file award made before delivery of award—Order, whether appealable—Material irregularity in proceedings of arbitrators—Revision.

Paragraph 20 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code prescribes the procedure to be followed in respect of an application for filing an award which has already been made without the intervention of the Court, and does not apply to a case where up to the date of filing of the application the arbitrators have not made their award. [p. 648, col. 2.]

ALLAH DIN V. RADSHAH BEGAM.

Where, therefore, the parties to a dispute entered into an agreement to refer it to arbitration and after the commencement of proceedings by the arbitrators but before the delivery of any award, the plaintiff made an application under paragraphs 17, 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code, whereupon the Court made an order directing the award to be filed in Court:

Held, that the order was not one under paragraphs 20 and 21 and was not, therefore, appealable.

A revision lies against a decree based upon an arbitration award on the ground of material irregularity, but that material irregularity must have reference to the proceedings of the lower Court and not to those of the arbitrators.

Sita Ram v. Dhani Ram, 92 P. R. 1903; 35 P. L. R. 1904, followed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 27th June 1917, directing the award of the arbitrators to be filed in Court under paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents:

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was filed as one from an order directing an award to be filed in Court under paragraphs 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. Bakhshi Tek Chand on behalf of the respondents raises a preliminary objection that no appeal lies as the order appealed from is not one under the aforesaid paragraphs of the Second Schedule. On the 1st of June 1915 the parties entered into an agreement to refer the matters in dispute between them to arbitration. The arbitrators are said to have begun their proceedings, but admittedly when the present application was made on the 21st March 1917 no award had yet been made. The plaintiff then applied that under paragraphs 17, 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code the arbitrators and the umpire should be required to file the agreement in Court and then to file their award in Court and that a decree be passed in accordance with the said award. On the 24th April 1917 the Court ordered the agreement to be filed and referred the matters in dispute to the arbitrators, who were required to file their award on the 2nd May 1917. The award was filed on the 2nd May and thereafter the Court, after disposing of the objections filed by the plaintiff-appellant, passed a decree in accordance with the award. In Civil Appeal No. 2036 of 1917 decided by Shadi Lal, J., on the 26th February 1918 it was held in a similar case to the present that no appeal lay. In that case also it was common ground that up to the date of filing of the application the arbitrators had not made their award and the Judge held that, that being the case, paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule was wholly inapplicable as it prescribed the procedure to be followed in respect of an application for filing an award which had already been made without the intervention of the Court. In the present case also no award had been made at the time when the application of the 24th March 1917 was made to the Court, and, therefore, that application cannot be considered as one under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule but must be considered as one under paragraph 17 thereof. I, therefore, hold that no appeal lies in the present case.

Mr. Abdul Rashid asks that the appeal may be treated as an application for revision. He admits, however, that he cannot point to any error in the procedure of the Court but merely to errors in the procedure of the arbitrators. In Sita Ram v. Dhani Ram (1) it was held that although a revision lies against a decree based upon an arbitration award on the ground of material irregularity, yet that material irregularity must have reference to the proceedings of the lower Court and not to those of the arbitrators. Now it is admitted that in the present case the lower Court has followed the correct procedure. It follows, therefore, that there is no ground for revision.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17 —Amendment of pleadings—Discretion of Court, principles governing.

Amendments of pleadings should be allowed when asked for by a party, provided the opposite party is not taken by surprise or precluded from adducing evidence or raising the necessary issues. Where, however, a party is agitating only a technical claim or the character of the suit is likely to be altered or where there is inordinate delay in asking for amendment, the Court would be justified in refusing to grant an amendment. The main considerations to be borne in mind are that multiplicity of suits should be avoided and the interests of substantial justice should be advanced. [p. 649, col. 2; p. 650, col. 1.]

Weldin v. Neal, (1887) 19 Q. B. D. 394; 56 L. J. Q. B. 621; 35 W. R. 820, Kamara Venkata Perumal Raja Bahadur Varu v. Velayuda Reddi, 24 Ind. Cas. 195; 27 M. L. J. 25, distinguished.

Plaintiff sued for recovery of 2 out of 5 shares in one plot or in the alternative 2 out of 12 shares in that and another plot. Mesne profits were reserved for a separate action. The trial Court decreed only the first prayer, but on appeal the District Judge granted the second prayer. Before the appeal was heard, plaintiff had filed a suit to recover mesne profits in respect of the property decreed to him. After the disposal of the appeal, he applied for amendment of the plaint by substituting a claim for mesne profits of 2 out of 12 shares in both plots.

Held, that the amendment should be allowed. [p. 649, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 214 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 791 of 1913.

Mr. C. Narasimhachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The present plaintiff first brought a suit against the defendants to recover 2 out of 5 shares in one plot of property. He also asked in the alternative that he should be given 2 out of 12 shares in that and another plot of property. The District Munsif gave him a decree for 2 out of 5 shares in the first plot. Thereupon the defendant preferred an appeal to the District Court. Before the appeal was heard, the plaintiff sued to recover mesne profits in respect of the property decreed to him by the District Munsif, as he had reserved his right to sue for such mesne profits. In appeal, the District Judge modified the decree of the Munsif and gave the plaintiff 2 out of 12 shares in both the plots. Thereupon the plaintiff presented a petition to the District Munsif to allow him to amend the plaint by inserting a claim for mesne profits on 2 out of 12 shares in both the plots. This amendment was disallowed by the District Munsif, as he held that the nature of the amendment was such as to change the character of the suit. His view was upheld in appeal; and this second appeal has been preferred against that judgment. We are unable to agree with the Courts below.

We agree with the statement of law contained in the judgment of Oldfield and Krishnan, JJ., reported as Gatiganti Subbarayudu v. Arumilli Surayya (1), where they point out that, on a question of the propriety of allowing amendments, each case will have to be decided on the facts presented to the Court. In the present case, the amendment prayed for will not alter the nature of the suit, nor will there be an addition of a new cause of action. The principle to be borne in mind by Courts below is, that, provided the opposite party is not taken by surprise, nor precluded from adducing evidence nor from raising the necessary issues, the amendment should ordinarily be allowed. In the present case, on the date of the application for amendment, the suit was at the very initial stage of the proceedings. No issue had been raised and no evidence had been let in, and, therefore, the District Munsif ought, in the circumstances, to have allowed the amendment. At the same time, we wish to point out that where the plaintiff is agitating only a technical claim or where the character of the suit is likely to be altered, or where there has been an inordinate delay in asking for amendment, the Court will be justified in refusing to grant an amendment. The main considerations to be borne in mind are that multiplicity of suits should be avoided and the interests of substantial justice should be advanced.

As regards the cases quoted at the Bar, Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar strongly relied upon the observation of Lord Esher in Weldon v. Neal (2). In that case, the amendment necessitated the adding of a new cause of action, as was pointed out by the learned Master of the Rolls. Moreover, it has to be borne in mind that in England pleadings are drafted with greater care than in this country. In an early case before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council reported as Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Musammat Thakooranee Rutta Koer (3), it was pointed out that Courts should have regard to the loose way in which pleadings are prepared in India, and should, as far as possible, allow amendment of the pleadings, in order to avoid a claim being barred by the Statute of Limitation. This is quite consistent with the view taken in Weldon v. Neal (2), and we are certainly bound to follow this dictum of the Judicial Committee in preference to the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Weldon v. Neal (2).

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar also relied upon certain observations of the present learned Chief Justice in Kumara Venkata Perumal Raja Bahadur Varu v. Velayuda Reddi (4). If we may say so with respect, upon the facts presented to the Court in that case, we would not have been prepared to allow the amendment. In that case an attempt was made to get property not included in the application to be sold after 12 years from the date of the presentation of the first application. That was a case of gross carelessness and of great delay. Therefore the observations in Kumara Venkata Perumal Raja Bahadur Varu v. Velayuda Reddi (4) do not conclude this case. On the other hand, in that same case, Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar took a different view of rule 17 of Order VI, Civil Procedure Code. In Varadiah v. Raja Kumara Venkata Perumal (5) the same learned Judge was a party to allowing amendment under similar circumstances. A case almost on all fours with the present case is Sevugan Chetty v. Krishna Aiyangar (6), where Benson and Spencer, JJ., allowed an amendment on grounds similar to the present case. This case was commented on by Oldfield and Krishnan, JJ., in Gatiganti Subbarayudu v. Arumilli Surayya (1), but they did not disapprove of the decision, although they pointed out that it was a case which had reached the high water mark in respect of allowing amendments. In the case before them, the learned Judges pointed out that the amendment sought for would not only change the nature of the suit, but would be diametrically opposed to it as originally presented, and that there was great delay in the presentation of the application for amendment. We think, in the circumstances of this case and having regard to the facts that the case of the defendants would not be changed and that there has been no delay in the presentation of the application for amendment, the Courts below should have allowed the amendment of the plaint.

We, therefore, reverse the decrees of the Courts below, and grant the plaintiff liberty to amend the plaint. It was due to the precipitate action of the plaintiff that there was necessity for this amendment, and in the circumstances, we think he should be directed to pay the costs of the respondents hitherto incurred in all the Courts. Further costs will be provided for in the revised decree.

MOHIM CHANDRA PAL v. PRADYAT KUMAR TAGORE.

Where in a redemption suit the plaintiff withdraws his claim as against one of the mortgagees, the suit should be dismissed for non-joinder of necessary parties.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Chapra, dated the 29th March 1917.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff instituted this suit for the redemption of a holding measuring 1 bigha 2 cottas 17 dhurs of land that was originally the holding of one Bhikari Kuarmi, who had admittedly mortgaged it to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and also to one Jagdish Singh, who was a defendant in the suit but against whom the plaintiff did not proceed having withdrawn his suit against him. The Munsif decreed the suit but the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif and has dismissed the suit. This appeal is from the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge.

It appears that there had been a previous suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession between the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and also Jagdish in respect of the land in suit. The Munsif relied on the decision given in that case and held that the title of the plaintiff to the holding in question was declared in the previous suit and that the decision of that case operated as res judicata in the present one on the question of the plaintiff's title. The learned Subordinate Judge on the other hand in his judgment has made no reference to the decision in the previous case, nor has he dealt with the question of res judicata taken up in the judgment of the Munsif. He has rested his decision on the question of title on the point that the plaintiff had not acquired the equity of redemption in respect of this holding, because there was no such transfer to him by a registered instrument. The appeal, however, is concluded on the question of the defect of parties. Under Order XXXIV, rule 1, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to implead Jagdish in this case, but it appears that he withdrew his suit against Jagdish. This is not permissible to him and the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that the Munsif was wrong in passing a decree for redemption in the absence of defendant No. 3. This aspect of the case should have been sufficient for the lower Appellate Court to have given his decision in reversing the judgment and decree of the Munsif. I agree with the lower Appellate Court in the view that the absence of Jagdish from the present case is a sufficient defect to set aside the judgment and the decree given by the Munsif. The point is concluded by a decision of this Court reported as Girwar Narain Mahton v. Musammal Makbulunnissa (1). The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Held, that the provision was absolutely inconsistent with the fact that the tenant had a permanent interest in the land leased. [p. 652, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 22nd May 1915, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of that district, dated the 21st September 1914.

MOHIM CHANDRA PAL V. PRALYAT KUMAR TAGORE.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Heramla Chandra Guha, for the Appellants.—The question for your Lordships' consideration is whether the Dowl Kabuliyat is any evidence as to the nature of the tenancy. The Record of Rights is in my favour. I have been recorded as having a permanent interest in the land held by me. The entry in the Record of Rights must be taken to be correct, unless it is proved to be incorrect. The entry has not been proved to be incorrect by any evidence except the Dowl Kabuliyat. The word "Sarasari" does not mean "temporary" but means "roughly." The term 'Dowl' itself means 'rent roll' and nothing else. 'Dowl Bandobasto' means 'settlement of rent.'

[FLETCHER, J.—'Sarasari Dowl Kabuliyat' means temporary settlement of land. So your interest cannot be permanent.]

'Sarasari' means temporary when it refers to settlement of rent. It does not mean temporary interest in land. It also means 'roughly.' See Wilson's Glossary, page 169.

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—If your tenure was permanent, you could have given other evidence to show that the tenancy was heritable. We cannot hold the tenancy to be permanent simply on the construction of the 'Dowl Kabuliyat', the terms of which are not entirely free from ambiguity.]

[FLETCHER, J.—Except the Record of Rights there is nothing in your favour to show that the tenancy is permanent.]

A tenancy will be presumed to be permanent from the circumstances that it descended from the father to son and was in the uninterrupted possession of the tenant for a long time.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babus Ram Churn Mitter, Mukundanath Roy and Permanand Lahiri), for the Respondents.—The question whether the tenancy in this suit is permanent is concluded by the decision of this Court reported as Prodyot Coomar Tagore v. Krishnamoni Dasya (1), where the suit was between the same landlord and some other tenants in which 'Dowl Kabuliyat' in the same terms as here was construed.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants against the decision of the learned

Special Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 22nd May 1915, reversing the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer of the same place. The proceedings out of which this appeal arises were instituted under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the Record of Rights finally published under section 103B of the same Act, there was an entry that the defendants held a permanent tenure subject only to the liability to have the rent enhanced. Therefore, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit under the provisions of section 106. The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that the tenure was permanent, not subject to enhancement of rent. On appeal, the learned Special Judge has reversed that finding. The way that the learned Judge bases his judgment is this. First of all, the learned Judge holds that, apart from certain Dowl Kabuliyats, the evidence does not establish that the defendants have a permanent interest. If that is the correct view, of course, there is nothing to say. Secondly, the learned Judge holds that, if the Dowl is to be the document for consideration apart from the other evidence, then the Dowl itself shows quite clearly that the tenure is not a permanent one. I think that the learned Judge is right on the terms of the Dowl. The last clause in the document, entitling the landlord to take possession in the event of the parties not being able to arrive at a new rate of rent after the expiration of the temporary term covered by the Dowl Kabuliyat, is absolutely inconsistent with the fact that the tenant has a permanent interest. No person having a permanent interest would contract that, if he and his landlord cannot agree as to what is to be the rate of the rent after the term for which the rent is settled with the landlord, he would forfeit his permanent interest in the land. Further, the Dowl Kabuliyat in the present case is substantially in the same terms as the Dowl Kabuliyat in the case that was heard by another Division Bench of this Court between the same landlord and another tenant, namely, the case of Prodyot Coomar Tagore v. Krishnamoni Dasya (1), where it was held that the Dowl Kabuliyat did not confer a permanent and heritable interest on the tenant. I think the conclusion arrived at by the learned Special Judge in the present case is correct. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswamy Iyer and K. G. Babu Row, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Prakasam, P. Narayan Murthi and C. Rama Row, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The property in suit belonged to the 2nd defendant. He obtained a loan under the Agricultural Improvements Act from Government in 1897. That loan was payable by instalments; while some of the instalments still remained unpaid, he sold the land to the plaintiff in 1902; owing to the default in the payment of one of the instalments, the land was put up to sale by the Government and was purchased by the 1st defendant. Plaintiff sues for a declaration that the revenue sale is not binding on him. It is found that no notice of the sale which was held in 1910 was served on the 2nd defendant or the plaintiff; but that, when the 1st defendant took proceedings under Act II of 1864 to obtain possession, plaintiff who had notice of the application objected to the delivery on the ground that the sale was not binding on him; this was in November 1912. The suit was instituted on the 9th June 1913, more than six months after the order for possession.

The Subordinate Judge held that the sale was invalid, as there was no demand on the 2nd defendant to pay the instalment and also because no notice of the sale was served on him. He, however, held that as the proceedings to obtain possession were taken to the knowledge of the plaintiff more than 6 months before the suit, the suit was barred by limitation under section 59 of Act II of 1864.

We think he has come to the right conclusion. The learned Vakil for the appellant contended that the sale was without jurisdiction, inasmuch as no notice of it was given to the plaintiff. In a very similar case it was held by a Full Bench of this Court in Venkata v. Chengadu (1) that failure to serve notice did not affect the jurisdiction of the Collector to sell the property. Under the Revenue Recovery Act there are some requisites which go to the root of the jurisdiction. As pointed out by Muthuswami Aiyar, J., in Venkata v. Chengadu (1), if there are no arrears, or if the land on which the arrear is due is not included in the holding of the alleged defaulter, any proceeding taken against such a person would be ultra vires. These are the essential conditions, compliance with which alone can invest the Collector with jurisdiction to take proceedings under the Act. If they are not complied with, the sale would be without jurisdiction. There are other conditions which the Act enjoins upon the Collector which are not conditions precedent. In conducting the sale certain formalities have to be observed. If they are not conformed to, the Collector, to borrow the language of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, will be acting illegally or irregularly in the exercise of his jurisdiction. No doubt such an illegal exercise of jurisdiction would vitiate the proceedings. But that is not enough to enable the plaintiff to obtain a declaration that the sale is not binding on him, if he does not sue within the period fixed by the Act. The proceedings taken being intra vires unless the suit is brought within 6 months to set the sale aside on the ground of irregularity or illegality, the plaintiff's suit will be barred.

(1) 12 M. 168; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 467 (F. B.).

We are unable to agree with Mr. Babu Rao that the sale was without jurisdiction, because of want of notice. The view taken by the Full Bench of this Court in Venkata v. Chengadu (1) is against such contention and we are not prepared to hold that that case is opposed to any subsequent decision of this Court and of the Judicial Committee.

The case of Secretary of State v. Radha Kishore Manikya (2), which was strongly relied on, related to the sale of waste lands; instead of proclaiming that the waste lands were situated in the District A, it was proclaimed that they were in District B; and when subsequently lands in District A were sold under such a proclamation, it was held that the sale was without jurisdiction. That was a case where the Revenue Officer had no jurisdiction to act in respect of the lands in District A. He violated the observance of a condition precedent.

In Mysore Balakrishna Rao v. Secretary of State (3) properties belonging to an individual were declared to be included in a reserved forest without any notice to him. Before taking action under the Act, the Government was bound to inform the person in possession that the property was going to be reserved. As regards the cases under the Rent Recovery Act in Dorasamy Pillai v. Muthusamy Mooppun (4) and Zamindar of Ittayapuram v. Sankarappa Reddiar (5), it is enough to say that in none of these was it held that the proceedings were without jurisdiction.

There is another point on which this appeal can be disposed of. Granting that the sale was invalid, the plaintiff was aware of the proceedings taken under the Act 6 months before the suit. It cannot be argued that the plaintiff was not aggrieved by the step taken to obtain possession. It was a step taken under colour of the Act and was calculated to injuriously affect the plaintiff's rights. The fact that the sale was without notice will not enable the plaintiff to ignore subsequent proceedings taken to his knowledge as having been taken without jurisdiction. In this view the decisions in Purna Chandra Chatterjee v. Dinabandhu Mukerjee (6) and in Rameswar Singh v. Secretary of State (7) are distinguishable from the present case. We think the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

KAMA V. BHAJANLAL CHANTANLAL.

Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Suit between landlord and tenant—Person other than landlord joined as co-defendant—Venue of case, how to be determined—Interpretation of Statutes—Act taking away jurisdiction of ordinary Courts.

An act by which the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts of Judicature is taken away must be construed strictly.

Prosunno Coomar Paul Chowdhry v. Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry, 8 W. R. 428 at p. 436; B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 759, 2 Ind. Jur. (N. S.) 327, followed.

The policy of the C. P. Tenancy Act, as declared by section 97 of the Act is that all questions concerning the right of a tenant as such of an agricultural holding which arise out of the relationship of tenant and landlord should, except so far as appeals are concerned, be tried by a Judge who is also a Revenue Officer.

The mere fact that some one who is not a landlord is joined as a co-defendant in a suit between a landlord and tenant does not take away the operation of section 97 of the C. P. Tenancy Act and such a suit is triable only by a Judge who is also a Revenue Officer.

Appeal from a decree of the Court of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 11th September 1914.

Mr. S. K. Barlinge, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Y. Deshmukh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I am clearly of opinion that this second appeal must succeed on the short point that the suit is one between landlord and tenant as such and, therefore, should not have been tried by an ordinary Civil Court.

The plaint alleges that the plaintiffs have been the ordinary tenants of the land in dispute since 1906-07, their landlord being Musammat Kama (defendant No. 1); that in 1910 Sonba (defendant No. 2) sued Musammat Kama for possession and obtained a decree as the outcome of a compromise; that the plaintiffs objected to being dispossessed in favour of Sonba, but their objection was dismissed on the ground that they had not in fact been ousted; and that subsequently both the defendants ejected them from the land. Sonba's defence was that he is occupancy tenant of the land which is in the patti of Musammat Kama's co-widow Musammat Rakhu and that he let it to Rakhu in 1906 on condition that she would vacate on demand. He was supported by the other defendant: in fact they filed a joint written statement at a late stage of the case. It is, however, unnecessary to consider the nature of the defence set up. The venue in a case is determined by the nature of the claim as laid: see Ganpat v. Trimbak (1) and compare Bhanya v. Naha (2) and Musammat Durbasa v. Khulak Singh (3).

It is urged for the plaintiffs, who are the respondents in this Court, that the principal defendant is Sonba, Musammat Kama being added pro forma. This contention, however, is not borne out by the plaint, in which possession and damages alike are claimed from both defendants. The policy of the Tenancy Act as declared in section 97 is that all questions concerning the right of a tenant, as such, of an agricultural holding which arise out of the relationship of tenant and landlord should, except so far as appeals are concerned, be tried by a Judge who is also a Revenue Officer. To hold that the section is inoperative where some one other than the landlord is joined as a co-defendant, would make evasion of the law a simple matter. An act by which the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts of Judicature is taken away must be construed strictly, as laid down in Prosunno Coomar Paul Chowdhry v. Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry (4), but the view I have expressed is in no way incompatible with the grammatical interpretation of section 97, and a similar one was taken by the Full Bench in Tarapat Ojha v. Ram Ratan Kuar (5) of the analogous provisions of the N. W. P. Revenue Act, 1851.

The decrees of the lower Court are set aside and the plaint will now be returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to a Judge, who is also a Revenue Officer and has jurisdiction to hear a suit to recover possession of land from which a tenant has illegally been ejected by the landlord. The point on which the plaintiffs succeed in this Court having been taken here for the first time, I direct that all costs hitherto incurred except the Court-fee on the plaint be borne by the parties respectively incurring them.

JUDGMENT.—The 2nd defendant obtained a kanom from the plaintiff's Tarwad in 1860. There was a decree for redemption against him; after decree and before restoring possession, he assigned his rights to the grandmother of the 1st defendant by Exhibit VIII. Subsequently, the 1st defendant's grandmother obtained a kanom in 1888 from the plaintiff's Tarwad which was renewed in 1892. The 2nd defendant took on lease the properties included in these demises from the 1st defendant, Exhibit XXX. Plaintiff sues to redeem the kanom. The 2nd defendant contended that the lands in suit were not included in the demise sued on. The Subordinate Judge has found after full discussion that they were included, and we see no reason to differ from him.

The learned Vakil for the appellant next contended that the lease under which he was holding was determined by the Government granting him a patta for the lands in 1893 and as he has been holding the lands under the Government, since then without paying any rent to the 1st defendant or the plaintiff's Tarwad, he had acquired a title to them by adverse possession.

The case strongly relied on by him for this proposition is Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (1). But an examination of the facts of the case shows that that decision lends no support to the appellant. In that case, the 1st plaintiff and the 1st defendant were adjoining landowners, the former being an old vargdar and the latter a person to whom a varg patta was newly granted. The land in question was Government waste land situated near the two wargs. The plaintiff, under the impression that the waste land would be granted to him by the Government, allowed the 2nd plaintiff to take them on lease from him. The 2nd plaintiff assigned that lease to the 2nd defendant. The Government, however, did not grant a patta to the 1st plaintiff, but gave the lands to the 1st defendant. The 2nd defendant contended that this action of the Government put an end to his tenancy from the 1st plaintiff; and the Court upheld that contention. It was apparently conceded by the contending parties that the lessor and the lessee did not deal with the property in the belief that the lessor had a right to grant a lease. The lease was accepted on the footing that the right to the land would be granted subsequently by the Government. When that understanding between the parties was not realised, the 2nd defendant was held entitled to repudiate the relationship of landlord and tenant. We are, therefore, of opinion that that decision is no authority for the broad proposition that an interference by a third party, whether that party be the Government or some other rival claimant, can have the effect of determining the relationship originally created between the landlord and the tenant. The next case relied on was Hattikudur Narain Rao v. Andar Sayad Abbas Sahib (2). Mr. Justice Hannay seems to have held that Subbaraya v. Krishnappa (1) was authority for the theory that a declaration by the Government can sever the relationship of a tenant to the landlord under whom he held properties. In our opinion, the learned Judge has stated the inference from the earlier case too broadly. As regards Ammu v. Ramakrishna Sastri (3), we are clear that the statement 'the tenancy under which the appellant held the plot of which she is now in possession was determined when the Deputy Collector declared the land to be the property of Government and granted it to the appellant as a ryot of the Government, and thereafter the appellant was not estopped from contending that the interest of the former landlord had expired' [see Ammu v. Ramakrishna Sastri (3)] does not enunciate the law correctly.

In more recent cases, this Court has recognised the principle that any adverse action taken by a third party cannot have the effect of terminating the relationship of landlord and tenant and that the tenant will be estopped by the provisions of section 116 of the Evidence Act from denying the landlord's title. See Ammu Ammal v. Puthiaparambath Moidin (4) and Second Appeal No. 320 of 1915. We think these decisions lay down the law correctly. In both the second appeals the action of the Government was relied on as starting adverse possession against the landlord.

As regards improvements the 2nd defendant has been awarded compensation after the date of Exhibit VII, under which he sold his right to the then existing improvements to the 1st defendant.

—RESPONDENT.

Res judicata in execution proceedings—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 5, sub-r. 2—Application for final decree, whether can be considered as in continuation of previous application.

On the death of one of several decree-holders after the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit, the surviving decree-holders were, at the instance of the judgment-debtor, treated as the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder. They then applied on their own behalf as well as the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder for a final decree for sale of the mortgaged properties, and after issue of notice upon the judgment-debtor a final decree was made. Afterwards on the judgment-debtor's objection to execution on the ground that the widow and not the surviving decree-holders was the legal representative of the deceased decree-holder, the widow made an application to be made a party as the legal representative of her deceased husband, which was granted and was treated as an application for a final decree. The judgment-debtor then raised objections to execution on the ground that the widow's application not having been made within six months from the date of her husband's death, the suit had abated and also that the application was barred by the three years' rule of limitation contained in Article 181 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

Held, (1) that unless and until the judgment-debtor succeeded in having the final decree made on the application of the surviving decree-holders set aside, he could not be permitted to advance the objections, as the final decree, having been made after notice to the judgment-debtor, could not be attacked at a subsequent stage of the execution proceedings; [p. 658, col. 2.]

(2) that even if the widow's application was regarded as one for a final decree, it should be referred back to the judgment-debtor's original application for substitution of the surviving decree-holders as the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder, or be dealt with under Order XXII, rule 9, and should next be considered as in continuation of the application of the surviving decree-holders for a final decree [p. 658, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 25th September 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 19th February 1916.

Babus Haro Kumar Mitter and Rupendra Kumar Mitter, for the Appellants.

Babu Jatindra Nath Lohiri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal it appears that in a suit for sale of certain mortgaged properties a preliminary decree was made on the 31st August 1911. The date for payment was the 12th February 1912.

On the 31st September 1911 the judgment-debtor applied for permission to appeal as a pauper and this application was finally dismissed on the 6th of June 1913.

Meanwhile one of the decree-holders, Gopi Nath Kundu, had died on the 10th April 1913, and at the instance of the judgment-debtor, then appellant, the surviving decree-holders, who are the six brothers of Gopi Nath, were placed on the record as his legal representatives and the proceedings continued against them.

The judgment-debtor's appeal having been dismissed, the surviving decree holders, on their own behalf and as representatives of the deceased Gopi Nath, applied on the 30th June 1914 for a final decree for sale in terms of Order XXXIV, rule 5, sub-rule (2). After issue of notice upon the judgment-debtor a final decree was made on the 19th August 1914.

Next followed the present application for execution on the 8th January 1915, and on the 8th of April an objection by the judgment-debtor to the effect that the widow and not the surviving decree-holders was the legal representatives of the deceased Gopi and that in her absence the proceedings could not continue. That objection was decided in favour of the judgment debtor on the 4th December 1915.

On the 7th December 1915 the widow Sarat Kumari applied to be made a party as the legal representative of her deceased husband and on the same day her application was granted.

For some reason not made apparent to us, possibly as the result of some faulty arrangement of the record, notwithstanding the final decree of 1th August 1914 which has never been vacated, the widow's application was treated as an application for a final decree.

The judgment-debtor thereupon objected that the widow's application not having been made within six months from the date of her husband's death the suit had abated and also that her application was barred by the 3 years' rule of limitation contained in Article 181 of the 1st Schedule to the Limitation Act.

The District Judge by his order of the 25th September 1916 gave effect to both these contentions and it is against that order that the present second appeal is preferred.

On the facts which we have set out above, it appears to us that unless and until he could succeed in having the final decree of 19th August 1914 set aside, the judgment-debtor should not have been permitted to advance these objections. That final decree was made on the application of the surviving decree-holders for themselves and as the persons who at the judgment-debtor's own instance had been accepted by the Court as the legal representatives of the deceased decree holder. It was further made after notice to the judgment-debtor and cannot be attacked in execution proceedings. Even, however, if the widow's application were properly regarded as one for a final decree, it should, in our opinion, have been referred back to the judgment-debtor's original application for substitution or dealt with under Order XXII, rule 9, and should next have been considered as in continuation of the application of the 30th June 1914 and therefore as within time.

We, therefore, decree this appeal with costs, set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that the appellants be at liberty to proceed with the execution of the final decree in their favour. We assess the hearing fee at 5 gold mohurs.

The appeal having been decreed, the connected application is rejected.

Appeal allowed;

Order set aside.

Malabar Law—Melcharth, execution of, by devaswom agent.—Consideration, application of, for purposes of devaswom Melkanomdar, duty of, to enquire as to application of funds—Recital in decrees as to nature of executant's control over devaswom, whether renders melcharth unenforceable.

A Melcharth executed by the agent of a Devaswom is not unenforceable merely because the executant describes the nature of his control over the Devaswom.

The grant of a Melcharth by the trustee of a Devaswom is an ordinary incident of its management, the propriety of which the Melkanomdar is under no obligation to scrutinise and the latter is not bound to enquire into the existence of any particular necessity for funds by the Devaswom or into the application of such funds by the trustee.

Second appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar, at Palghat, in Appeal Suits Nos. 1011 and 1012 of 1914, preferred against those of the Court of the District Munsif, Alatoor, in Original Suits Nos. 426 and 427 of 1912.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In these cases the question is of the validity of the two Melcharths in plaintiff's favour, executed by some of defendants on behalf of the Devaswom, of which they had control.

The lower Appellate Court's main ground of decision against plaintiff is that the Melcharths are unenforceable, because their execution with recitals in them regarding the nature of the executant's control over the Devaswom was a step towards carrying out a scheme for their aggrandisement by setting up the private nature of their trust and was, therefore, a breach of that trust. We have not been shown authority, which would justify such a decision; and we cannot accept it especially as, in our opinion, defendants' further case also, that plaintiff acted in bad faith, is not supported by evidence.

As regards the last mentioned point, the lower Appellate Court found that consideration passed for the Melcharths. But it held that such consideration "was not utilised for the benefit of the Devaswom and that plaintiff, therefore, was not shown to have taken the document bona fide," because the debt alleged as having been discharged with the money was not shown to have been binding on the Devaswom. The lower Appellate Court overlooked the facts that the terms of the kanoms, with which the Melcharths were connected, had elapsed, and that, therefore, the grant of the latter was an ordinary incident of the management, the propriety of which the plaintiff was under no obligation to scrutinise further; and, as was observed in the judgment in Second Appeal No. 965 of 1903, 'person-dealing with the agent of a Devaswom in such matters of everyday management are not bound to enquire into the existence of any particular necessity for funds by the Devaswom or into the application of such funds by the agent.' We, therefore, dissent from the lower Court's conclusion on this point also.

The lower Court's decrees must be set aside. Plaintiff is entitled to preliminary decrees for redemption with reference to the lower Appellate Court's other findings, which have not been disputed, and to the amount which may be ascertained by the lower Appellate Court for future purapad. The appeals are remanded to the lower Appellate Court, in order that it may pass preliminary redemption decrees in the light of the foregoing. Each party will pay his own costs in the lower Courts, except that plaintiff and defendants will respectively pay half the Commissioner's fee in the District Munsif's Court. First to 3rd defendants will pay plaintiff's costs in this Court. The Receiver will have his costs from the estate.

HARINATH SINGHA ROY—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1895), s. 52—Additional rent for excess land, suit for—Burden of proof—Appeal, second—Finding of fact based on conjecture, whether binding—Suits, several, tried together—Conduct of one defendant, whether affects others.

In a suit under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for additional rent, the burden of proving an increase in "area for which rent has been previously paid" is on the landlord. Speaking generally, he may discharge the burden in two ways:—

(1) By proving that the tenant is in possession of excess land outside the boundaries of land originally settled with him, for instance, land obtained by encroachment or alluvial increment.

(2) By proving that at the original settlement of the land rent was fixed at a rate per bigha or other unit of measurement or at differential rates according to the quality of the land and so forth and that in fact and substance the agreement was that the tenant should pay at that rate or at those rates for all the land of which he was put in possession according to its true area, and by further proving that the existing rent is less than the rent payable under such agreement. [p. 662, col. 1.]

The rent might be a consolidated rent, even if it was calculated at so much per measured or estimated bigha. The question would depend on the true intention of the parties, to be gathered in the absence of a written instrument from all the circumstances. Where, however, it is proved that the tenant is holding land outside and beyond the original boundaries, the question as to the rent being a consolidated rent cannot well arise except possibly in connection with land gained by alluvion. [p. 662, col. 1.]

Where several suits instituted by the landlord for additional rent under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against several tenants were tried together without objection by the tenants-defendants, and one of the latter did not produce the chitta which was in his possession:

Held, that as the evidence given, so far as it was general in its character, applied to all the suits and all the defendants or sets of defendants were sailing in the same boat, and none of them dissociated himself from the defendant who did not produce the chitta or at any rate displayed any anxiety to forego any advantage that might accrue from his conduct, they were all alike affected by his conduct in the suit. [p. 662, col. 2; p. 663, col. 1.]

A finding of fact based not on the evidence but on surmise and conjecture is open to question in second appeal. [p. 663, col. 1.]

In a suit under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for additional rent for excess area when the landlord proves the existence of an excess area, a case is made out for the increase of rent which must be met by the tenants. [p. 664, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, dated the 9th September 1915, reversing the decree of the Munsif at Serampur, dated the 29th August 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghosh (with him Babu Narendranath Chowdhury), for the Appellants.—This second appeal arises out of a suit under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for additional rent, on the ground that the tenants are in possession of the land "proved by measurement to be in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid." The suit has been decreed by the lower Appellate Court and the tenants-defendants have preferred this second appeal. Several suits against several tenants were tried together in the lower Court. One of the defendants in one of the suits did not produce the chitta of the year 1227, which is said to have been in his possession. The Subordinate Judge in the lower Appellate Court draws an unfavourable inference against all the tenants-defendants in all the suits from the fact of non-production of that chitta. This chitta was in the possession of only one of the defendants in one of the suits. The other defendants in the other suits were not in a position to produce that chitta. Why should they be affected by the non-production of the chitta? The decision of the Subordinate Judge rests not on the evidence adduced in the case but on surmises and conjectures. He speculated as to the effect which the production of the chitta would have had and decided the case according to his speculation. I submit his findings, in so far as they are based not on evidence but on surmises and conjectures, are not binding even in second appeal. The burden of proof has been wrongly placed upon the tenants. The tenancies in suit are very old and the tenants have been holding the land at the same rent for over 100 years. The learned Subordinate Judge did not take into consideration the age of the tenancies and thus failed to carry out the direction laid down in clause 2 (c) of section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The landlord must show that the land was let out by actual measurement and the rent was fixed on the basis of that measurement, but the tenants have been found by a subsequent measurement to be in possession of more land than was let out to them. There is no finding to this effect in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court.

Referred to Rajkumar Pratap Sahay v. Ram Lal Singh (1), Uma Singh v. Rai Tarini Prosad Bahadur (2).

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Kaisari Singh Roy), for the Respondent.—In a suit for additional rent for excess land the landlord is entitled to a decree when he proves that land which is found in the possession of the tenants is in excess of the land for which they were paying rent before. The principal point to be considered in such a case is whether the area was taken as the basis for the purpose of fixing the rent. The exact area, as found in the landlord's chitta, was the area upon which rent was settled. Now it is found that the tenants are in possession of more lands. Therefore, they are bound to pay additional rent. The lower Appellate Court has found that the Mahal was actually measured and that the tenants were in possession of more lands either by encroachment on contiguous lands or otherwise. The decision of the Subordinate Judge as to the area originally let out and the area which is now in the possession of the tenants cannot be questioned in second appeal. The decision is based on evidence and not on surmises and conjectures. It cannot be said that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in law, when he drew an unfavourable inference against the defendants' cases in several suits from the fact that one of the defendants in one of the suits did not produce his chitta which was in his possession. That particular chitta the other defendants in other suits might not have been able to produce. But the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge was that the other defendants in the other suits had also chittas which they did not produce in the Court in support of their cases. This was a perfectly reasonable conclusion, which cannot be questioned in second appeal.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghose gave reply.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for enhancement of rent, on the ground that the tenants are in possession of land "proved by measurement to be in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid".

Gouri Pattra's case (Gouri Pattra v. H. R. Reily) (3) is the ruling authority upon the main principles governing such a claim. It is true that clauses (5) and (6) have since been added to this section, clause (5) by the Amending Act, 1898, and clause (6) by the Amending Act of 1907. But clause (5) merely corrects a misapprehension which had arisen in regard to a particular passage in the judgment in Gouri Pattra's case (3) [Rajkumar v. Ram Lal (1)], and clause (6) only applies when such a practice has been proved by the landlord or tenant as is mentioned in the clause.

If regard be had to the terms of the section itself the question in every case, the landlord being the claimant, is whether the tenant is in possession of land "in excess of the area for which rent has been previously paid by him" section 52 (1) (a)]. Light is thrown on the meaning of the words by clause (2). That clause lays down that "in determining the area for which rent has been previously paid, the Court shall, if so required by any party to the suit, have regard to" four matters, of which I need only mention three:

"(a) The origin and conditions of the tenancy, for instance whether the rent was a consolidated rent for the entire tenure or holding."

* * * * *

"(c) the length of time during which the tenancy lasted without dispute as to rent or area", and paid" is on the landlord. Speaking generally, he may discharge the burden in two ways:—

(1) By proving that the tenant is in possession of excess land outside the boundaries of the land originally settled with him, for instance land obtained by encroachment or alluvial increment.

(2) By proving that at the original settlement of the land the rent was fixed at a rate per bigha or other unit of measurement or at differential rates according to the quality of the land and so forth, and that in fact and substance the agreement was that the tenant should pay at that rate or at those rates for all the land of which he was put in possession according to its true area, and by further proving that the existing rent is less than the rent payable under such agreement.

It is in connection with this second method of proving a right to increase of rent that questions may arise under clause (2) (a) as to the conditions of the tenancy and whether the rent originally fixed was or was not a consolidated rent for the whole area. The rent might be a consolidated rent, even if it was calculated at so much per measured or estimated bigha. The question would depend on the true intention of the parties to be gathered, in the absence of a written instrument, from all the circumstances. When, however, it is proved that the tenant is holding land outside and beyond the original boundaries, the question as to the rent being a consolidated rent cannot well arise, except possibly in connection with land gained by alluvion.

This second method is that to which the learned Judges in Gouri Patra's case (3) refer, when they speak of the landlord showing "that the previous settlement was made on the basis of a measurement and the rates of rent as applied to the area then determined, while on a fresh measurement made by the same length of measure it has been found that he is entitled to receive additional rent which by carelessness or neglect or some other reason he had hitherto lost."

In Kajendra Lal Goswami v. Chunder Bhusan Goswami (4) Banerjee, J., said that the words "the area for which rent has been previously paid" mean the area with reference to which the rent previously paid had been assessed or adjusted. That was a case where enhancement was claimed by the first method but the language is applicable also to the second method. The cases as I understand are brought together in this sense in the judgment of Coxe, J., in Akbar Ali Mian v. Hira Bibi (5), in which N. Chatterjee, J., concurred.

The case of Lakhi Narain Sarongi v. Sri Ram Chandra Bhunya (6) is probably to be regarded as an example of the first method available to the landlord, but if it be assumed that the tenant then had been holding the same land throughout and that the area of the land was in the first instance wrongly or inaccurately measured or calculated, then the case would be an example of the second method.

As to the effect of clause (6) with which we are not immediately concerned, reference may be made to Utm Singh v. Rai Tarini Prasad Bahadur (2), where Lakhi Narain's case (6) is cited.

I have said so much because it seemed necessary, for the purposes of the case before us, to endeavour to obtain a clear understanding of what the law is. I come now to the present case. In the lower appellate Court the plaintiff has secured an enhancement of rent and before us the tenants, the defendants, are the appellants.

The first objection taken on their behalf to the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge in the lower Appellate Court is this. There were several suits tried together. The Subordinate Judge says that a defendant in one of the suits, Nirod Koley, had in his possession a chitta of the year 1227, which he failed to produce when called upon to do so. The Subordinate Judge refers to this document as the suppressed chitta, and the complaint made is that he has fastened upon the tenant defendants in all the suits a responsibility for the non-production of the chitta which ought to belong to Nirod Koley alone. It remains, however, that the suits were tried together without objection by the defendants. The evidence given, so far as it was general in its character, applied to all the suits. The several defendants or sets of defendants were all sailing in the same boat. No defendant dissociated himself from Nirod Koley. In the circumstances it would be difficult to say that the defendants were not all alike affected by his conduct, at any rate, none of them displayed any anxiety to forego any advantage that might accrue therefrom.

Then it is objected that the Subordinate Judge has decided the case not on the evidence but on surmise and conjecture, and that no doubt raises a question which is open in second appeal.

It is said for instance that the chitta of 1227 is a myth and there is no evidence to establish the existence of such a document. But the Subordinate Judge says that Nirod Koley and his father and uncle were gomustas under previous patnidars, and he refers to evidence that "this chitta, be it the original or the copy, was invariably consulted by the tenants of the Mahal whenever the transfer of a holding took place and the Koley charged a fee for this reference." It is clear that the document so consulted should have been produced.

Then again it is said the Subordinate Judge has speculated as to the effect of the chitta and his conclusions must be rejected. The case stands thus:—

In the year 1305, the Mahal of which the plaintiff is now patnidar came direct under the Burdwan Raj and a hastabud or rent roll was prepared by the officer of the Raj. As to this the Subordinate Judge says:—

"The area and annual rent of such each holding are given in this hastabud and the tenants not only testified to the accuracy of the entries by their respective signatures but by accepting rent receipts for a considerable number of years without any protest."

The Subordinate Judge has, no doubt, used the suppression of the chitta as a ground for inferring that the areas mentioned in the hastabud and the dakhilas were taken from the chitta. He refers to the evidence of Adhar Koley, one of the tenants, who, speaking apparently for all the tenants, said that the quantity of land stated in the dakhilas was correct and that he could not say how the quantity of land was incorporated in the dakhilas. The Subordinate Judge goes on:—

"His statements strike at the root of the defendants' dabshurat theory"—that is, that the areas were entered according to common repute—"and show that these minute specifications of areas and the annual rents in the rent receipts were taken from the chitta of 1227, which the defendants have intentionally suppressed, and were the result of a measurement to which the present defendants or their predecessors-in-interest were parties. If the areas had been put down by report as is urged by the defendants, one would have expected to find them in round numbers and not in scrupulously accurate and exact quantities running to karas and krantis."

In that way he arrives at the conclusion that the rent had originally been assessed on a basis of measurement and finds in effect that, whichever of the above two methods be adopted, the present area of the holdings is in excess of the area for which rent had been previously paid. His own words are:—

"There is no dispute as to the standard of measurement, and the increase in the areas [as ascertained by a Commissioner who made a local enquiry] must be due to the gradual encroachment on the jungle and waste lands of the Mahal or to erroneous or fraudulent measurement on the previous occasion." [The italics are mine.]

There is no doubt a distinction, however difficult it may be to define, between inference and speculation, but I cannot see that the Subordinate Judge in coming to that finding exceeded the boundaries of legitimate inference from the facts and circumstances disclosed on the record. If I am correct in that view, the finding is conclusive in second appeal.

Objection is next taken to a subsequent passage in the judgment, which shows, it is argued, that the Subordinate Judge erroneously placed the burden of proof on the tenants. The passage runs:—

"The existence of the excess area is a proved fact and it is not for the landlord to explain how it came about, and this increase may be due to many events such as encroachment on the adjoining waste or khas land, etc. Unless it is established by very satisfactory and reliable evidence that the rent was a consolidated one for an area within specified boundaries irrespective of its precise quantity, the landlord is entitled to claim additional rent for the excess lands"

What the learned Subordinate Judge means is that the proof by the landlord of the existence of excess area shifted the burden and raised a case which the tenants had to meet. He was merely following the decision of this Court in the case, already cited, of Lakhi Narain Sarongi v. Sri Ram Chandra Bhunya (6). Though he does not expressly refer to the case, his language clearly shows that he had it before him. If therefore, the finding as to excess area be accepted, there is no substance in the objection that the Subordinate Judge misplaced the burden of proof.

Then remains only one point. It is said that these are old tenancies and that the tenants represented that they had been holding the same land at the same rent for about one hundred years. It is suggested that the Subordinate Judge took no account of the age of the tenancies and thereby failed to carry out the direction given to him by clause 2 (c). But the mere fact that he does not refer to the point in his judgment does not show that he did not consider it. He traced the tenancies to the chitta of 1227 and other parts of his judgment show that the provisions of section 52 as a whole were present to his mind.

On the whole I am of opinion that though the case may be near the border line, no sufficient ground is shown for our interference in second appeal and that this and the analogous appeals should be dismissed. As to costs, in the circumstances we propose to make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree that these appeals must be dismissed, but I do so with considerable reluctance. The reasons given by the lower Appellate Court for believing that the holdings were measured in 1227 B. S. are not at all convincing and there are other difficulties which he has dealt with very lightly. We cannot, however, go behind his findings in this case, because it is impossible to say that there is no evidence to warrant them.

Appeals dismissed.

Messrs. H. Balakrishna Row and Ramanath Sujir, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Sitaram Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT—The first question that we have to decide in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits from the date of the death of the testator, under whose Will she is entitled to the property in question. The Will, Exhibit A, bequeaths the item of the property with which we are concerned in the case to the plaintiff, his daughter, who, at the time of the Will, was only two years old. The testator bequeathed the other properties, moveable and immoveable, to the defendants, who were distant cousins of his. The bequest to the plaintiff is absolute and the Will provides that the defendants are to bring about the marriage of the plaintiff with a boy named in the Will and that they are to deliver possession of the property given to her on such marriage. The property became the plaintiff's on the death of the testator; prima facie she is entitled to all the income from that date. There is nothing in the terms of the Will by which her right to the income of the property bequeathed to her is limited as accruing from any other date.

The District Judge was, however, of opinion that she was not entitled to mesne profits. He seemed to think that the defendants were not to render an account of the proceeds because the Will does not specifically provide for it. On the other hand, what he ought to have held, in the absence of any specific provision in the Will showing that the legatee is not entitled to the income from the date from which the bequest came into operation, was that she would be entitled to the income from that date. Section 128 of the Probate and Administration Act is clear on the point. It lays down: 'The legatee of a specific legacy is entitled to the clear produce thereof, if any, from the testator's death.' Evidently this provision of the law was not brought to the notice of the District Judge. We must reverse his finding on issue No. 1.

Then the defendants claimed that the expenses of the plaintiff's marriage incurred by them must be allowed. We think this is a valid contention. In the Will the defendants are asked to marry the plaintiff to a boy named Subroya Kanuraya, but it does not say that they are to find the expenses of that marriage from their own pockets. If that was the intention of the testator he would have said so in so many words, as we find that he charges the defendants with the expenses necessary for certain ceremonies specified in the Will, among which the marriage of the plaintiff is not included. The learned Vakils for the appellant and respondents have agreed to Rs. 200 being fixed for expenses on account of plaintiff's marriage.

There is a finding of the District Judge that the plaintiff is entitled to interest on the arrears of mesne profits from the date of her marriage. But the law on that point seems to be what is laid down in Blogg v. Johnson (1) in these terms: "The Court will not charge an executor, who has been guilty of delay in accounting, with interest on arrears of income unpaid by him." There the cases are discussed and this rule of law is so stated. The same statement of the law is to be found in Simpson on 'The Law of Infants' at page 261. There is no authority that has been referred to which goes the other way. There are no

Indian cases on the point. But the rule laid down in Blogg v. Johnson (1) seems to be reasonable and we do not find any grounds for not adopting it. The decree of the District Judge will be modified and mesne profits will be embodied in it from the date of the testator's death on 6th February 1899 and interest on the mesne profits will be allowed from December 1907. From this amount a sum of Rs. 200 will be deducted on account of the marriage expenses incurred by the defendants.

The decree will provide for proportionate costs.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Muzifferpore, dated the 7th August 1916.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of the first Court, Muzifferpore, dated the 7th August 1916. One of the issues framed was whether the plaintiffs had any cause of action against the defendant No. 7. With the consent of all parties this issue was tried separately, and it was argued and decided upon the assumption that the issue was whether the plaintiff disclosed any cause of action against defendant No. 7 and no evidence was called.

The object of the plaintiffs in bringing the suit is undoubtedly to obtain possession of certain properties the succession to which reopened on the death of Musammam Malikrani Koer in 1908. She succeeded her grandson Babu Krishna Pertap Indra Narain Singh, who was the last male owner. The defendants Nos. 2 to 6 are either descendants or collateral relations of Malikrani's husband but trace their descent through females and are, therefore, not agnates of the last male owner. Defendant No. 7 is also a Bandhu of the last male owner, but belongs to a more remote class than the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 and lays no claim whatever to the property in question. Defendant No. 1 claims to be the adopted son of Babu Kishen Kishore Narain Singh, a descendant in the male line from Bhagirath Jha, the common ancestor of himself and the other defendants, and if he can prove the validity of his adoption, will take in priority both to the plaintiffs and to the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 who lay claim to the property in question. The plaintiffs claim to be the direct descendants in the male line from a brother of Bhagirath Jha, one Bunwari. The relationship between Bunwari and Bhagirath Jha is disputed by the defendants Nos. 1 to 6. Before the plaintiffs can succeed against the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 they must prove that Bunwari and Bhagirath Jha were sons of the same father, and before they can succeed against defendant No. 1 it must further be found that the defendant No. 1 was not the adopted son of Krishna Kishore Narain Singh. The relationship between the parties is made clear by reference to the genealogical trees attached to the pleadings. I have stated the above facts to shew what is the nature of the questions in dispute between the parties in the suit who lay claim to the property in question. So far as these issues are concerned, the defendant No. 7 is not a necessary party as he has at no time claimed and does not now claim any right, title or interest in the disputed property, nor could he in the circumstances by any possibility make out a title. He only asks to be dismissed from the suit and left alone.

But the plaintiffs contend that as in their plaint they ask not only for possession of the property but also for a declaration that they are the nearest gotias to the last male owner of the property, the suit ought to be treated as a declaratory suit under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and they claim that they are entitled to such a declaration against defendant No. 7, because in the year 1916 defendant No. 7, in the course of probate proceedings concerning a Will propounded by the widow of Kishen Kishore Narain Singh (defendant No. 1's adoptive father), claimed amongst others to be the nearest heir to Kishen Kishore and did not admit the plaintiffs' claim to be the nearest gotias related to Kishen Kishore. It should be noted that defendant No. 7 is not interested to deny that the plaintiffs are not heirs to Krishna Pertap Indra Narain Singh and it does not appear that he had in terms done so. The cause of action in the present suit is alleged in paragraph 12 of the plaint to have arisen in 1908, when certain events arose relating to the property now claimed and as the suit is one claiming possession of that property alone with a declaration that the plaintiffs were the nearest gotias of the last male owner, it is clear that the declaration is merely claimed as an adjunct to a title suit relating to that property and is not an essential part of the claim.

KHETRA MOHAN PODDAR V. ASWINI KUMAR SAHA.

Moreover, no claim is made for a declaration that the plaintiffs are the nearest gotias related to Kishen Kishore.

The object of the plaintiffs in seeking to join the defendant No. 7 as a party in these proceedings is admittedly to assist a possible claim by them in any future litigation which may arise on the death of Rani Rajbansi Koer, defendant No. 7's grandmother, when the succession to the estate of her late husband will re-open. This is a matter entirely unconnected with the claim in the present suit. This is not a suit for a declaration such as is contemplated and sanctioned by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The declaration claimed is merely introductory to a claim for possession and is not one for which legislative sanction is required. Moreover, it is not a claim for a declaration as to the plaintiffs' relationship to Krishna Kishore, and in my opinion it would be an abuse of the process of the Courts to allow parties to be harassed in this way by being made parties to litigation in which the only relief claimed is that in which they have no interest and are not directly concerned. I agree with the conclusion arrived at in the Court below and I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs and order that the plaint be rejected as against the defendant No. 7.

The liability of a minor in respect of a debt incurred in carrying on an ancestral family trade, in which he is a sharer, is not greater than that of a minor admitted to a partnership, as laid down by section 247 of the Contract Act. Therefore, a minor, on whose behalf an ancestral trade is carried on, is not personally liable for the debts incurred in such trade. His liability is limited to his share in the trade. [p. 658, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Noakhali, dated the 30th August 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Sudharam, dated the 30th May 1914.

Babu Gobinda Chandra De Roy, for the Appellants.

Babu Bhagirath Chandra Dass, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The main question involved in this appeal is whether a minor, on whose behalf an ancestral trade is carried on, is personally liable for debts incurred in such business.

It appears that one Bhaja Krishna, the father of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who had a Karbar in cloth, used to purchase cloth from the plaintiff's firm. On his death the defendant No. 1, his elder son, for himself and his younger brother, the defendant No. 2, who was and is still a minor, carried on the business and took cloth on credit from the plaintiff's firm. The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for recovery of Rs. 460-10-6, which was found due from the defendants on adjustment of accounts, and also for Rs. 82-5-6 as interest on the said sum.

The Court of first instance allowed the principal claimed together with damages at 1 per cent. in lieu of interest against both the defendants. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the defendant No. 2 was not personally liable, and gave a decree against the defendant No. 1 and the assets of the shop. He disallowed interest as no written notice was served upon the defendants that interest would be charged. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

We are of opinion that the Court below is right in holding that the minor is not personally liable. Section 247 of the Contract Act lays down that "a person who is under the age of majority, according to the law to which he is subject, may be admitted to the benefits of partnership, but cannot be made personally liable for any obligation of the firm, but the share of such minor in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm." That section refers to a case where a minor is admitted by contract into a partnership business. But as pointed out in the case of Joykisto Cowar v. Nittyanund Nundy (1), "on principle there ought not to be any difference between the nature of the liability of an infant admitted by contract into a partnership business and that of one on whose behalf an ancestral trade is carried on by a manager", and that the "limit of the infant's liability which has been adopted by the Legislature in the case of a minor being admitted by contract into a partnership business ought to be adopted in such a case as the present." It was accordingly held in that case that a minor Hindu, on whose behalf a trade is carried on, is not personally liable for the debts incurred in such trade, but his share therein is alone liable. See also Ram Partab Samrathrai v. Foolibai (2).

These cases were decided before it was settled by the Judicial Committee in the case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (3) that a minor cannot make any contract at all. In view of that decision a minor cannot really be a partner. It is unnecessary, however, to consider in this case whether the provisions of section 247 of the Contract Act have in any way been affected by the above decision. We think that the liability of the minor in the case of an ancestral family trade is not greater than that of a minor admitted to a partnership as laid down by section 247 of the Contract Act.

We are accordingly of opinion that although his share in the assets of the shop is liable, the defendant No. 2 is not personally liable for the debt.

The next question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to interest. There was no time fixed for payment, nor was any notice given that interest would be claimed. The plaintiff, therefore, is not entitled to the benefit of the Interest Act (XXXII of 1839).

It is open, however, to the Court to award damages for wrongful detention of money, even though the claim of the plaintiff is limited to interest which is not recoverable either under a contract or under the provisions of the Interest Act. See Mohamay Prosad v. Ram Khelawan Singh (4) and the cases cited therein. The opposite view taken in Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera Lervai Routhen (5) has been dissented from in this Court. See the observations of Banerji, J., in Surjo Narain Mukhopadhyaya v. Partap Narain Mukhopadhyaya (6). See also Saunnada-nappa v. Shrivbasawa (7).

In the present case so long as the accounts were not adjusted, the defendant did not know what amount was to be paid. But after the adjustment of accounts had been made, and the defendant signed the moblog-bandi, the defendant knew the exact amount to be paid, and he did not pay it. Under the circumstances and having regard to the long time during which the plaintiff has been kept out of the money, we think some damages should be awarded for the detention of the money. In the absence of any evidence, we assess the damages at 6 per cent. per annum. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will accordingly be varied and the plaintiff will get damages at 6 per cent. on the principal sum claimed from the date of the last moblog-bandi. In other respects that decree will be affirmed.

Decree affirmed.

Plaintiffs purchased under a registered sale-deed from the defendant 4-pies share in a village and 34-6/10 acres of land, which was described as his khudkasht. The land being the tenancy land of the defendant's predecessor-in-interest could not be transferred without the consent of the landlord, who dispossessed the plaintiff by an order of the Revenue Officer under section 71 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act. The plaintiffs filed the present suit for compensation for breach of the covenant in the sale-deed which described the land as khudkasht. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that, the registration of the sale-deed being contrary to the provisions of section 70 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, the agreement was unlawful under section 23 of the Contract Act, as it had the effect of defeating the provisions of the law, and no damages could be claimed in respect of such an agreement:

Held, (1) that a transfer of occupancy and ordinary tenant rights being voidable and not absolutely void, it could not be held to be unlawful within the meaning of section 23 of the Contract Act; [p. 670, col. 2.]

(2) that even if the registration of the instrument was contrary to law, this did not affect the question of damages to which the plaintiffs were entitled for breach of the covenant in the sale-deed. [p. 670, col. 2.]

Under the provisions of section 53 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, the vendor is deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest, which he professes to transfer, subsists and that he has power to transfer the same. [p. 671, col. 1.]

Where a vendor sells land as belonging to him and it turns out that his title was defective, he is liable to damages for breach of agreement, whether the vendee knows of the defect in the title or not. The vendee is entitled to rely upon the covenant contained in the deed and is not bound to exercise due diligence in discovering the facts. Mere knowledge or suspicion regarding the defect in title does not prevent an express or implied covenant from operating. It is only when there is a contract to the contrary that the implied covenant does not apply. [p. 671, col. 1.]

A right to specific performance is in the discretion of the Court and can only be claimed subject to the condition laid down in section 15 of the Specific Relief Act. But after the parties have performed the contract by executing a sale-deed and delivering possession, the rights of the parties are no longer governed by the Specific Relief Act but by the Transfer of Property Act. Appeal against the decree passed in Civil Appeal No. 52 of 1916, decided on the 13th September 1916 by the Divisional Judge, Nerbudda Division, Hoshangabad.

Messrs. M. B. Kinkhede and W. R. Furanik, for the Appellant.

Messrs. D. T. Mangalmoorty and V. R. Dhoke, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Tima was the recorded proprietor of eight-pies share in Mouza Dhodki. His brothers Govinda and Sadu were shown in the village papers as ordinary tenants of fields Nos. 98/1, 120/3, 121/3 and 122, area 16-13 acres. It would appear that the brothers formed a joint Hindu family. On the 6th April 1909 they mortgaged with the defendant Shaligram their eight-pies share in the village together with 34-63 acres of land described as Khudkasht, including the area just mentioned. On the 9th June 1911 they sold to the defendant Shaligram four-pies share including 34-66 acres of land described as Khudkasht for Rs. 5,400, and on the same day they sold the remaining four-pies share without any Khudkasht for Rs. 1,000 to one Chindhia. Shaligram sold to the plaintiffs on the 12th June 1912 all his interest in the village, describing the whole of the 34-66 acres of land as Khudkasht. Partition proceedings in the village were started on the 4th October 1900 and were confirmed by the Deputy Commissioner on the 10th of July 1911, and the partition came into force on the 1st June 1912. At this partition 16-13 acres of land, originally shown as the tenancy land of Govinda and Sadu, were allotted to Sheolal and Lakhmichand in proprietary right, the land being still shown as held in tenant right by Govinda and Sadu. An application was made on the 20th March 1913 to the Deputy Commissioner, under section 71 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, by Sheolal and Lakhmichand on the allegation that their tenants, Govinda and Sadu, had transferred their holding to the defendant Shaligram, who in his turn sold it to the plaintiffs. Shaligram was a party to these proceedings. Eventually an order was passed by the Deputy Commissioner putting the landlord in possession.* The plaintiffs had actually been put in possession upon the completion of the sale and remained in possession till the 25th October 1913. The plaintiffs admit having received two crops. The present suit has been filed for compensation for breach of the covenant in the sale-deed which described the land as Khudkasht. The plaintiffs have been awarded damages, and this second appeal has been filed by the defendant.

It may be conceded, as urged before me, that the brothers Tims, Sadu and Govinda being joint, the land was their Khudkasht land and there was no question of tenancy in favour of any of them. The land upon the sale to the defendant became his Khudkasht, but unfortunately the land was allotted to the patti of Sheelal and Lakhmichand. It continued to remain in possession of the defendant, though Govinda and Sadu were shown as the ordinary tenants thereof. The partition came into effect on the 1st of June 1912, and on the 12th June when the defendant sold the village share to the plaintiffs, the defendant could not claim the land as his Khudkasht. Even conceding that it was the defendant's tenancy land, which seem doubtful though the defendant was actually in possession of it, he had no transferable interest in the land. The utmost the defendant could have claimed is that he was the ordinary tenant thereof. This was undoubtedly a misrepresentation, for which the plaintiffs are entitled to damages.

It is urged that the registration of the sale-deed was contrary to the provisions of section 70 of the Tenancy Act, that the agreement had the effect of defeating the provisions of the law, and that, therefore, under section 23 of the Contract Act the agreement was unlawful and no damages can be claimed in respect of such an agreement. Now section 70 of the Tenancy Act prohibits the registration of an instrument which purports to transfer the rights of an ordinary tenant. This document purported to convey Khudkasht rights, and not the rights of an ordinary tenant. It was never alleged that the parties had fraudulently described the land as Khudkasht for the purpose of evading the rule prohibiting the registration of documents relating to tenancy land; in fact it would seem that even the defendant was ignorant of the legal effect of the partition proceedings. Even if the registration of the instrument is contrary to law, this does not affect the question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to damages in respect of a contract, for in this case we are not concerned with the validity of the transfer in favour of the plaintiffs.

The view which has been taken in this Court regarding the prohibition of transfers of occupancy and ordinary tenant rights is that such transfers are voidable in the manner and to the extent provided for by the Act. It has never been held that such transfers are unlawful within the meaning of section 23 of the Contract Act. The transfers are not absolutely void. The argument based on section 23 of the Indian Contract Act has no force. The case relied upon [Ismailji Yusufali v. Raghunath Lichiran Marwadi (1)] has, therefore, no application, as it dealt with a contract of sub-lease without the written permission of the Collector, in contravention of the terms of the license for the manufacture of salt, which was made punishable under the Bombay Salt Act. This was clearly a case of an unlawful contract.

It is contended that the misrepresentation in this case was upon a question of law and not on a question of fact. In Seth Gokul Dass Gupul Dass v. Murlu (2) cited for the appellants, their Lordships of the Privy Council held, in view of the conflicting rulings in the Indian High Courts, that there was a mistake of law in supposing that interest could be claimed after a decree, where the decree is silent on the point. Here the defendant, who was a party to the partition proceedings, knew that the land had been allotted to the patti of another co-sharer, that he was not even shown as his tenant and that he was merely in possession of the land. If the document had stated that the land had fallen to the patti of another co-sharer and the defendant had made a mistake as regards his tenancy rights over the land, the case might have been different. This is a concealment of a fact. Jessel, M. R., in Engelsfeld v. Marquis of Londonderry (3) say:—"A misrepresentation of law is this: when you state the facts, and state a conclusion of law, so as to distinguish between facts and law. The man who knows the facts is taken to know the law; but when you state that as a fact which no doubt involves, as most facts do, a conclusion of law, that is still a statement of fact and not a statement of law."

The plaintiffs rest their case on the provisions of section 53 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act. Under this section, the vendor is deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest, which he professes to transfer, subsists and that he has power to transfer the same. The vendor in this case had no transferable rights, even if he were the ordinary tenant of the land, his title as co-owner having ceased to exist from the 1st June 1912. Sada Kavayur v. Tadepally Basaviahn (4) was a case where there was a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no such contract to the contrary in the sale-deed.

It is contended that there should have been an issue as to whether the plaintiffs were aware of the defects in the title. I agree with the learned District Judge that this could have been proved under the issue regarding misrepresentation, and no evidence on the point has been given. Moreover, where the vendor sells land as belonging to him, he is liable to damages for breach of agreement, whether the vendee knows of the defect in the title or not. In other words, the vendee is entitled to rely upon the covenant contained in the deed, and is not bound to exercise due diligence in discovering the facts. Mere knowledge or suspicion regarding the defect in title does not prevent an express or implied covenant from operating. It is only when there is a contract to the contrary that the implied covenant does not apply. Adikesavan Naidu v. Gurunatha Chetti (5) supports this view.

Lastly it is argued that if the parties had not completed the contract of sale, and a suit had been brought for specific performance, as the plaintiffs would have had to relinquish all right to compensation for the defect, so having accepted performance of so much as could be performed under the sale-deed, the plaintiffs are not entitled to sue for compensation. Section 15 of the Specific Relief Act has no application to the question before me. A right to specific performance is in the discretion of the Court, and can only be claimed subject to the condition laid down in section 15. But after the parties perform the contract by executing a sale-deed and delivering possession, the rights of the parties are no longer governed by the Specific Relief Act but by the Transfer of Property Act, which clearly entitles the plaintiffs to damages.

The amount decreed as damages has not been questioned before me in argument. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Defendant exonerated wrongly described as party in decree, whether party to suit. Separate suit, right of.

A defendant, whose name appears in the decree without having been struck off previously from the record, is a party with respect to whom the prohibition of a separate suit enacted in section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code applies, notwithstanding that he has been exonerated by the decree passed in the suit without adjudication on the controversial questions between him and the plaintiff. Mr. P. Somasuntram for Mr. V. Subramaniam Pantulu, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Venkataramana Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—An important question of law as to interpretation of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure (with the new explanation added by the Code of 1908) is involved in this appeal. The contention of Mr. Venkataramana Rao for the respondents is that the case, Krishanappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudali (1), relied on by the appellant is opposed to the Full Bench decision in Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (2) and to the plain language of the explanation to section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and ought not to be followed. We agree with Mr. Venkataramana Rao's contention, and we do not think that the anomaly pointed out at page 123 (1st column) of the 21 Madras Law Times Report is a sufficient reason for overriding the plain legislative provision, which was apparently introduced in the new Code for the express purpose of enacting as law the views expressed in the decisions of the Bombay and Madras High Courts on the old section 244 (corresponding to the present section 47) and embodied in the Full Bench decision in Ramaswami Sastrulu v. Kameswaramma (2), and of overruling by statutory enactment the decisions contra of the other High Courts on the question, whether a defendant whose name appears in the decree without having been struck off previously from the record is a party with respect to whom the prohibition of a separate suit enacted in section 47 (old section 244) applies, notwithstanding that he had been exonerated by the decree passed in the suit without an adjudication on the controversial questions between him and the plaintiff.

The second appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—It has been held in Kamakshi v. Nagarathnam (1) that in the dancing girl caste daughters succeed in preference to sons, and Strange in his Manual of Hindu Law says that the property of a dancing girl will pass to her female issue first and then to her male issue as in the case of other females. Although the property is not Stridhanam, its devolution is by custom similar to the devolution of Stridhanam. Consequently a daughter's daughter must be preferred to a son, just as in ordinary Hindu Law a son's son is preferred to a daughter, as in the latter sons have the preference over daughters. The District Judge is, therefore, right and this second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 346, 350, 537—Transfer of case from file of Magistrate not competent to try it—Trial, de novo—Accused, whether can waive right—Evidence recorded by Magistrate not competent to try case, whether can be considered—Procedure—Illegality.

Where a case is transferred from the file of a Magistrate who is not competent to try it under section 346 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there must be a trial de novo of the whole case, and the whole of the prosecution evidence must be recorded afresh. In such a case the accused have no power to waive their right to a trial de novo. The evidence recorded by the Magistrate from whose file a case is transferred under this section, having been recorded by a Magistrate who was not qualified to record it, cannot be taken into consideration by the Magistrate who actually tries the case. [p. 674, col. 1; p. 675, col. 1.]

The failure to hold the trial de novo in such a case is an illegality which vitiates the trial and not merely an irregularity covered by section 537, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 675, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Saran.

Messrs. S. Sinha and Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts and circumstances out of which the present revision arises are as follows:—

One Bishun Rai lodged an information before the Police to the effect that the petitioner Ambica and his party came to oust him from a bathan and that in the attempt they inflicted injuries on various people and amongst them on Bishun Rai with a deadly weapon, a spear, committing thereby an offence under section 326 of the Indian Penal Code. The petitioners Ambica Singh and Bikan Singh have been convicted under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and the third petitioner has been convicted under section 326 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. Their convictions have been upheld by the Sessions Judge of Chapra.

Mr. Sinha appearing on behalf of the petitioners assails the conviction and sentence passed on these persons principally upon two grounds.

Mr. Sinha's contention is that on the finding of the learned Sessions Judge I should hold that there was a right of private defence in the accused and that, therefore, the conviction should fail. He has drawn my attention to certain portions of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and it appears that on the findings there can be little doubt that the case for the prosecution was materially false. The learned Judge has held that the story that the accused persons proceeded to the bathan of Bishun Rai to oust him is totally false. He holds that the interference was on the part of Bishun Rai's men with the accused Ambica and his party, who were peacefully engaged in ploughing or some other agricultural operation on their own land. There is, however, a further finding which very largely affects the contention raised by the learned Counsel. The finding is that when Bishun Rai came and interfered with Ambica and his party, the right of private defence was exceeded by Ambica and his men. The finding on this question is:—"In fact I find the prosecution story of the actual assault to be true and I am unable to hold that Bishun Rai gave any such provocation or made any such resistance as would justify the use of the force actually employed."

In this connection Mr. Sinha has drawn my attention to the fact that one of the prosecution witnesses had admitted that the spear wound attributed to Ramdewan had in fact been caused by another man called Kari Singh. This the learned Judge refused to accept and has held that the wound in question was inflicted by Ramdewan himself. On the findings of the learned Judge, therefore, it is quite evident that although Ambica and his party had the right of private defence as against interference on the part of Bishun Rai, yet that right was exceeded. It is impossible for me, therefore, in the face of this finding to accept the contention of Mr. Sinha that the conviction of these men, because of the original right of private defence having been exercised, is unsustainable.

The second branch of the argument of Mr. Sinha, however, stands on a very different footing. Mr. Sinha raises the question of the illegality of the trial before the Magistrate who tried this case and convicted the accused. In order to explain the position taken by Mr. Sinha it will be necessary to refer to one or two incidents that took place before the trial concluded.

It appears that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Chapra who took cognisance of this case made it over for disposal to Mr. A. Amir. This officer proceeded with the recording of the evidence on behalf of the prosecution, and thereafter felt that possibly the medical evidence that was to be produced before him might show that it was a case that would fall under sections 148 and 326 of the Indian Penal Code. He, therefore, drew the attention of the Sub-Divisional Officer to what he expected. Thereupon the Sub-Divisional Officer desired him to take the medical evidence. The officer in question, however, proceeded to take the evidence of a large number of prosecution witnesses and ultimately that of the medical witness. The medical evidence revealed the fact that there was an offence committed under section 326 of the Indian Penal Code. The case was then again referred to the Sub-Divisional Officer, who transferred it to his own file and then made it over to Mr. J. C. Bose for trial. This is the officer who tried the case.

Before, however, sending the case to Mr. J. C. Bose for trial, the Sub-Divisional Officer appears to have satisfied himself as regards the disposition of the accused with reference to a de novo trial. I find in his order sheet of the 25th January the following words:—"The accused will not apply for a de novo trial." On the same day from an order passed by Mr. J. C. Bose it appears that he received the seizure of the case from the Sub-Divisional Officer. In this order sheet also it is recorded that the accused did not desire to have a de novo trial. The trial before Mr. J. C. Bose proceeded from the stage at which it had been stopped by Mr. Amir. Mr. Sinha's contention is that the accused are not permitted to waive any right which under the law is given to them. Reliance is placed by Mr. Sinha on Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghose (1), Upendra Nath Mandal v. Rampal (2), Muhammad v. Emperor (3), King-Emperor v. Sakham Pandurang (4). Mr. Sinha contends that the case is not covered by section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code and that the removal of the case from the file of Mr. Amir to that of Mr. Bose was made under section 346 of that Code. The learned Government Advocate, who appears in support of the conviction, concedes the proposition that section 350 of the Code is inapplicable to the present case. It is pointed out by Mr. Sinha that section 346 contemplates a case where a Magistrate proceeding with an enquiry or trial before him finds on the evidence that the case is one as to warrant a presumption that it should be tried by some other Magistrate in the district. He contends, therefore, that the language of section 346 clearly establishes the proposition that the Magistrate who originally proceeded with the trial was one that was not qualified to go on with it. With reference to section 350 on the other hand Mr. Sinha points out that the Magistrate who ceased to have jurisdiction was qualified to try the case and was succeeded by another Magistrate who could exercise the same powers as his predecessor. On a careful examination of the language of these two sections I am of opinion that there is considerable force in the contention raised by Mr. Sinha. It is quite evident that in this case Mr. Amir, when he had the medical evidence placed before him, found that he being a Second Class Magistrate was not qualified to proceed with the trial. Therefore, the position occupied by Mr. Amir in this case would be a position distinct from the position of a Magistrate who ceased to have jurisdiction under section 350 and was succeeded by another Magistrate of equal qualification. Keeping this distinction in view Mr. Sinha contends that in a case falling under section 350 of the Code the law provides that the accused should have the option of demanding a de novo trial or of proceeding with it from the stage at which it was left by the Magistrate who ceased to exercise jurisdiction. In this connection it is urged that the facility that has been afforded to the accused in such cases to choose a de novo trial or not is based upon the consideration that the Magistrate who ceased to have jurisdiction was competent equally with the succeeding Magistrate to try them. Section 346 of the Code, according to Mr. Sinha, stands altogether on a different plane. He urges that the Magistrate who was succeeded by a competent Magistrate was one who had not the qualification and, therefore, was not competent to proceed with the case. In this connection Mr. Sinha has also drawn my attention to the section of the Code which provides for the recording of evidence. The section says that the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing in the language of the Court by the Magistrate or in his presence and hearing and under his personal direction and superintendence and shall be signed by the Magistrate. The learned Government Advocate contends that even if the view taken by Mr. Sinha be correct, the defect pointed out by him is only an irregularity and not an illegality. He, therefore, suggests that the irregularity is one that is covered by section 537 of the Code. He also points out that the evidence recorded by Mr. Amir and used by the Magistrate who tried the case would at the very worst mean an irregularity covered by clause (a) of section 537 and is curable by that section. I am unable to accept the contention of the learned Government Advocate and I do not regard the defect under consideration as a mere irregularity. I look upon it as an illegality. It is the very mode of trial that in this case has been affected. The evidence recorded by Mr. Amir in the case was not evidence recorded by a Magistrate who was qualified to try it. On the authority of Subrahmanya Ayyar v. King-Emperor (5), it is an illegality that cannot be cured by section 537. My attention has been drawn to the case reported as Ram Subhag Singh v. Emperor (6). I have carefully gone (5) 25 M. 61; 11 M. L. J. 233; 3 Bom. L. R. 540; 28 I. A. 257; 5 C. W. N. 366; 2 Weir 271; 8 Sar. P. C. J. 160 (P. C.).

through the judgments delivered in that case. They do not seem to affect the point raised by Mr. Sinha.

In the circumstances I hold that the trial of the petitioners was not in accordance with law. I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentences passed on Ambica, Bikan and Ramdewan and send back the case to the District Magistrate of Chapra with the direction that the accused should be re-tried in accordance with law.

Retrial ordered.

Judge, Nagpur, under section 43 (2) (b) of the Provincial Insolvency Act in respect of his having concealed in the insolvency proceedings certain property alleged to be his. His appeal to the Divisional Judge was dismissed on the 20th February 1918. On revision to this Court the main position taken up has been that the proceedings, as held by the Subordinate Judge, were not carried on the analogy of proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Code, that the burden of proof was wrongly placed on the applicant and that the applicant was prejudiced by the evidence on behalf of the opposing creditors having been recorded after the applicant's evidence had been taken. I am not, however, with all deference prepared to accept the proposition, laid down by Jenkins, C. J., in Harihar Singh v. Moheswar Proshad (1), to the effect that in a proceeding under section 43 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act there must be a definite charge, finding and a conviction as a foundation for a sentence under the said provisions. It seems to me that so long as the principles underlying a criminal trial are observed in essentials, this is all that the law requires.

In the present case the applicant was adjudicated an insolvent on the 20th April 1917. The learned District Judge, who was then dealing with the case, thereupon framed what was termed "issue and charge". This fell into two parts and the following was the text of the second part:—

"If the insolvent has property as alleged which is not entered in his petition, what punishment should be awarded to him under section 43 (2) (b) of the Act?"

A note follows to the effect that these issues are read and explained to the insolvent and "it is made clear to him that they will be treated as charges. He pleads not guilty." It is thus clear that to all intents and purposes a formal charge like that for a criminal offence was made against applicant, and further this charge and its possible consequences were explained to him.

The Subordinate Judge, however, who subsequently dealt with the case in August

1917, made the mistake of recording the evidence for the present applicant before he recorded the evidence for the creditors. Were there any reasons to suppose that the applicant had been prejudiced by this procedure, I should undoubtedly have felt compelled to remand the case for a fresh enquiry on the charge against the applicant, but after carefully examining the evidence on the record I agree with the learned Divisional Judge in thinking that even if the oral evidence produced by the creditors be entirely disregarded, there has been ample proof that the applicant has fraudulently concealed the property. Any evidence the applicant desired to offer was duly taken and so far as the findings of facts go, there is not the slightest ground for disturbing the decision come to by the two lower Courts. A further point has, however, been raised, viz., that the circumstances of this case did not bring it within the purview of section 43 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act at all, and in this connection I have been referred to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ohhatrapat Singh v. Kharag Singh (2) as well as to the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in Udai Chand v. Ram Kumar Khara (3). As pointed out, however, by the learned Divisional Judge the Privy Council case just cited has obviously no application in the present instance. That case had no reference to proceedings under section 43 of the Act and as regards the Calcutta Weekly Notes case just quoted it does not favour the applicant as order of adjudication had already been made. What that case laid down was that the conduct of the petitioner in relation to his creditor can be taken into account only at a later stage of the proceedings, when the question of his discharge arises for consideration. What we are dealing with under section 43 is an offence which is committed against the Court, inasmuch as the petitioner has fraudulently concealed property which was in his possession or power and which it

For a conviction under section 447 of the Penal Code the finding on the point as to who was in possession of the land in dispute is necessary. [p. 678 col. 1.]

Where a person enters upon land, not with the object of intimidating, annoying or insulting the complainant, but in the bona fide assertion of his own right to remain on the land till he is ejected therefrom in accordance with law, he is not guilty of an offence under section 447 of the Penal Code. [p. 678, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Sessions Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. M. Yunus, for the Petitioners.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The three petitioners Jagan Dubey, Damri Dubey and Bigan Kahar were convicted under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sassaram. On appeal their conviction was upheld by the learned Sessions Judge of Shahabad. The present petition is on behalf of the three men. Mr. Yunus appearing on their behalf contends that the conviction under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be sustained on the findings of the learned Judge.

It appears that some canal side cutting lands kept by Government are from year to year settled with people and that amongst them the land with which this case is concerned was one. This land has been, it is admitted, settled with the father of the principal accused Jagan Dubey from year to year. The circumstances of the annual settlement leave little doubt that the accused believed that the renewal after the expiration of every annual lease would be a matter of course. What happened last year was that the lease expired on the 31st of March 1917. On the 5th May an application was put in by the private prosecutor Bidyapat before the Settlement Officer for the lease of the land in question. On the 7th May the settlement was made with this man and he was duly given the lease. On the 7th August 1917 Bidyapat entered upon this land. Nothing happened on that day, but on the day following the accused Jagan and the other two petitioners came to the land and ordered Bidyapat to leave the field. He refused and thereupon Jagan called upon his men to beat him. The latter ran away, on which the land was ploughed up by the accused and his party. Mr. Yunus contends that before a conviction under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code can stand, the finding on the point as to who was in possession of the land in dispute was necessary. He contends that although the last lease expired on the 31st March 1917, yet his client continued to remain in possession of this land and that he was in possession of this land when on the 8th August he came and ordered Bidyapat to leave the place. Mr. Yunus relies for this contention on a finding of fact in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. That finding runs as follows:—

“Indeed there is little doubt that he had actually sown ‘Rohini Bawag’ earlier in the year between the expiry of his lease on 31st March and the first entrance of Bidyapat on the land. It would seem that at that time he was unaware that his lease would not be renewed.”

On this finding he invites me to hold that the land continued to be in possession of his client.

The learned Government Pleader appearing in support of the conviction on the other hand contends that even if the land continued to be in possession of the petitioner Jagan, in any event on the 7th August 1917, the day previous to the occurrence, Bidyapat had entered upon this land and that, therefore, on the 8th of August, when Jagan came to interfere, the land was in possession of Bidyapat and, therefore, Jagan came and entered upon land in possession of the complainant Bidyapat. I am, therefore, asked to hold that on the 8th August, when the petitioner came to this land, he came as a trespasser. I find from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that on the 7th August when Bidyapat entered upon this land there was no obstruction, but there is evidence to show that before that threats had been used by Jagan against Bidyapat.

In answer to this Mr. Yunus contends that the fact that after the expiration of the lease the land had been actually cultivated by his client and further the fact that his client had threatened Bidyapat against entering upon this land, show clearly that his client was not only in possession of the land but was also asserting it against Bidyapat and anybody else who might obtain or try to obtain a lease of it from the canal authorities. He also contends that if nothing happened on the 7th August, that might be due to the fact that the complainant came to the land without the knowledge of the accused. On the finding of the lower Appellate Court I cannot but come to the conclusion that the petitioner Jagan continued to be in possession of this land after the expiry of his lease. In the circumstances I am coerced to hold that on the 8th August, when he came and drove Bidyapat out of the land, he did so in the bona fide belief that he being in possession of the land was entitled to remain on it till duly ejected. On the facts of this case, therefore, there is substance in the contention that the entry of Jagan on the land in question was not with the object of intimidating, annoying or insulting Bidyapat, but was in the bona fide assertion of his own right to remain on the land till he was ejected therefrom in accordance with law.

For these reasons I hold that the conviction under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code of the petitioners is unsustainable. The conviction and sentences as against these petitioners are set aside.

Conviction set aside.

Mr. S. P. Kain, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This application has already been before me, and on the last occasion on which the learned Counsel was heard on behalf of the applicant, I adjourned the case for the purpose of inquiring into certain circumstances which were brought to my notice in the course of argument. It was complained on behalf of the applicant that witnesses for the prosecution were allowed to be called after the defence evidence had closed. The fact is apparent from the order of the Magistrate who tried the case. I thought it desirable, however, to instruct the Government Pleader to ascertain, if he could, the reasons which led to this somewhat unusual procedure on the part of the Magistrate. The Magistrate has sent up an explanation disclosing the circumstances in which he thought it necessary to allow this further evidence to be called, and he points out that the accused had been given a full opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses who were produced at this late stage. He refers in his explanation to a ruling of the Calcutta High Court which is reported as Queen v. Belilios (1). I have also been referred to a somewhat similar case which is referred to as Ananda Chunder Singh v. Basu Mudh (2). There it was held that a Magistrate was strictly within his right under section 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in receiving fresh evidence, after evidence on both sides had been taken and the case had been adjourned for judgment. As their Lordships pointed out in that case, section 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives very wide powers. In any case it seems to me that under the provisions of section 537 it is not proper for me to interfere with the order on this ground, as I am unable to hold that the accused was in any way prejudiced.

As regards the rest of the case, there appears to be plenty of evidence upon the record upon which it was open to the Courts below to find that the applicant was liable to be bound over to give security. The application is dismissed.

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Saran.

Mr. Ram Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. K. Sen and Sivanandan Rai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are shortly these. The petitioner was defendant in an account suit before the Subordinate Judge of Saran and the opposite party was the plaintiff. The suit was valued at Rs. 19,000. It appears that there was a compromise recorded and the defendant was under the compromise to pay Rs. 4,000 to the plaintiff. Some payments were made, and it appears that at one stage of the case an application was made by the plaintiff to execute the compromise decree to the extent of about Rs. 3,000. A question was raised before the Subordinate Judge as to whether or not by the various payments made by the defendant the decree obtained had been satisfied. This question culminated in an application by the defendant to the Subordinate Judge, praying for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff under various sections of the Indian Penal Code, and amongst them section 210 of that Code. The learned Subordinate Judge duly granted the sanction under the latter section.

There was an appeal preferred by the plaintiff to the learned District Judge praying for revocation of that sanction. The learned District Judge entertained the application and revoked the sanction granted by the learned Subordinate Judge. The petitioner, being dissatisfied with the order of revocation passed by the learned District Judge, has approached this Court and prays for the setting aside of that order. His application was admitted on the ground that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain an application with reference to a decree made in a suit valued at above Rs. 5,000.

The contention of the petitioner is that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to revoke the sanction. Babu Ram Prasad, who appears on behalf of the petitioner, contends that on a proper interpretation of section 21 of Act XII of 1887 it would be clear that the District Judge is not the authority to whom appeal from the Subordinate Judge ordinarily lies, and he contends that if that proposition be sound, under sub-clause (a) of sub-section 7 of section 195 of the Code the District Judge would have no jurisdiction. I have carefully examined the language of section 21 of that Act. It is evident that the Legislature intended to classify the cases under which appeals would lie to the District Judge and to the High Court respectively. The Legislature also makes it quite clear that the position of any proceeding arising out of an original suit should be on the same plane with the suit itself in matters of appeals therefrom. A reading of section 21 of that Act, therefore, gives the result that all original suits not exceeding in value Rs. 5,000 or any proceeding arising out of such suit would be subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the District Judge and that any other case, whether an original suit or any proceeding arising therefrom, would be subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. Reading, as I do, this section, I feel no hesitation in holding that the learned Subordinate Judge's Court is one from which some appeals lie to the High Court and some to the District Judge. In view of the provision contained in section 195, clause (a), sub-clause (a), it is evident that the Court of inferior appellate jurisdiction would be the Court to which application for revocation of sanction must be made. I, therefore, hold that the District Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the application on which he passed his order revoking the sanction granted by the Subordinate Judge.

Babu Ram Prasad contends that inasmuch as the proceeding, in the course of which the alleged offence was committed and with reference to which sanction was given, was one in execution of a decree in an original suit of the value of more than Rs. 19,000, the jurisdiction of the District Judge was barred. This is a contention with which I am unable to be in sympathy. The point is concluded by the decision given in Maduray Pillay v. Elderton (1) and Ganga Dei v. Sher Singh (2). These authorities have laid down that the valuation of the original suit, or for the matter of that of the proceeding arising therefrom, is immaterial to the question as to the Court to which an application under section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for revocation or for order granting sanction should be made. As I have held before, the question of valuation of the suit is of no importance for the disposal of the present application. The point is concluded by the language of sub-clause (a), sub-section (7) of section 195 of the Code.

In the circumstances the application is rejected.

Application for transfer of the case from the Court of the Third Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, to some other Magistrate.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Camell, for the Crown.—Mr. K. B. Das Gupta, the Third Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, the trying Magistrate in this case from whose Court the case is sought to be transferred on the ground that it is necessary for the accused to cite him as a witness in this case, has got nothing to do with the enquiry into the case. The case relied on in support of the petitioners' case, viz., the case of Emperor v. Abdul Latif (1), is distinguishable from the facts and circumstances of this case. The present Rule was obtained by the petitioner on certain misstatement of facts. Karuna, as appears from the explanation given by the Magistrate, never worked under Mr. Das Gupta, and Mr. Das Gupta had never any opportunity or chance of knowing the conduct and character of Karuna. The case can, on no account, be transferred unless the petitioner can satisfy the Court that the trying Magistrate, whom he desires to call as a witness, will be a necessary and essential witness for the defence—that but for his evidence the accused will be seriously prejudiced. In this case nothing has been established from which it can be said that the Magistrate, in whose Court the case against the accused is pending, is or will be competent to give any evidence on any matter relevant to the facts of this case. As Karuna never came into direct contact with Mr. Das Gupta, so Mr. Das Gupta would not be in a position to express any opinion as to Karuna's credibility as a witness, so that there is no ground or reason for the transfer of the case from the file of Mr. Das Gupta, who has frankly admitted in his explanation that he has no desire to try the case but that on the contrary it would be a great relief to him if it were transferred from his file. There are authorities to show that when an accused person wants to get a case transferred from the Court of a particular Magistrate on the ground that he wants to cite the Magistrate as a witness for the defence, the ground of application for the transfer and the necessity for transfer should be scrutinized carefully and cautiously, otherwise it would be very easy for every accused person to get transfers on frivolous grounds. There is nothing on the record to justify the transfer of the case. The sole question is whether the Magistrate can give material evidence in this case, and it has been found, after due consideration of all the facts on the record, that he is not in a position to give any such evidence. The Magistrate has exercised his judicial discretion in the case, and nothing has been shown which can justify your Lordships' interference.

Sir B. C. Mitter (with him Babus Mon-motha Nath Mukherjee and Bhubhuti Bhusan Saha), for the Petitioners.—It appears from the record that the Magistrate in whose Court the case is pending is competent to give his opinion about the credibility and conduct of Karuna and Girija, the witnesses for the prosecution. The Magistrate is, therefore, a person who can be cited as a witness for the defence to give his evidence upon a relevant fact of the case. How can the petitioners' application under section 257 of the Criminal Procedure Code be rejected, when it appears from the evidence of one of the witnesses for the prosecution that Mr. Das Gupta, the Magistrate, is capable of giving evidence on a relevant fact, viz., as regards the conduct and credibility of Karuna? This case is stronger than the case of Emperor v. Abdul Latif (1). In that case the Magistrate swore an affidavit that he was not competent to give any evidence on any relevant or material fact, yet the application for transfer was allowed. Here it has been elicited from the witness for the prosecution that the Magistrate can say which of the officers, including Karuna, is worthy of credit. The evidence on the record entitles the petitioner to call the Magistrate as a witness. The application for the transfer cannot be rejected merely on the basis of an extra-judicial explanation of the Magistrate that he is not in a position to say anything about any relevant fact in the case. The application under section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be rejected unless it is shown to be vexatious or for the purpose of causing delay or for defeating the ends of justice. There is no doubt that this particular Magistrate Mr. Das Gupta is capable of testifying to the general character, conduct and reputation of Karuna, and under section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, the accused person can enforce the appearance of the Magistrate as a witness, and, therefore, the case should be transferred from the Court of the trying Magistrate to the Court of some other Magistrate. The accused, whose position is always one of delicacy and suspense, should not be deprived of his right to call a witness for the defence who is competent to depose on a relevant fact.

[SMITHER, J.—You cannot claim transfer as a matter of course. There must be some substantial reason for the transfer.]

Quite so. If I can show that the particular Magistrate can testify to the credibility of a principal witness for the prosecution, I am entitled to cite that Magistrate as a witness and so necessarily the case is to be transferred from the Court of the Magistrate, whom I want to call as a witness, to the Court of some other Magistrate. For the ends of justice the application should be allowed.

SRILAL CHAMARIA V. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—The question before us on this Rule is whether the case now pending against the petitioners before Mr. K. B. Das Gupta should not be transferred to some other Magistrate, on the ground that that gentleman is a necessary witness for the defence. In applying for a transfer of this kind I think that an accused must satisfy this Court that the Magistrate whom he desires to call as a witness will be a necessary and essential witness for the defence. In this case the accused say that the Magistrate is required to give his evidence as to the credit of another witness Karuna Bhusan Banerjee, who is no doubt one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution, and that his evidence will be admissible under section 155 (1) of the Evidence Act. In support of this application they have put forward certain facts which they claim to have elicited from the witness Girija in cross-examination. It is not suggested that the witness Girija has said anything in his examination-in-chief which is relevant to the present enquiry into the guilt of the petitioners. It is, therefore, unnecessary for the petitioners to impeach Girija's credit in the way that they suggest. Their application is solely having reference to the evidence of Karuna. We have been taken through the evidence of Girija more than once by Sir B. C. Mitter, but we are quite unable to find in that evidence any definite statement that Karuna was either a Bench clerk of Mr. Das Gupta, which admittedly he never was, or that he was so brought into contact with him in the office that Mr. Das Gupta would be in a position to express any opinion as to his credibility as a witness. Mr. Das Gupta himself has submitted an explanation to this Court in which, at the outset, he frankly admits that he has no desire to try the case, but that on the contrary it would be a great relief to him if it were transferred from his file. But, taking the facts alleged in the petition, he gives them one and all a categorical denial. It appears from his explanation that, during the years that he has been at Lall Bazar, at Jorabagan and at Bankshall Street, Karuna Bhusan Banerjee has never worked under him in any capacity either in his Court or in any office of which he has been in charge. He never worked as his Bench clerk or interpreter or process-clerk, nor did he work in the Jorabagan office when Mr. Das Gupta was in charge of that office, nor in the copying department or accounts department or in the record room of which the Magistrate has been in charge for over two years. The Magistrate further states that he had no occasion to know anything about his conduct or credibility as he never worked under him and that he held no enquiry regarding his conduct in any matter in any of the Courts. He adds that there is no such post as "Office Master" used by the witness Girija, possibly taking it from the cross-examining Counsel. Turning to Girija's evidence, his statements amount to this that he expresses an opinion as to Mr. Das Gupta's possible knowledge of certain subordinates in the Police Court of whom Karuna is one. He does not, however, make any statement from which it can be necessarily inferred that Karuna was at any time under Mr. Das Gupta in a way in which that Magistrate would be brought to judge of his conduct or credibility. It is said that the Magistrate has only referred to the enquiry into Karuna's own defalcation, with which enquiry the Magistrate admittedly had nothing to do. It is said that there was another enquiry in 1914 into Girija's conduct. It is suggested that in that enquiry Mr. Das Gupta must have also enquired into Karuna's conduct. That enquiry was with reference to certain events which took place in the copying department. This witness cannot say whether Karuna was ever in the copying department but thinks he was either in the copying department or statistics department. He is not able to say which. There is certainly nothing to show that Karuna was in any way connected with the enquiry into Girija's conduct in 1914 or that he was in any way implicated in the charges which were then made against that clerk and other clerks in that office. It is not suggested on the part of the petitioners that the simple word of the accused is to be accepted in matters of this kind. They must show that the Magistrate is an essential and necessary witness and they must show that to the satisfaction of this Court. In this case I am clearly of opinion that they have wholly failed to show anything of the kind. I would, therefore, discharge this Rule.

SMITHER, J.—When an accused person applies to this Court for a transfer of his case on the ground that he wishes to examine as a defence witness the Magistrate who is trying the case, I do not think that we should make the transfer as a matter of course. We should look into the question whether the Magistrate can give material evidence, and we must look into that question in this case. It is said that this Magistrate can give evidence as to the credibility of Karuna, the principal prosecution witness. The suggestion is that the Magistrate has formed an opinion about the witness, because the Magistrate has been working as a Presidency Magistrate in charge of certain offices and the witness has been working as a clerk in the Presidency Magistracy offices. But this witness has not worked under this Magistrate at all, so far as I have been able to see, either in an office under his control or as a Bench clerk. On the other hand he has worked under other Magistrates as a Bench clerk, and in offices controlled by those other Magistrates; and the proper persons to give evidence on the lines on which the defence says it wishes to examine this Magistrate are those other Magistrates—one of whom is the Chief Presidency Magistrate, who is already a witness in this case.

when S. assaulted them. The consequence was a fight in which S. received slight injuries:

Held, that as the fight was provoked by S. and no very grievous injuries were inflicted upon him, the attaching party could not be said to have exceeded their right of private defence and were, therefore, not guilty of any offence. [p. 684, col. 1.]

Petition for revision, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of the order of the Sessions Judge, Shahpur, at Sargodha, dated the 20th December 1917, modifying that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Shahpur, dated the 30th October 1917, convicting the petitioners.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Devi Das, Kirpa Ram, Ramji Mal and Diwan Chand were convicted by a 1st Class Magistrate of causing grievous hurt under section 325, Indian Penal Code. Devi Das was sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 500, and the remaining accused were sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 100 each. They appealed to the Sessions Judge, who acquitted Diwan Chand and reduced the sentences on the other appellants to a fine of Rs. 100 each, the sentence of imprisonment being remitted. These three persons have filed an application for revision to this Court, and it is contended that on the findings of the lower Appellate Court they should have been acquitted.

The following extracts from the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge will show clearly what his opinion about the case is:—

"I do not propose to go further into the evidence which I have examined carefully. Suffice it to say that the evidence for the prosecution tells a story which I am unable to credit."

"It is admitted that accused went to the house without sticks, for they picked up sticks there."

The learned Sessions Judge goes on to say that surely Sunder Singh, who is said to have received the grievous hurt, was the person who resisted the decree-holder and his party. He says, (a) "It must have been Sunder Singh, who provoked the fight. That a man like Devi Das, a typical bania, himself assaulted Sunder Singh with a heavy stick, I decline to believe for one moment."

EMPEROR v. BIR KISHORE RAI.

(b). "The only truth in the evidence for the prosecution is in my opinion the statement that Sunder Singh was given some kind of a beating by the attaching party. I am inclined to the opinion that he was not badly hurt. But that he received some blows is proved by the Police record of his first report. On the other hand, the Police certainly recorded some slight signs of injury on Devi Das when he went to report at the thana."

(c). "I have not the slightest doubt that what happened was this. The attaching party went naturally to Mehr Singh's house and began looking for property. Sunder Singh resented this and probably actually assaulted Davi Das. The attaching party lost their tempers and beat Sunder Singh.  In any case the assault although certainly provoked went far beyond any right of private defence. *****"

(d). "As I put no reliance on the complainant's oral evidence regarding the actual assault, I am not prepared to uphold the conviction of Diwan Chand whose presence is not admitted by the accused."

The above extracts show that the learned Sessions Judge put no reliance upon the complainant's evidence regarding the actual assault but held that there was a fight in which the aggressor was Sunder Singh and not any of the petitioners. Having regard to the fact that he has not believed any of the oral evidence for the prosecution, it is difficult to see on what he has based his finding that the petitioners went far beyond their right of private defence. Seeing that there was a fight which was provoked by Sunder Singh and that no very serious injuries were inflicted upon him, I am unable to maintain the finding that the petitioners exceeded their right of private defence. I hold that on the lower Appellate Court's own view of what really occurred the petitioners are entitled to an acquittal.

I, therefore, allow the revision and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court acquit the petitioners and direct that the fines, if paid by them, be refunded.

Revision allowed.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 13 (b)— Pleader—Professional misconduct—Acting for both parties in one suit.

A Pleader, who acts for one party at one stage of a suit or proceeding and then, without the leave of the Court, acts for the opposite party in the same suit or proceeding, although he may not act out of any improper motive, is guilty of gross carelessness and disregard of the rules of the profession, amounting to gross misconduct in the discharge of professional duties within the meaning of section 13 (b) of the Legal Practitioners Act. [p. 685, col. 2.]

Civil reference from the District Judge of Cuttack.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.
Messrs. Pugh, G. C. Pal, Lal Mohan Ganguli and Gajendra Prasad Das, for Bir Kishore Rai.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This matter arises out of a reference under the Legal Practitioners Act, XVIII of 1879, from the District Judge of Cuttack regarding a Pleader named Bir Kishore Rai. The learned Judge has found the Pleader guilty of three charges under section 13, clause (b), of the Act and has referred the case under section 14 of the Act for our orders. Pending the investigation the learned Judge has suspended the Pleader from practice with effect from the 7th of February 1918.

The charges are three:—the first relates to a mortgage suit of 1914 in which the Pleader signed a plaint on behalf of the plaintiff and subsequently, it does not appear how long afterwards, accepted a Vakalatnama on behalf of one of the defendants, the mortgagor, and filed a written statement in which he admitted the claim of the mortgagee, although a number of the other defendants who were transferees from the mortgagor contested it. When the case went up on appeal from the decree of the Munsif, it was discovered that the Pleader had acted for both sides and upon that being brought to the notice of the Court, the Pleader for the mortgagee, who happened to be the Pleader's father-in-law, on behalf of his client compromised with the transferee and the case was finally disposed of on that footing.

The next charge relates to Execution Case No. 219 of 1915 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge. In that case the Pleader on the 15th of March 1915 filed an execution petition on behalf of the judgment creditor; on the 10th of November 1915 he filed an application on behalf of the judgment-debtor praying for an order to set aside the sale.

The third charge relates to Execution Case No. 347 of 1914 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack. In that case the Pleader filed an execution petition on behalf of the decree-holder on the 2nd of April 1914; on the 9th of March 1915 he appeared on behalf of a claimant under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Civil Procedure Code whose claim was dismissed on the 10th of March 1915. The sale was held on the 16th of March 1915, and on the 13th of April 1915 the same Pleader filed a petition on behalf of the judgment-debtors to set aside the execution sale.

In the mortgage suit as well as in the two execution cases the Pleader's father-in-law was engaged on the opposite side. It is urged that the conduct of the Pleader in signing the Vakalatnamas and acting for both sides in the same case was grossly improper conduct within the meaning of clause (b) of section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The Pleader's explanation is that he acted carelessly but not with any improper motive and that in the two execution cases, as soon as the matter was brought to his notice by the Court, he immediately expressed his regret and declined to take any further part in the case on behalf of the judgment-debtors. Mr. Pugh on behalf of the Pleader urges that grossly improper conduct within the meaning of section 13 means conduct involving moral turpitude and that it does not extend to cases of negligence of the rules of the profession such as that with which the Pleader has now been charged. Now, whatever the rule may be with regard to the other branches of the legal profession, so far as Pleaders are concerned, the matter seems to have been settled in this Court by the decision of the Special Bench in In the matter of two Pleaders (1). In that case the matter turned upon Order III, rule 4, sub-clause (2), which enacts that "every appointment of a Pleader, when accepted, shall be filed in Court and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court, by a writing signed by the client or the Pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court or until the client or the Pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client." It was held by the Special Bench in the case above referred to that although the Pleader may not have acted out of any improper motive, gross carelessness and disregard of the rules of the profession cannot be overlooked and constitute gross misconduct in the discharge of professional duties within the meaning of section 13 (b) of the Legal Practitioners Act. The Pleader urges in his explanation that he had no intention to defraud any person and that in fact neither the plaintiff in the mortgage suit nor the judgment-creditors in the execution cases have so far raised any objection in regard to his conduct. He further brings it to our notice that this proceeding has been initiated upon information supplied by a discharged clerk of his. We are willing to accept the assurance of the Pleader that he had no fraudulent motive, but we cannot accept the explanation that his disregard of the rules was not intentional. In our opinion his disregard of the rules was gross and intentional, and we do not think that a mere warning will have the effect of impressing upon members of the Bar in the Mufassil the necessity of strict observance of the provisions of the law. We are unable to accept Mr. Pugh's contention that in order to make the Pleader liable to punishment under section 13, it is not sufficient to prove that he has intentionally disobeyed the rules but that there must be some act involving a moral stigma or proof of actual injury to a litigant. That in our view is not the law as interpreted in this Court. That being so, the only question we have to consider is the punishment which should be inflicted in this particular case. We have taken into consideration the fact that the Pleader is a young man who at the time that he committed the offences had only been four years in practice, that he was working under the guidance perhaps of his father-in-law and that he did not realize the gravity of his offence. We think, however, that we must impose some period of suspension and that a mere warning will not be sufficient in this case. We direct that the Pleader, Babu Bir Kishore Rai, be suspended for a period of six months commencing from the 7th of February 1918.

CIVIL RULE No. 138 of 1918.

In the matter of A VAKIL.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 476—Qualifications mentioned in s. 195, whether incorporated in s. 476—Courts in the Presidency towns, power of, to act under s. 476.

Per Curiam (Fletcher, J., dubitante).—Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply to an offence committed before a Court in presidency towns. Consequently it is not competent to the High Court, acting under section 476, to direct the prosecution of a person for the offence of forgery or abetment of forgery brought to its notice in the course of hearing an appeal in a Probate case. [p. 687, cols. 1 & 2.]

The qualifications mentioned in section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, are to be treated as incorporated in the provisions of section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 687, col. 2.]

Rule issued against a Vakil.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. Sarkar (with him Babus Atulya Charan Bose, Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Satya Charan Sinha), for the Vakil.—The Rule was issued by this Hon'ble Court under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but it has been held that section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply to the case of an offence before a Court within the presidency town, but the case can only be sent for enquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class. Refers to Kedar Nath Kar v. King-

Emperor (1). Further the qualifications mentioned in section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, must be read with section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. There is no doubt some conflict of decisions on this point, but the majority of the decisions supports my contention. Refers to Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2), Debilal v. Dhajadhari Goshami (3). A contrary view, however, was taken in Akhil Chandra Sen v. Queen-Empress (4). If your Lordships do not accept the authorities which support my contention, the case, I submit, should be referred to a Full Bench for authoritative decision.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule issued on a Vakil calling on him to show cause why under the provisions of section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure proceedings should not be taken against him in respect of the evidence given by him in Appeal from Original Decree No. 248 of 1916, or why such other order should not be made with reference to the offences committed by the said Vakil before this Court or brought to its notice in these proceedings, as to this Court may seem fit. The appeal was heard by myself and Mr. Justice Shamsul Huda. It was a Probate case, and agreeing with the decision of the learned District Judge, we found that the Will was a forgery. Sanction to prosecute the appellant in the appeal had been granted by the lower Court and, on the Will or the document said to be the Will, the Vakil's name appeared as one of the attesting witnesses. The Vakil did not give evidence in the Court below, nor did he appear before the Commissioner under the commission issued by the lower Court for the purpose of taking his evidence. He stated that the parties had informed him that they did not require his evidence. We directed him to appear before us and with the consent of all parties his evidence was taken in this Court. He swore that the signature appearing on the alleged Will, where his name appeared as one of the attesting witnesses, was not his signature. We did not agree with that view. We had before us documents which had been filed in this Court by him—Vakalatnamas—for the purpose of comparison and we came to the conclusion that the signature apparently was his. Having regard to his evidence and the circumstances of the case, we thought that we should not allow the case to rest where it was, more especially so as the person against whom this Rule was issued was a person practising in this Court as one of the qualified practitioners. We, therefore, issued the present Rule.

On the hearing of the Rule, it has been objected, first of all, that section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply to an offence committed before a Court in the presidency town and, secondly, that even if it does the qualification in section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, must be read into section 476 and, therefore, except as regards the statements made in his evidence, it would not be competent to this Court acting under section 476 to direct the prosecution of the Vakil for the offence of forging or abetting the forging of the Will. To deal with the first point first, reliance has been placed on the decision of this Court in the case of Kedar Nath Kar v. King-Emperor (1), where the learned Judge remarked: "We have considered the course which we should take in the matter. Section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not appear to provide for the case of an offence before a Court in a presidency town. It empowers a Court to send a case for enquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class. But the nearest Magistrate, namely, the Presidency Magistrate is not a Magistrate of the first class." Speaking for myself, I think that it may be open to question whether the nearest Magistrate of the first class is not a person who can be quite easily distinguished from the nearest Magistrate. The nearest Magistrate of the first class can be distinguished from all other Magistrates surrounding the High Court, whether they fall under the distinction of Presidency Magistrates salaried or not or Magistrates of a class inferior to the first. However, the decision referred to is in favour of the Vakil and in my opinion, before we can differ from that decision, it would be necessary for us to send this case for the consideration of the Full Bench. While I follow this decision with hesitation, I think in a case like the present, rather than to send the case for the decision of the Full Bench which would involve considerable time, it would be more convenient to adopt the procedure that was suggested in that case and to send the case to the Legal Remembrancer with the present judgment for such action as he may think proper.

The other point, namely, whether the qualification mentioned in section 195 ought to be read into section 476 is again a matter on which judicial decision is not all one way. There is the decision in Akhil Chandra Sen v. Queen-Empress (4). It seems to follow from the judgment that the qualification in section 195 is not to be read into the provisions of section 476. But again there is a decision the other way reported as Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2). There the learned Judges held, whilst recognizing that the course of decision was not all one way, that the recent decision of this Court was in favour of the view that the qualification mentioned in the former section, that is, section 195 was to be treated as incorporated in the latter provision, that is, section 476. The same view was taken in the case of Debalal v. Dhajadhari Goshami (3). Again in that conflict of authority, I think it would not be right for us in this case, specially in a case of this nature, to depart from the more recent authorities and to hold that the qualification mentioned in section 195 does not apply to section 476. That is a matter which, I think, if it has got to be determined, ought not to be determined in a case of the present nature but in some other proceedings where both sides are properly represented.

In the result, we follow the course adopted in the case of Kedar Nath Kar v. King-Emperor (1) and direct that the judgment and the papers in the case be laid before the Legal Remembrancer for enquiry and for such action as he thinks proper. In the event of the Legal Remembrancer desiring to take action in the matter, he should apply on notice to the party to be proceeded against and stating the result of such enquiry for sanction to prosecute. The Rule is discharged.

Rule discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 366, 494, 498—Abduction of married woman—"Marry", meaning of.

Section 366 of the Penal Code applies to the case of the abduction of a married woman. The word "marry" in this section has the same meaning as it has in section 494 of the Code, i. e., the going through a form of marriage, whether the marriage should prove in fact legal and valid or illegal and invalid.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Faridpur, dated the 29th June 1917.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee, Amarendra Nath Bose and Pankaj Kumar Ganguli, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Orr and Camell, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The four appellants were tried before the Sessions Judge of Faridpur sitting with two Assessors on a charge framed under section 366, Indian Penal Code. The Assessors were for acquitting the appellants. The learned Sessions Judge has convicted them and sentenced them each to rigorous imprisonment for two years.

The actual facts are simple enough. The abducted woman Wazidunnessa had been living with her husband at Dhubri. On her husband's death she returned as a widow to live with her mother Abdunnessa at Paikandi in the Faridpur district. While there she received a proposal of marriage from one Daliladdi. The proposal was distasteful to her—Daliladdi being an old man with wife and children, and she, therefore, refused. She and her mother, however, came to the conclusion that it was desirable that she should marry a man who would reside with them and also maintain the mother. She accordingly, on the 18th April last, entered into a marriage in nika form with one Piziraddin. On the following day the four appellants with Daliladdi came to her house and took her away by force to the house of the appellant Mobarak Ali. There is evidence that while she was at that house, she received another proposal of marriage from Daliladdi.

The abduction took place in broad daylight and does not seem to have been accompanied with much force or violence; but there is no reason to suppose that the woman Wazidunnessa went with the appellants willingly. Both the learned Sessions Judge and the Assessors appear to have been agreed as to the facts proved in their main outline. The Assessors, however, felt some difficulty in finding that the intention charged, namely, that the woman should be compelled to marry Daliladdi against her will, had been sufficiently established by the evidence. We have been taken through the depositions of the witnesses; and, having considered those depositions, we are satisfied that the learned Sessions Judge was right in the conclusion that the accused abducted the woman with the criminal intent necessary to an offence under section 366, Indian Penal Code.

In this Court it is suggested that section 366 does not apply to the case of the abduction of a married woman. It is suggested that that might be an offence under some other section of the Code, for instance section 498. We see no reason to doubt, however, that the word 'marry' in section 366 has the same meaning as the same word has in section 494. What it means is—the going through a form of marriage, whether the marriage should prove in fact legal and valid or illegal and invalid. If the facts and the law applicable to them are as we have stated, the question in this case narrows down simply to the question of sentence.

The appellants, as we have said, have been sentenced each to two years' rigorous imprisonment. In the circumstances, that sentence seems to us to be excessive. If we reduce it, however, it is in the hope that the appellants will not molest either Wazidunnessa or her mother or husband again. If they do so, they may find themselves in a worse position than they are now. On the whole, we are of opinion that the ends of justice will be met by reducing the sentence passed on each of the accused to a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for six months; and we order accordingly.

Sentence reduced.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 32, 34—Compromise decree, breach of terms of—Damages, suit for, maintainability of—Cause of action.

A judgment-debtor, who does not voluntarily satisfy a decree, does not commit an actionable wrong for which the decree-holder can recover compensation by a separate suit.

Where, therefore, the defendant, who was under an obligation under the terms of a compromise decree to endorse certain promissory notes in plaintiff's favour, failed to do so, with the result that the promissory notes became barred:

Held, that plaintiff's remedy was to proceed in execution under Order XXI, rule 32 or rule 34, and not to seek compensation by a separate suit.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Nalasivam Pillai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal can be disposed of with reference to only one of the grounds taken, that the lower Appellate Court erred in its decision in favour of plaintiff's right to proceed by suit. The 1st defendant was under obligation, under Exhibit A1, a compromise decree, to endorse certain promissory notes in plaintiff's favour and to execute a power-of-attorney and do other things within a fixed time. He did not comply with his obligation; and plaintiff, instead of compelling him to do so by process under Order XXI, rule 34 or 32, has now sued him and the present appellants, certain trustees alleged to be in possession of his property, for damages on the ground that the notes are now time-barred and worthless.

The lower Appellate Court has held that such a suit will lie on the strength of certain authorities, of which (to mention only those in which section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 was pleaded) Saratmani Debee v. Bata Krishna (1) was decided in special circumstances and Kolintavita Mama Amma v. Kolintavita Haji Kandi (2) and Quamzal Huda v. Kumud Nath (3) dealt with causes of action arising subsequently to, and independently of, the decree. Here the cause of action is not that the notes are barred, but that 1st defendant failed to comply with the decree and enable plaintiff to sue on them, before they became so barred; and the authorities referred to are not in point. In the absence of authority, we are not prepared to accept the proposition involved in plaintiff's contention that a judgment-debtor, who does not voluntarily satisfy a decree, commits an actionable wrong, for which the decree-holder can recover compensation by separate suit. Taking this view, we must hold that the suit is not sustainable.

We have been asked, in the alternative, to treat the plaint, as an execution petition and to allow the plaintiff to recover damages under Order XXI, rule 32. But, apart from any objections to such execution on its merits, we are not, in view of the delay, after which this relief has been claimed, and the course of the litigation, prepared to use our discretion to do so.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the suit being dismissed with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, O. XLIII, r. 1 (d)—Compromise decree, application to set aside, by person not party to decree, nature of—Application rejected—Appeal, whether lies.

Per Curiam (Richardson, J., dubitante). An application to set aside compromise decree on the ground that the applicant was no party to the compromise and that he had given no authority to file the petition of compromise, is an application within the scope of Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code. An appeal lies from an order refusing such application.

Rule against the order of the District Judge, Midnapore, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 169 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Petitioner.—Upon the admitted facts of the case the proceedings in question were not and could not be proceedings under Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code as they purport to be, and so the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was not competent. The decree, as it stands, shows that it was passed on consent. So the remedy of the opposite party is not by way of an application under Order IX, rule 13. The opposite party wants to impeach the decree on the ground of fraud. Therefore, his remedy is either to bring a regular suit for setting aside the decree or to apply under Order XLVII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code. The case of Damodar Misra v. Hirnashi Naik (1) is in my favour. See also the case of Hemmo Mayee Dayee v. Watson & Co. (2).

Babu Sarada Charan Maity, for the Opposite Party.—The defendant has got three remedies. He is not confined to the two mentioned by my learned friend on the other side. The petition to the Munsif is capable of being dealt with as an application for setting aside an ex parte decree under Order IX, rule 13, and it was so treated in this case. Therefore, the appeal to the District Judge against the order of the Munsif rejecting the application for setting aside the ex parte decree was competent. Refers to Koroona Moyee Dossee v. Nubo Kishore Sein (3), Bholai Naskar v. Alach Naskar (4), Golab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (5).

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, in reply.—The ruling in Damodar Misra v. Hirnashi Naik (1) is the latest case on the point and supports my contention. If your Lordships do not agree with the view taken in Damodar Misra v. Hirnashi Naik (1) the case should be referred to a Full Bench.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The petitioner in this Rule brought a suit against the opposite party and others. In that suit a petition of compromise was filed, to which the opposite party was apparently a party. Accordingly a consent decree was made founded on the petition. When the petitioner took steps to execute the decree, the opposite party applied to the trial Court to set aside the decree on the ground that as against him it was an ex parte decree. The learned Munsif on the merits refused the application. The opposite party then appealed to the District Judge, who took a different view of the facts and set aside the decree by his order of the 4th January 1918. That order is the subject-matter of this Rule. It is contended that the proceedings were not proceedings under Order IX, rule 13, as they purport to be and that the appeal was incompetent.

Now it is not disputed that it was open to the opposite party to apply to the trial Court to set aside the compromise decree on the ground that he was no party thereto and that he had given no authority to file the petition of compromise. The question is, what is the nature of such an application. Is it an application to the Court in its inherent jurisdiction or is it an application within the scope of Order IX, rule 13. It appears to have been held in the cases of Koroona Moyee Dossee v. Nubo Kishore (3) and Bholai Naskar v. Alach Naskar (4) that it is open to the Court to deal with such an application as an application to set aside an ex parte decree. The case of Hemmo Mayee Tayee v. Watson & Co. (2) has perhaps an opposite tendency but that case was distinguished in the case of Bholai Naskar v. Alach Naskar (4). The subsequent case, however, of Damodar Misra v. Hirnashi Naik (1) is in direct conflict with the decision in Bholai Naskar v. Alach Naskar (4). It was held in Damodar Misra's case (1) that a petition to set aside a consent decree, obtained in circumstances similar to those which exist in the present case, could not be treated as a petition under Order IX, rule 13. Speaking for myself, if there had been no previous decisions, I should have preferred to adopt the view expressed in that case by Mr. Justice Stephen and Mr. Justice Mullick. The previous cases, however, were apparently not brought to their notice. There is also this to be said that the case of Bholai Naskar v. Alach Naskar (4) has been cited with approval in the subsequent cases of Kunjo Behari Ghose v. Durgamoni Dassi (6) and Golab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (5). In the circumstances regard being had to the state of the authorities on a question which is one of procedure and not of principle, I think we ought to follow the decision in the case of Bholai Naskar v. Alach Naskar (4). If the application to the Munsif was capable of being dealt with under Order IX, rule 13, then an appeal lay to the District Judge from the Munsif's order rejecting the application and the District Judge's order cannot be successfully challenged on the merits. We cannot go behind the District Judge's finding.

The result, therefore, is that this Rule must be discharged with costs, one gold mohur.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree that the Rule should be discharged. I only wish to add that I do not share my learned brother's preference for the view expressed in the case of Damodar Misra v. Hirnashi Naik (1).

Rule discharged.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 213 OF 1915.

April 9, 1918.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.
Syed ZAKIR RAZA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

MADHUSUDAN DASS AND OTHERS—

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Mortgage executed by pardanashin lady—Attestation—Witnesses on one side of pardah—Muhammadan Law—Gift, validity of—Burden of proof—Mortgage suit—Title paramount, question of, whether can be gone into.

In the case of a document executed by a pardanashin lady, it is not necessary that the attesting witnesses should be actually inside the pardah: they are deemed to be present at the execution of the document in such a case, although they may be screened off from the executant by a pardah. [p. 693, col. 1.]

The onus of proving the bona fides and validity of a gift executed by a pardanashin lady lies upon those seeking to claim under it. They must point out and prove the circumstances connected with the transaction. [p. 693, col. 2.]

In an ordinary mortgage suit, title paramount to and independent of the mortgagor is not a necessary issue and should, as far as possible, be excluded from the trial of the suit, but that is not an absolute principle which should apply to the circumstances of each case. Where the leaving of such an issue undetermined would lead to inconvenience or hardship, it is proper that it should be tried in a mortgage suit. [p. 698, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Purnea, dated the 15th February 1915.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmad and Khurshed Hasnain, for the Appellant.

Messrs. R. L. Dutt and H. N. Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is a first appeal from a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Purnea, dated the 15th February 1915. The plaintiffs in this case are money-lenders and they instituted a suit on the 22nd September 1913 against the defendants to recover a sum of Rs. 6,435-8-0, being the principal and interest due on a mortgage-bond dated the 8th May 1909, under which certain properties of the executants of the bond were hypothecated to secure a loan of Rs. 5,000 advanced by the plaintiffs. The executants of the bond are three ladies. They were the widow and two daughters of Ausaf Ali Khan, who died in or before the year 1908 leaving two widows, three sons and two daughters, who succeeded to his property the widows taking a lanna share, the daughters one-ninth of the balance and the remainder going to the sons. The estate of Ausaf Ali Khan was somewhat encumbered and he left other debts besides money due on mortgages. These ladies who succeeded in part to his estate found it necessary to borrow a sum of Rs. 3,000 to pay the rent due for their share of the estate in order to save the Patni Mahals which had been advertised for sale by the Zemindar, and there can be no doubt that the mortgage by which they hypothecated a part of their property to secure the loan was a bona fide transaction and justified by the necessities of the case. The widow and two daughters of Ausaf Ali Khan who executed the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs were Musammât Mahmoudanissa the widow and Musammât Ekbalanissa and Musammât Syedanissa the daughters. Syedanissa is the defendant No. 1. Mahmoudanissa and Ekbalanissa died before the suit was instituted, the widow having before her death made over her property to Ekbalanissa who herself died sometime towards the end of 1912. The other defendants in the suit are the heirs of Ekbalanissa. Defendant No. 2, Zakir Raza, is her son by her first husband Mohsin Raza, who died in 1908. Defendant No. 3, Roshinara, is her daughter by her second husband, Yusuf Raza, whom she married in 1909. Defendant No. 4 is her second husband himself. There is another member of this family, named Nawab Afrosanissa Begum, who may be conveniently introduced here as she played a conspicuous part in the events which led up to the defence of the suit by defendant No. 2, Zakir Raza, the infant son of Ekbalanissa, who is the only one of the defendants who has appeared to contest the suit. Afrosanissa was Ekbalanissa's mother-in-law, being the mother of her first husband and the grandmother of Zakir Raza defendant No. 2. In 1913, she was appointed guardian of Zakir Raza by the District Judge.

The payment of the principal and interest on the mortgage bond having fallen into arrears, the present suit was instituted against the defendants and as already stated none of the defendants contested the suit except Zakir Raza, a boy of some 8 or 9 years at the time when the suit was instituted who was sued through his guardian Afrosanissa. His defence was, first, that the mortgage bond was invalid as it was not executed in the presence of two witnesses, and secondly, that Ekbalanissa his mother had transferred to him her whole interests in her father's estate including the mortgaged property by a hiba-bil-ewaz, dated the 17th July 1908, that is some 10 months earlier than the mortgage deed. The validity of the hiba-bil-ewaz was disputed by the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge found that the mortgage deed was duly executed and attested. He also found that the deed of gift was not a genuine document, there being no bona fide intention to transfer the possession of the property to the donee, and that the whole object of the transaction was to defraud the creditors of Ausaf Ali Khan whose estate he said was heavily encumbered. He was further of opinion that the three mortgaged properties were not in fact included in the deed of gift as they were not specifically mentioned in that document.

The only properties with which we are concerned in this appeal are the share which Ekbalanissa inherited from her father in the three mortgaged properties which are specified in the mortgage deed at page 5 of the paper-book and which Zakir Raza claims as his own by virtue of the hiba-bil-ewaz. The other mortgagors were content to let judgment go against them.

This appeal was argued at considerable length both as to the facts and as to the law and several points of law were argued before us, but as we have arrived at a clear conclusion on the facts of the case it is not necessary to deal with all the points of law which were raised by the respondents upon the assumption that a different conclusion of fact might be arrived at. As to the first point, I think the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that the mortgage bond was duly executed and attested. It is true that the Subordinate Judge treated the scribe Shao Nandan Das who wrote the bond and signed it as such as if he were one of the attesting witnesses to the bond. He gave evidence and said that the bond was executed in his presence and that he saw the ladies sign, but he said that he signed it as Katib and not as a witness. But apart from him there were six people altogether who signed the mortgage bond as witnesses. Some of them have since died, but one of them Murad Buksh gave evidence as to the execution and there were in addition five other witnesses called on behalf of the plaintiffs who supported the plaintiffs' case. The story told by the plaintiffs' witnesses agreed in all material respects. It was to the effect that the bond was executed by the ladies in the presence of Murad Baksh, who was himself inside the room where the transaction took place and inside the Pardah actually in the presence of the executants at the time the deed was executed. The other attesting witnesses were on the other side of the Pardah on the verandah. The bond was read over and explained to the ladies. Ekbalanissa signed her own name and also that of Mahmoudanissa, who was illiterate and who made her mark by a thumb impression. Leakat Hussain, who was the husband of the other lady Syedanissa, signed the bond on her behalf as her guardian and he was also present inside the Pardah when the bond was executed by the other two signatories. He then took the deed to the other side of the Pardah and signed it himself on behalf of Syedanissa in the presence of the attesting witnesses, who then signed the document. The scribe Sheo Nandan was outside the Pardah, but says he caught hold of it as it was dangling in the air and saw more or less what was going on inside. He corroborates Murad Baksh as to the manner in which the deed was executed. In the case of a document executed by a Pardanashin lady it is not necessary that the witnesses should be actually inside the Pardah, and there is ample authority to the effect that they are deemed to be present at the execution of the document in such a case although they may be screened off from the executant by a Pardah. The evidence in the present case is, in my opinion, quite sufficient to prove the proper execution of the deed, and that it was attested by at least two witnesses other than the scribe Sheo Nandan.

The second defence based upon the kiba-bil-ewaz must also, in my opinion, fail. It is well established that the onus of proving the bona fides and the validity of a gift of this nature executed by a Pardanashin lady lies upon those seeking to claim under it. It appears that Ekbalanissa was living with her own people at her late father's house in the Purnea district when she heard of her husband's illness. She at once proceeded to Lucknow where her husband resided and arrived only in time to find him dead. She remained at Lucknow under the care of her mother-in-law and within one or two months of the date of her husband's death the kiba-bil-ewaz was executed. It purported to transfer the whole of Ekbalanissa's interest in her late father's estate together with a plot of land which she had purchased at Lucknow to her son Zakir Raza, and so far as the evidence goes there is nothing to shew that she had any other property at that time. If that is so, the effect of the transfer would be to leave her practically penniless. It is suggested, possibly with some force, that a lady in her position would in all probability be in possession of considerable jewellery and other effects. That may be so, but I have only to observe that in the present case there is no evidence at all to that effect and I may point out that it is for those who are seeking to take the benefit of a gift of this sort to prove clearly that the gift was a bona fide and valid document. One of the questions which is material in cases of this sort is whether the gift in fact transferred all the property of the donor or a portion only. I do not wish to imply that that question is one which in itself and alone would determine the matter. But it is one of those facts which are always taken into consideration and as I have already said, it is for those setting up the deed to point out and prove what the circumstances connected with the transaction were. Reading the evidence in this case, it seems to me that the influence of Ekbalanissa's mother-in-law Afrosanissa is apparent at every turn. The three witnesses to the deed were relations of Afrosanissa. Wazir Bahadur was her sister's husband. Ahsan Raza was her son, a boy of 12 or 13 years. Mirza Inayet Hussain was her Mukhtear-am or general agent and her brother's brother-in-law. The deed itself was written at the instance of Inayet Hussain and on his own admission he never consulted

ZAKIR RAZA V. MADHUSUDAN DASS.

Ekbalanissa about it or had any conversation with her in regard thereto. Moreover, the whole transaction seems to have been conducted in secrecy and in a hurry. None of the neighbours and none of Ekbalanissa's own people knew anything about it either then or for a long time afterwards. Ekbalanissa had no independent advice nor was any lawyer consulted. The consideration for the gift was a diamond ring provided by Afrosanissa and which no doubt was handed over formally to Ekbalanissa, but what happened to it afterwards is not known. The deed itself is careful to describe the transferred property as the whole interest of Ekbalanissa in her father's estate, but the specification of the properties transferred is incomplete and inaccurate and no Tazui numbers are given. The Sub-Registrar before whom the deed was registered was not called as a witness. It is true, as has been pointed out, that one of the witnesses called on behalf of the defendants, who was the scribe who wrote out this deed, does say that when the deed was registered he read it out to Ekbalanissa in the presence of the witnesses, Ekbalanissa being at that time behind the Pardah—she is said to have signed it. That is, except for the statement on the registration itself made by the Registrar, the only evidence there is that this deed was ever read over to or explained to Ekbalanissa and it does not appear that this witness, the scribe who read over the document to Ekbalanissa, was personally acquainted with her. Afrosanissa was the only person who is alleged to have discussed the matter at all with Ekbalanissa, and she no doubt could have given very useful and material evidence as to the state of mind of Ekbalanissa before and at the time when this deed was executed, but she for some reason which has not been explained has not given evidence in this case and, therefore, we have not had the advantage of hearing from anybody anything to shew what was the real state of mind of Ekbalanissa or any evidence to shew that she had ever expressed any intention of executing a deed of this sort or that she ever fully appreciated what the effect of it was. The deed itself recites that the gift is made to Zakir Raza, a minor of tender years, through his paternal grandmother and guardian Nawab Afrosanissa Begum, and it continues in this way: "I the donor have put in my place the donee through the aforesaid guardian in possession and occupation of the gifted property and I shall get recorded the name of my son aforesaid donee in the Purnea Collectorate in the columns of Zemindars and Patnidars by getting my name removed therefrom." It may be observed here that according to the Muhammadan Law Afrosanissa was not in fact the natural guardian either of the person or property of her grandson, nor had she at that time been appointed guardian. The natural guardian of his property would be his paternal grandfather, who was alive and living apart from his wife Afrosanissa. It has been stated by the learned Vakil on behalf of the defendant that the grandfather, Afrosanissa's husband, was of unsound mind but there is no evidence of this before us, and even if it is so Afrosanissa was not the natural guardian of her grandson. This matter is perhaps not one of very great importance, and I would not refer to it but for the fact that when the defendants were confronted with the argument that Ekbalanissa's subsequent conduct in dealing with the property after the hiba-bil-uraz had been executed was entirely inconsistent with that of a person who had transferred her property, because she both sold and mortgaged parts of the property in her own name, they asked us to treat this dealing of the property by Ekbalanissa as if she were herself the guardian of her child. If that is so, it seems to me that it is entirely inconsistent with the statement in the deed itself that Afrosanissa was the guardian of Ekbalanissa's infant son. Although the deed recited that the son's name will be recorded in the Collectorate and in the columns of the Zemindari and Ekbalanissa's name will be removed therefrom, no attempt was made at any time to transfer the property to the name of Zakir Raza in the Collectorate at Purnea or in the Zemindar's sherista, although Ekbalanissa returned to Purnea a few months later and resided there until her death in 1912. It was contended, as I have already said, that Ekbalanissa remained in possession of the property as guardian of her son, but even she was not the legal guardian of his property, and there is evidence that she was in possession as owner and not as guardian of Zakir Raza and that she made her own collections separately from her co-sharers, and indeed the whole of Ekbalanissa's subsequent actions point to the conclusion either that she was not aware of the effect of the deed that had been executed or that she never had any real intention of transferring the property, either of which findings would be fatal to the validity of the gift. No accounts were kept on behalf of the transferees by Ekbalanissa or by anybody else and parts of the property were sold in January 1912 by Ekbalanissa and her co-sharers for a sum between Rs. 19,000 and Rs. 20,000 in order to pay off mortgage and money decrees of an earlier date, and the *Kabala*s by which this property was transferred described Ekbalanissa as the owner of her share of this property and so far from making any mention of the hiba-bil ewaz, they recited that except for the mortgage to pay off which the proceeds of the sale were utilised, no transfer in respect of the land in question had been effected by way of sale, gift, mortgage, etc., of any sort at any place, and the property was transferred to the possession of the vendee. The Subordinate Judge found that the estate of Ausaf Ali Khan was heavily encumbered at his death and he found inter alia that the hiba-bil-ewaz was executed in order to defraud or delay the creditors of Ausaf Ali Khan. There is some justification on the evidence for arriving at this conclusion, but how far that finding may possibly be justified is a matter of opinion. There certainly was evidence that the estate was encumbered to a considerable extent, but I am not inclined to base my decision upon such a finding. There may have been some such motive in the mind of Afrosannissa which induced her to bring about the transfer, but I am not satisfied that Ekbalanissa was any party to any such proceeding, that is to say, that Ekbalanissa herself ever had any intention of executing this deed with a view to defeating the creditors. It does appear to me, however, after a careful review of the whole of the evidence, that the defendants have entirely failed to discharge the burden which is upon them of making out that Ekbalanissa knew and appreciated the effect of the deed or that she ever had any intention of passing the property to her son. At the time in question she was a young woman. Her exact age is a matter of conjecture, but probably she was not much more than about 20 years old. The circumstances under which she found herself when she arrived at her mother-in-law's house were calculated to cause her acute mental distress, her husband having just died. She had none of her own people to consult with or advise her, no legal advice was taken and the only person who is alleged to have spoken to her on the subject of the gift was her mother-in-law Afrosannissa, who, as I have said, has not been called as a witness and whose interest it was to see that her grandson was provided for even at the expense of the mother. Her motives are not far to seek. Ausaf Ali Khan's estate was to some extent at all events encumbered and there were money debts in addition. Moreover, Ekbalanissa was a young woman who might marry again and have other children, as in fact happened before her death. Then again the hurry in which the whole thing was rushed through within two months at most of her husband's death, the secrecy attending the transaction, the absence of legal advice or assistance which is apparent from the careless manner in which the deed is drafted, are matters calculated to cast considerable suspicion upon the bona fides of those responsible for the transaction. No explanation is given of any of these matters and Afrosannissa, whose agent took a leading part, no doubt by her instructions, in carrying the matter through, is not called as a witness and the conduct of Ekbalanissa in dealing with the property after the deed was executed is entirely inconsistent with that of a person who had knowingly transferred her property to another. I have no hesitation in holding that the defendants have failed to discharge the burden of proving that the deed of gift was a bona fide document or that the donor ever had any intention of passing the property therein referred to.

As I said at the beginning of this judgment, there were other defences raised by the respondents upon the assumption that the facts might be found in favour of the appellants. I have already said that in my opinion there was no intention on the part of Ekbalanissa to defraud or defeat her creditors and I need not deal further with that point, but the main contentions of the respondents in addition to those which I have already mentioned were that the gift was invalid, as no sufficient specification of the properties had been made in the document, that is to say, no sufficient specification of the mortgaged properties had been set out in the deed of gift and that in fact the mortgaged properties were not shown to have been included in the hiba-bil-ewaz and that under the registration law such specification is necessary, and in these circumstances the document must be taken not to have been duly registered and cannot affect the mortgaged properties. The only other point of any substance which was taken was that the deed of gift itself was void under the Muhammadan Law of Moosha, on the ground that there was confusion of the property. Having regard to the finding of fact at which I have arrived in this case it is unnecessary to deal with these points.

There is one other matter which I think I ought to deal with before concluding this judgment. It was contended, as I have said, that Ekbalanissa was really after the execution of this deed in possession of the property as guardian of her minor son and that her action in executing the two sales of a portion of the property, which it is contended had been transferred to him, was done by her on his behalf as his guardian, and that these sales were legally justified on the ground that they were made in order to pay off the debts which were due either under mortgages on the property or for money decrees obtained against the estate of Ausaf Ali Khan and that in either case she would be perfectly justified in selling the property to carry out that purpose, that the minor son would be bound by it and, therefore, that there was nothing inconsistent in her attitude in effecting these sales with the suggestion that she had in fact transferred the property to her son. Once that proposition is accepted, it becomes quite clear that the mortgage in question in this suit, which was executed in order to raise money to pay the rent of the property then due, would be equally binding upon the minor Zakir Raza and, therefore, on that ground alone it would be obvious that Zakir Raza could have no defence to this action brought on the mortgage bond. On realising where the result of their contention led and that if the dealings of Ekbalanissa were justified on the ground which I have mentioned the defendant No. 2 would have no just grounds for opposing the mortgage deed, at a late stage in the proceedings we were asked to deal with the matter solely upon that ground and to confine our decision to dismissing the suit on that ground only, and not to determine the question of whether or not the hiba-bil-ewaz was a valid document. We were asked to pass a decree merely in favour of the mortgage suit without deciding whether the hiba-bil-ewaz was a valid document or not. But as from the very start one of the issues in the case has been whether Ekbalanissa made a gift of her property to defendant No. 2, a point which the plaintiffs were quite justified in asking to have determined as it was a matter set up by the defendants themselves and as the greater part of this appeal has been argued upon the question whether or not this gift to defendant No. 2 was a valid instrument, I do not feel inclined now to dismiss that part of the case from consideration and merely to grant a decree without deciding the matters which have been raised both in the Court below and on appeal before us. To do so would, in my opinion, merely be encouraging fresh litigation upon a question of fact which has been raised and thoroughly discussed in the present suit, and, therefore, I think that in this suit we are entitled to come to a conclusion upon the question of validity or otherwise of the hib-bil-ewaz. In my opinion this document cannot stand and this appeal should be dismissed.

There is only one other matter which I wish to say a word about, and that is as to the form of the decree in the Court below. By the judgment of the Subordinate Judge the suit was decreed with costs and he ordered that the defendants to pay the plaintiffs this day six months what will be found due on the bond on taking an account with interest at the bond rate during the period of grace on the principal sum, and the decree which issued in pursuance of that judgment is in the same form. It was pointed out to us that in awarding interest at the bond rate the learned Subordinate Judge has taken no account of the period between the time when the suit was instituted and the date of the judgment. This is obviously an oversight on his part, and we think it ought to be rectified and the decree ought accordingly to be in a somewhat modified form. It should be ordered that the suit be decreed with costs and that the defendants pay to the plaintiffs within six months from the date of the decree of the Subordinate Judge such sum as shall be found due on the bond on taking an account with interest at the bond rate from the date of the suit to the expiry of the period of grace on the principal sum and after the period of grace the aggregate amount will bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum. Costs will also bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum throughout. In default of payment as directed, the mortgaged properties should be sold and the sale-proceeds applied to the satisfaction of the decree according to law. The present appeal will be dismissed with costs. The respondents will also get their costs on the principal sum and interest found due between the date of institution of the suit and the date of the decree in the lower Court.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I do not think I can usefully add to the judgment of the learned Chief Justice just delivered.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was an ordinary suit to recover sums due, principal and interest, on a mortgage bond, dated the 8th May 1909. Defendant No. 2, who is the appellant here, Zakir Raza, was impleaded as a party to the mortgage suit on account of his having inherited some shares in the mortgaged property from his mother Ekbalanissa. In the plaint there is no reference to the deed of gift set up by defendant No. 2, nor is there any mention of his having been made a defendant on account of his occupying any other capacity than that of an heir to Ekbalanissa. The other heirs of Ekbalanissa did not enter any appearance. Defendant No. 2, the appellant, in his written statement set up a title independent of the mortgagor Ekbalanissa, executant of the bond. He asserted that he was in possession of the mortgaged property on the strength of a deed of gift executed by his mother Ekbalanissa long prior to the mortgage bond in suit. The deed of gift was dated the 17th July 1908. The defendant, therefore, raised issue No. 2 set forth in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, viz., "whether Ekbalanissa made a gift of the property to defendant No. 2 as alleged by him, and if so, was the mortgage bond binding upon defendant No. 2." This issue was seriously pressed by the defendant No. 2 and elaborate evidence to prove the hiba-bil-ewaz and his title to the mortgaged property based upon that hiba was offered in the Court below. Upon the trial of that issue the learned Subordinate Judge held that the hiba set up by the defendant No. 2 was not an operative document and that it was not executed by Ekbalanissa with a view to transfer any interest in the property conveyed by the deed, and that defendant No. 2 was not in possession of the property on the strength of that deed. In the present appeal before us the same point was strenuously urged by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the appellant. It was not at all suggested in the course of the long address of the learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant that the said issue was improper and irrelevant and that it should not have been tried by the Court below and that we in appeal ought to refuse to determine it. Only yesterday the learned Vakil who appeared for the appellant on account of the absence of his Counsel, while replying to the arguments for the respondents, for the first time urged that the issue should be expunged from the record and that an ordinary decree based upon the mortgage bond should be given without any determination of the title of the defendant based upon the hiba set up by him. It is impossible to concede to the contention of the learned Vakil at this stage and to ignore the hiba set up by defendant No. 2. According to the plaintiff he inherited a portion of the mortgaged property from his mother Ekbalanissa and had necessarily to be made a party to the suit. He, however, claimed to have acquired the property by virtue of a deed of gift executed by Ekbalanissa in 1908, and it was for him in the first instance while filing his written statement to take up the position of an heir of Ekbalanissa or to stand upon the deed of gift set up by him. Having chosen the latter position, it was incumbent on the Court to decide that position in order to give effect to the mortgage decree that was to be passed in the case, so that the purchasers in execution sale might not be in doubt or difficulty as to the title to the property in suit. I am quite alive to the principle that in an ordinary mortgage suit, title paramount to and independent of the mortgagor is not a necessary issue and should, as far as possible, be excluded from the trial of a mortgage suit, but that is not an absolute principle which should apply to the circumstances of each case. Where the leaving of such an issue undetermined would lead to inconvenience or hardship, it is proper that it should be tried in a mortgage suit. This was the view taken in the case of Hare Krishna Bhowmik v. Robert Watson and Co. (1). The facts of that case apply to those of the present case. I, therefore, agree with the learned Chief Justice that the issue raised by the defendant No. 2 was properly decided in the Court below and should as well be decided by us in this appeal.

The defendant set up a title derived from a deed of gift executed by Ekbalanissa. There can hardly be any question that it was for him to prove that the deed was validly executed and was intended to transfer the property to him. The evidence on the point has been summarised by the learned Chief Justice and I need hardly repeat it. Suffice it to say that it has not at all been proved in this case that the document was read over and explained to Ekbalanissa, or that she executed it knowing fully the effect of the transfer of all the property then held by her, in favour of her son defendant No. 2. A faint attempt was made to prove it from the evidence of Syed Muhammad Nawab, witness No. 3, the scribe of the deed. This man belongs to the Registration Department and his profession is that of a scribe. He admits in his evidence that Ekbalanissa did not appear before him, nor did she hold any conversation with him. He, therefore, is not competent to prove that the document was explained to Ekbalanissa. Nawab Wazir Bahadur, witness No. 1, examined by commission on behalf of the defendant, a relation of Ekbalanissa, was the proper person to prove the reading over of the document and the explanation of it to Ekbalanissa. He does not say a word about it. Ahsan Raza, another witness to the deed who is referred to as having been present when the document was read over and explained to the Musammal, was not asked a single word about it. Afrosannissa the mother-in-law of Ekbalanissa, the only competent person who could prove the circumstances connected with the execution of the deed, has not been examined at all. It has, therefore, not at all been proved in this case that the document was properly executed by Ekbalanissa after fully understanding its nature and effect.

In the deed of gift the grandmother Afrosannissa is said to be the guardian for the purposes of the deed. The mother Ekbalanissa knew full well that under the Muhammadan Law she had no right to be the guardian of the property of her minor son, and it is with this knowledge of the law that it has been mentioned in the deed that Afrosannissa was the guardian of the minor for the purposes of that deed. Afrosannissa did not at all deal with the property on behalf of the minor. Ekbalanissa continued to be in possession on her own account. There is no reason to disbelieve the evidence on the point given by the plaintiffs' witnesses, one of whom is the Tahsildar who made the collections in respect of the property in dispute. It is futile to contend that the mother managed the property on behalf of the minor. To my mind her interest was antagonistic to that of the minor. It became so undoubtedly in the year 1909, a year after the execution of the deed of gift when she married for the second time. Her children by the second marriage are the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. Under the Muhammadan Law the mother's right to the custody of an infant is forfeited by her marrying a stranger. In 1909, therefore, after her second marriage Ekbalanissa could not possibly be said to have been dealing with the property in the interests of her minor son, defendant No. 2. The mortgage bond itself executed by her along with her mother and sister goes to shew that she mortgaged the property not intending to act on behalf of her minor son, but in her own right as holding possession of the property as heir of Ausaf Ali Khan. This was only ten months after the execution of the deed of gift. Throughout her conduct has been that of asserting the right in her independent of or antagonistic to her being guardian of her son, defendant No. 2, as stated by the deed of gift. There can, therefore, be no doubt as to the absence of intention on her part to transfer the property by virtue of the deed of gift, which as has been shown so thoroughly by the learned Chief Justice was executed in secrecy shortly after the death of her husband at a place where she had no relations to advise her and in circumstances where she could not possibly know the consequences of divesting herself of all interest in the property. We have been through this record for a week and reading it carefully the only impression which has been left upon my mind, and I believe upon the mind of the learned Chief Justice, is that the document was not an operative document and that it was executed on the advice of Afrosannissa, for some purpose best known to her and not disclosed at the trial. Some inkling of that purpose might be had from the evidence of defence witness No. 1, Ahsan Raza, that "the document was executed because Ekbalanissa thought she was only a woman and her son only a minor and fearing lest some one else might take possession of the property she executed the hibanama." I have no hesitation, therefore, in agreeing with the view of the learned Chief Justice in this matter.

It is unnecessary to enter into any detail as to the contention of the learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant regarding the proof of the mortgage bond in suit. The bond was executed not only by Ekbalanissa but by her mother and her sister. The document was properly read over and explained to her, and the evidence of Murad Buksh read with the evidence of the scribe can leave no manner of doubt that the execution and attestation of the document was carried out according to the formalities prescribed by the terms of the Transfer of Property Act. I agree, therefore, that the mortgage bond was duly executed and was for a consideration of Rs. 3,000 due as rent from the property of the mortgagors. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 17, 22—Sale in execution without notice to or substitution of legal representative of deceased judgment-debtor, whether invalid against other judgment-debtor—Sale of part of attached properties—Proceeds sufficient to satisfy decree—Subsequent sale of other lots, validity of.

One of several judgment-debtors died after their properties were duly attached in execution of an ex parte decree passed against them. The widow of the deceased judgment-debtor made an application for setting aside the ex parte decree, which was dismissed for default. Thereafter the decree-holder, without making an application to execute the decree against the widow of the deceased judgment-debtor and without serving a notice on her under Order XXI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, put up the attached properties to sale after due publication of sale processes, and they were sold to a stranger to the decree on two successive days. An application made by all the judgment-debtors including the widow of the deceased judgment-debtor to set aside the sale having been dismissed, an appeal was preferred to the High Court by the judgment-debtors excepting the widow:

Held, (1) that as the widow of the deceased judgment-debtor was not a party to the appeal, the mere fact that the sale might have been capable of being avoided or void against the widow on account of the failure of the Court to issue a notice under Order XXI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, could not affect the sale as against the other judgment-debtors—more especially when the appeal was preferred only on their behalf and the widow was satisfied with the judgment of the lower Court, holding that the interest of her husband was liable be sold in execution of a decree according to which each of the judgment-debtors was liable to pay the whole decretal amount; [p. 700, col. 2.]

(2) that the question whether the sale was invalid was res judicata between the purchasers in execution and the widow of the deceased judgment-debtor by reason of the decision of the Courts below, namely, that the interest that her late husband had in the property was liable to be sold in discharge of his judgment-debt so that it could not be re-opened by the other judgment-debtors in support of their contention that the whole sale was invalid on account of irregularity in conducting it as against the widow [p. 700, col. 2; p. 701, col. 1.]

Order XXI, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code, has nothing to do with the invalidity of the sale made to a stranger who bought without notice of the fact that the amount realised by a previous sale of other lots of the property attached was more than sufficient to satisfy the decree in execution. [p. 701, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

No. 368 of 1917.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the learned District Judge of the 24-Perganas, dated the 11th August 1917, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge at Alipore. The appeal arises in this manner. The appellant along with one Keshab and others had a decree for money obtained against them on the 12th June 1915, and their property duly attached. Then Keshab died. On the 24th August 1915, Keshab's widow applied to set aside the ex parte decree which had been obtained on the 12th June 1915. That application was dismissed for default on the 11th March 1916. On the 20th April 1916, execution was applied for. That was followed by notices and proper publication of the sale proclamation. Eventually, on two dates, namely, on the 20th and the 21st November 1916, the property attached was sold to a stranger, the respondent to the present appeal. Thereupon, all the judgment debtors including the widow of Keshab applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge to set aside the sale in execution. Both the Courts below have found that the attached property was sold for its full value and that there was no material irregularity in conducting the sale. It would be noticed that to this appeal Keshab's widow is not a party. She is satisfied with the judgment of the Courts below, which have found that the interest of her husband was properly sold. Now, the point that has been raised in this appeal is this: That, under the provisions of section 50, Civil Procedure Code, the Court ought to have issued notice on the widow of Keshab as being his representative and that the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property except on an application made to the Court to execute the decree against Keshab's widow and after serving a notice on her under Order XXI, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, and it is said that the failure of the Court to issue a notice under Order XXI, rule 22, on an application to execute the decree against Keshab's widow renders not only the sale void as regards the interest of Keshab but as regards the interest of all the judgment debtors. That is a view which, in the circumstances of the case, cannot, I think, be maintained. The decree was a decree for money obtained against these named persons described as carrying on business under a particular style, but each of the judgment debtors, according to the terms of the judgment, was liable to pay the whole of the amount and execution could be taken out as against him for the whole amount. The mere fact that the sale might have been capable of being avoided or void against Keshab's widow cannot affect the sale as against the other judgment-debtors—more especially so, when the appeal is only preferred on behalf of the other judgment-debtors and Keshab's widow is satisfied with the judgment of the Court holding that the interest of her husband was liable to be sold in satisfaction of the decretal amount. I think the view put forward by the appellant cannot be sustained. The matter as between the purchaser in execution and Keshab's widow is res judicata by reason of the decision of the Courts below, namely, that the interest that her late husband had in the property was liable to be sold to discharge his judgment-debtor. That point having been adjudicated on, and finally adjudicated on, between the purchaser in execution and Keshab's widow cannot be relied upon by the other parties, who have no interest in Keshab's property at all. I think it is impossible at the instance of the present appellant to dispute the judgments of the learned Judges of the Courts below that the appellant cannot rely upon the irregularity or invalidity of the sale as against Keshab's widow.

Then, another point is made that, under the terms of Order XXI, rule 17 of the Code, the whole sale was void on the ground that the first two lots sold were more than sufficient to satisfy the decretal amount. It is stated that there are other decrees against these judgment-debtors which require satisfaction. But Order XXI, rule 17, has nothing to do with the invalidity of a sale made to a stranger who bought without notice of the fact that the amount realized by the sale was more than sufficient to satisfy the decree in execution.

No grounds have been shown to us in this case, having regard to the findings of fact made by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court which are binding on us, why the sale should be set aside. The present appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one hundred rupees for the auction-purchaser and at one gold mohur for the decree-holder.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

No. 417 of 1917.

This appeal will be governed by the above judgment. It is accordingly dismissed with costs, one hundred rupees to the auction-purchaser and one gold mohur to the decree-holder.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104 (2), O.

XLIII, r. 1 (j)—Petition by auction-purchaser to set aside sale, dismissal of, in appeal—Appeal, second, whether lies.

No second appeal lies against an order passed in appeal upon a petition by an auction-purchaser to set aside a sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of South Arcot, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 9 of 1916, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Virdhuachallam, in Execution Petition No. 1 of 1915, in First Appeal No. 3 of 1915, in Miscellaneous Petition for Revision No. 373 1915, in Original Suit No. 1536 of 1914.

Mr. M. S. Ramanuja Ayyangar for Mr. V. Mahadeva Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. K. Venugopala Naidu for Mr. K. Ramachandran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is a purchaser at a Court auction. No second appeal lies against an order passed in appeal upon his petition to set aside a sale by Court on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest.

See section 104 (2) and Order XLIII, rule 1, (j) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and Surendra Mohini Debi v. Loharam Chattopadhyaya (1) and Parameswara Aiyar v. Veerakutti Patter (2) in this Court.

It is suggested for appellant that he was a representative of the judgment-debtor and that section 47, therefore, applies, but it has been held in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) that this is not so where, as in this case, the sale was in execution of a money decree. We have been asked to treat this appeal as a petition for revision but there are no grounds for doing so. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for arrears of rent—Decree with limitation that it should not be executed against tenant personally, validity of.

Where in a suit for rent the Court finds that the defendant-tenant is liable, it should pass a decree in favour of the landlord-plaintiff in the ordinary way without any limitation as to the execution of the decree, e. g., that the decree shall only be executed against the jama in default and not against the tenant personally. [p. 703, col. 1.]

Where in a suit for rent the Court, holding that the plaintiff's evidence as to the defendant's possession of the jama was meagre and unsatisfactory, but was not so bad as could be wholly discarded, made a decree in favour of the landlord with the limitation that the defendant-tenant would not be personally liable under the decree:

Held, that the decree must be set aside and the case remanded for a re-hearing and a clear finding whether the defendant was or was not liable for rent in respect of the jama, and that on that finding there should either be a decree in the ordinary manner without any limitation or the suit should be dismissed altogether. [p. 703, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Nadia, dated the 28th September 1915, modifying the decree of the Munsif, Additional Court at Ranaghat, dated the 28th September 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra De (with him Babu Khitish Chunder Chakraborty), for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit for rent of three jotes. The defence was, first, that the plaintiff had no title to the land in suit, secondly, that the suit for rent was not maintainable as the boundaries of the jotes were not given in the plaint, thirdly, that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. On all the issues raised the Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiff, and decreed the suit in full. On appeal by the defendant, the learned Judge, holding that the plaintiff shall not be entitled to follow the defendant personally for the amount due under the decree but that the decretal amount shall be realised by the sale of the jamas, modified the decree of the first Court. The limitation so placed by the lower Appellate Court upon the decree is not warranted by any law or authority. There is nothing in law which can tie the hands of the landlord-decree-holder in following the tenant-defendant personally for the realization of the rent due under the decree for rent. In view of the above facts the qualified decree ought to be set aside.

Babu Sasi Sekhar Bose, for the Respondent.—The defendant does not claim the jamas, and he is not at all affected if the decree be executed by the sale of the jotes. The reason given by the learned Judge is that as the defendant denies possession of the lands in suit, and as the evidence as regards defendant's possession is not satisfactory, the plaintiff should realise the decretal amount by following the properties.

Babu Jogesh Chandra De, in reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Nadia modifying the decision of the Munsif of Ranaghat. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover rent in respect of three jamas. The defences raised were three. First of all, that the plaintiff had not got the title, secondly, that the suit could not proceed owing to the boundaries of the jotes not being given and thirdly, that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant. The first Court decided the suit wholly in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court has reversed that decision and has given a decree to the plaintiff as regards one jama only. We are not concerned with that jama, because the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court concurred with the Judge of the Primary Court as regards that and there is no appeal with reference to it. It is only with regard to the other two jamas which are called Mudafat Kamal Chand Mullik and Biswa Nath Mullik that our decision is invited, and with respect to them the learned Judge of the Court of Appeal below stated that the evidence was meagre, that there was no evidence on the plaintiff's side that the defendant was in possession of them and that he was not favourably impressed with the witnesses. The learned Judge also remarked that he was not prepared to discard the evidence on the plaintiff's side as concocted or forged but that he must say that it was not sufficient to make the defendant personally liable for the rent of those two jamas. As argued by both sides, that, however, cannot stand. Either the defendant is liable or is not. There is no half way between these two and the case must go back to the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court to re-hear the appeal with regard to these two jamas Mudafat Kamal Chand Mullik and Biswa Nath Mullik and to come to a clear finding as to whether the defendant is or is not liable for rent in respect of them. If he finds that the defendant is liable, he must pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff in the ordinary way without the limitation that has been attempted to be imposed in the judgment appealed against. If the evidence does not establish the defendant's liability, he must decide it that way. Costs will abide the result of the re-hearing by the lower Appellate Court.

Case remanded.

Under Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish his claim. [p. 704, col. 1.]

A wrong view of a Foreign Court as to onus of proof will not have the effect of rendering its judgment one 'not given on the merits' within the meaning of section 13 (b), Civil Procedure Code, or of rendering the judgment erroneous on the face of it. [p. 704, col. 2.]

A foreign judgment is not liable to be vacated merely on the ground of its containing a mistake of law. There must be something in the procedure anterior to the judgment which is repugnant to 'natural justice'. A mere incorrect view of law by a foreign Court will not give the British Indian Courts jurisdiction to say that the judgment is opposed to 'natural justice' within the meaning of section 13 (d), Civil Procedure Code. Dr. K. Pandalai and Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A decree was obtained against the elder brother of the plaintiff in the Cochin Court. In the cause title, he was described as the manager of the joint family. Apparently the plaintiff alleged that the family property was liable for the claim as the debt was contracted for family purposes. The defendant in the Cochin Court pleaded that no decree should be passed against him as manager. Therefore issue No. 7 was framed. The Cochin Court held that the burden of proving that the defendant was not the manager and that the debt was not binding on the family lay upon him, and passed a decree against him personally and against the family properties. The decree was executed against the Cochin properties and then transferred to the British Court under section 44 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In our Court, a claim was preferred by the plaintiff against the attached properties on two grounds:—(a) that the defendant in the Cochin suit had become divided from the plaintiff before suit and (b) that the decree was otherwise not executable against the properties in the possession of the plaintiff. The claim was rejected. The plaintiff has brought this suit to establish his right. The Courts below have dismissed the suit. Hence this second appeal, Dr. Pandalai for one of the brothers, the appellant in Second Appeal No. 2181 of 1915, contended that it was the duty of the Courts below to have decided whether there was a division prior to the Cochin suit and whether the brother who was sued in that Court was the manager. It is clear under rule 63, Order XXI, that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish his claim. Beyond stating that he was divided, he has asked for no issue; and has adduced no evidence on the question of division or managership; the plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to ask us to send the case down for a finding on that question.

The learned Counsel further contended that as the Cochin Court was wrong on the question of the burden of proof, the judgment must be deemed not to have been given on the merits. We are unable to accept this contention. In the Cochin Court, the general law administered relates to Marumakatayam Tarwads; and as in a suit against the Karnavan as such the decree would be binding on the Anandravans, unless the latter could show that the Karnavan was not acting on behalf of the Tarwad, the idea seems to have gained ground that in the case of suits against managers of Marumakatayam families, the onus is on the other members to show that the debt is not binding on them. This is not the law as it obtains in British India. It is for the creditor to prove that the debt is recoverable against the members of the family; we may, therefore, take it that the Cochin Court was right in its view of Hindu Law. Does that render the judgment one not given on the merits? We have not before us all the materials on which the Cochin judgment was based. Consequently, we are unable to hold that the decision was not on the merits. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Keymer v. Viswanatham Reddi (1) has no bearing on the present case. There is no warrant for the proposition that a wrong view as to onus would have the effect of rendering a foreign judgment one not given on the merits.

Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar who appeared for another brother, the appellant in the connected appeal, raised a more serious contention. He argued that as the Cochin Court was manifestly wrong on a point of Hindu Law, the judgment was contrary to natural justice. In this connection, we notice that the language of clause (d) of section 13 has undergone change. In the old Code, the words were "if it is in the opinion of the Court before which it is produced contrary to natural justice." The present language in section 13 (d) is "where the proceedings in which the judgment was obtained are opposed to natural justice." This change carried out the view of Bramwell, B., in Crawley v. Issacs (2). The learned Baron there said: "I think the term 'natural justice' which has been used in reference to foreign judgments refers rather to the form of procedure than to the merits of the particular case" (page 531). Consequently the mere fact that a judgment is wrong in law is not enough. There must be something in the procedure anterior to the judgment which is repugnant to natural justice. That cannot be said of the present case. Further as pointed out by Lord Chelmsford in Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Hunter (3), a mere incorrect view of law by a Foreign Court would not give jurisdiction to our Courts to say that the judgment is opposed to natural justice. See also per Cockburn, C. J., in Imrie v. Castrique (4) and Scott v. Pilkington (5). Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar drew our attention to Messina v. Petrocochino (6). In that case it was pointed out that unless there was a manifest error or fraud in the proceedings of the judgment, the British Court should give effect to it. A wrong view as to onus does not render a judgment erroneous on the face of it. Moreover having regard to Liverpool Marine Credit Co. v. Hunter (3) we are unable to hold that a mistake as to law, which is all Joint owner placed in exclusive possession of some lands by mutual arrangement, whether can be disturbed by co-sharers—Partition, suit for—Joint possession, proof of.

One of the joint owners of an estate, who by mutual arrangement with the other co-sharers has been placed in exclusive occupation of some of the joint lands as representing his share, cannot be equitably disturbed by the latter, unless they seek a partition of all the lands comprised in the estate. [p. 705, col. 2.]

It is essential in a suit for partition that the plaintiffs should establish that they and the defendants are not only joint owners but are also entitled to joint possession, because the object of the suit is to transform the joint possession into possession in severalty [p. 706, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the third defendant in a suit for partition of joint property. The lands are comprised in three plots and are included in an ayma estate within the Hooghly Collectorate. The case for the plaintiffs is that they have acquired a nine-tenths share of the lands and the third defendant has acquired the remaining share. The plaintiffs accordingly seek to have these lands parti-tioned. One of the defences is that this is really a suit for a partial partition and is consequently not maintainable. The Court of first instance overruled this contention, on a ground which cannot be sustained and which need not be examined for our present purpose. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has confirmed the decree of the Trial Court but the reasons assigned by him in support of his conclusion are not intelligible. He sets out the first question for determination in these terms; namely, whether the suit is one for partial partition and whether it is maintainable. But his discussion of the point is difficult to follow. The third defendant has purchased the lands in suit from the fourth defendant and the recital in the conveyance shows that according to the vendors of the appellant he had a certain share in the entire estate and that the lands conveyed were in his occupation as representing that share. This is not admitted by the plaintiffs. If the allegation is true, it may furnish a complete answer to the claim for partition: Mahomed Fazlur Rahman v. Mahomed Fayzur Rahman (1), Burugapalli Sriramulu v. Nandigam Subbarayadu (2), Sris Chandra v. Mahima Chandra (3). If the fourth defendant, who was interested in all the lands of the estate, was, by mutual arrangement with his co-sharers, placed in exclusive occupation of the lands now in controversy, as representing his share, that arrangement cannot equitably be disturbed by the plaintiffs, unless they seek a partition of all the lands comprised in the estate. In the present suit, however, they have limited their claim to the disputed lands which form only a small part of the entire land of the estate. Consequently the plaintiffs must establish that, in respect of the lands in suit, they and the third defendant are joint owners and entitled to joint possession. In order to determine whether they are entitled to joint possession, it must be found whether the vendor of the third defendant was entitled to exclusive possession or to joint possession. has been determined, the validity of the claim for partition cannot be decided. It is essential in a suit for partition that the plaintiffs should establish that they and the defendants are not only joint owners but are also entitled to joint possession, because the object of the suit is to transform the joint possession into possession in severalty *Atrabannessa Bibi v. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him for re-consideration. Costs will abide the result.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE NO. 53 OF 1917.

April 17, 1918.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, Kt, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

E. G. STONEWIGG—DEFENDANT 1ST PARTY
—APPELLANT

Babu DWARKA SINGH AND OTHERS—
PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS
2ND PARTY—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B.C. of 1885), s. 22—Lease of share in joint proprietary right—No specific plot mentioned in lease for cultivation—Tenure-holder—Occupancy right, acquisition of, by lessee—Part proprietor, whether can create ryoti right.

Where a lease is executed in respect of a certain share in a Zemindari and no specific land is mentioned in the lease which the lessee has to cultivate, the lease creates only a tenure. [p. 709, col. 2.]

A tenure-holder cannot acquire a right of occupancy in the lands comprised in his ijara or farm while holding the village as an ijaradar or a farmer. [p. 711, col. 1.]

In order to determine whether the right conferred by a lease is that of a tenure-holder under the Bengal Tenancy Act, the intention of the parties has to be looked into. The principal object of giving the lease of an entire village or a share therein is to enable the lessee to collect rents from tenants. The fact that the lessee may bring under cultivation some lands in the village will not alter the character of the tenure created by the lease. There can be no lease for the purpose of cultivation in a village where no lands to be cultivated are specified in the lease [p. 709, col. 2.]

A lessor, who is a part proprietor in an ijmali or joint village, has no right to create any right in respect of any specific lands in the village to the prejudice of the other co-proprietors without their consent [p. 711, col. 1.]

A co-proprietor in a village cannot acquire any occupancy or non-occupancy right in the village. [p. 711, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 2nd February 1917.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—I have had an opportunity of consulting with my learned brother in this case and I entirely agree with the judgment he is about to pronounce.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for partition of their share in Mouzah Damodarpore, Chak Giasuddin, bearing Tauzi No. 4044. The said village is held by the plaintiffs and the defendants as follows:—The plaintiffs have a share of 2 annas odd, defendant No. 1, 1st party, 4 annas odd, defendants Nos. 2 to 12, 2nd party, 4 annas odd and defendants Nos. 13 to 31, 3rd party, the remaining share in the village. Defendant No. 32, 4th party, is a purchaser from defendant No. 12, one of the defendants 2nd party. The share of the plaintiffs and defendants 2nd party, vis., 6 annas 11 Gandas 3 Kauris 1 Karant 17 Rains, 8 Paras in the village out of the entire 16 annas was leased to the defendant No. 1 under two separate leases executed jointly by the plaintiffs and defendants 2nd party in favour of defendant No. 1. The first lease was executed on the 15th June 1882 and was for a term of 9 years, 1290 to 1298. The second lease was executed on the 20th December 1896 and was for a term of 15 years, 1304 to 1318. In the interval, that is from 1299 to 1303, defendant No. 1 is said to have been in possession of the property under a verbal lease, as negotiation for the second lease executed on the 20th December 1896 was going on between the parties. The second lease expired in 1911. Yet the defendant No. 1 continued to be in possession of the property and refused to give up possession. The plaintiffs further alleged that while in possession of the said share of 6 annas odd leased to him the defendant No. 1 fraudulently got his name recorded as a non-occupancy Raiyat in respect of 45 Bighas 14 Cottas 7 Dhurs in Khatas Nos. 156 and 246 of the Survey Record of Rights finally published in the years 1899 and 1900, although the said lands belong to all the proprietors in the village as their Khas lands and defendant No. 1 has no Raiyati right in the said lands and was only a Thiocadar or farmer in respect of the share of six annas odd, the leasehold property.

On the above allegations the plaintiffs prayed for partition and separate possession of their own share in the village and for declaration that the defendant No. 1 has no right to remain in possession of the leasehold property after the expiry of the lease and that he has no Raiyati interest in respect of the specific 45 Bighas odd which belong exclusively to all the Malikis in the village.

There does not appear to be a serious contest with regard to the claim of the plaintiffs for partition and for recovery of possession of their share in the village leased to the defendant No. 1.

The real dispute relates to the specific lands of 45 Bighas odd referred to above recorded in Survey Khatas Nos. 156 and 246. Defendant No. 1 claims that the said lands were in his possession long prior to the leases referred to above, and that he has acquired a right of occupancy in the said lands. Defendant No. 1, therefore, resists the claim of the plaintiffs to have a partition of the said lands among the proprietors and to recover possession of their share in these lands. The Court below decreed the plaintiffs' suit, holding that defendant No. 1 has acquired no Raiyati right in the lands and that the plaintiffs are entitled to Khas possession of their share in the same. There is a further direction awarding mesne profits to the plaintiffs as claimed by them for the period of their dispossession. Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

The contention of the defendant that he was in possession of the lands as a tenant prior to the leases referred to above has no substance in it. The evidence on behalf of the defendant to prove his possession previous to the first lease of 1882 is wholly unreliable. It consists of the statement of two witnesses, both of whom are cultivators in the village. They say in their evidence recorded in 1917 that defendant No. 1 was in possession of the land for the last 30 to 35 years, that is, from or just a little before 1882 when the first lease was executed. It is neither alleged nor even disclosed in evidence as to how defendant No. 1 came to be in possession of the lands as a tenant before he took lease of the village. No settlement is alleged to have been made with him of the lands in suit by the proprietors of the village. No receipts in proof of payment of rent to any of the landlords are produced on his behalf. In short, there is absolutely no documentary evidence on his behalf to show that he acquired any tenancy right prior to the lease in the lands. On the other hand, the evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs is reliable and shows clearly that defendant No. 1 was not in possession of the lands previous to the leases in question. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant has rightly refrained from relying upon the oral evidence on his side. He, however, relies upon the entries in the Survey Record of Rights (Exhibits B and C). Exhibit B shews that the Record of Rights was finally framed and published on the 17th April 1900, whereas Exhibit C shows that it was published on the 9th June 1899. The former recorded defendant No. 1 as Gair Dakhilkar (non-occupancy tenant) in respect of Khata No. 246 for 6 years and the latter as Gair Dakhilkar for 7 years in respect of Khata No. 156. It is said that the aforesaid entries shew that defendant No. 1 was in possession of the lands as a non-occupancy tenant in or about the year 1892, that is, a year after the expiry of the first lease and 4 years prior to the execution of the second lease of 1896. In the first place, this falsifies the allegation of the defendant that he was in possession of the lands prior even to the first lease. In the second place, the fact that he was in possession after the expiry of the first lease and previous to the execution of the second lease goes only to shew that he simply held over after the expiry of the first lease, as negotiations were going on between the parties for the execution of a fresh lease. There is positive evidence to the effect that defendant No. 1 held over and continued to be in possession after the expiry of the first lease on the same terms as those mentioned in the lease. The Court below has accepted this evidence. I agree with the Court below in its finding that in the interval between the expiry of the first lease and the execution of the second lease, the defendant No. 1 simply held over and was in possession of the lands as a lessee of the 6 annas odd share under the first lease of 1852. He, therefore, came to be in possession of the lands in suit on account of and under the lease executed by the plaintiffs and defendants 2nd party. The absence of rent receipts goes to show that defendant No. 1 was in possession under the lease and not independent of it.

As to the contention of the defendant that the presumption of the entry in the Record of Rights that he was in possession of the lands as a non-occupancy tenant should prevail, it is enough to state that the evidence and the circumstances of this case have fully rebutted the presumption, if any. The entry in the Record of Rights is simply an inference and opinion of the Assistant Settlement Officer as to the status of the defendant.

The next contention on behalf of defendant No. 1 is based on the terms of the lease in question. It is said that he was given a lease for cultivating purposes, that he has been in possession of the lands for over 12 years and has thus acquired an occupancy right in them. The first lease of 1852 has not been produced, but it is agreed at the Bar that the terms of that lease were exactly similar to those of the lease of 1896 which is on the record. The lease executed by the plaintiffs and defendants 2nd party is printed at page 14 and the Kabuliyat or the counterpart of it executed by defendant No. 1, at page 8 of the paper-book. The terms of both are the same and the following is an extract from the lease at page 14:—

"We (the plaintiffs and defendants 2nd party) have given in lease to Mr. E. G. Stonewigg and Mr. John Stonewigg, Englishmen, by occupation indigo planters and proprietors, Managers and residents of Indigo Factory at Gungauli, (1) the entire and whole 6 annas, our ancestral share, and 11 Gandas 3 Kauris 1 Karant 17 Rains and 8 Paras, our purchased share, in all 6 annas 11 gandas 3 kauris 17 rains and 8 paras out of 16 annas of Mouzah Damodarpora, Chak Ghyasuddin, asli mai dakhli, together with Tolas and Badhs appertaining to the said Mouzah, Pergana Saraisa, bearing Tauzi No. 4022 (apparently a mistake for 4044) at an annual jama of Rs. 668-4-6 (2) 3 Kauris 2 Karants 1 Dant and 5 Rains out of 4 Gandas 2 Kauris 2 Karants 2 Dants 17 Rains and 4 Paras, which covers an area of 8 Bighas 16 Cottahs and 3 Dhurs according to our quota, i.e., after excluding 4 Bighas 15 Cottahs and 12 Dhurs of land which is in our possession, the remaining area to the extent of 4 Bighas and 11 Dhurs at an annual Jama of Rs. 24-2-6 at the rate of Rs. 6 per Bigha situate in Mouzah Bhushan Tara, Pergannah Saraisa, Ijmali Patti Touzi No. 12759, Thana Dalsingh Serai, Division Samastipore, district Darbhanga, together with Malwajhat, Saer Wajhat, all grains, Jalkar, Bankar, Ahar, Pokhar, water, reservoir, tanks, Pucca and Kutchha wells, palms, and date trees, gardens of mangoes and jack trees, bamboo topes, fruit bearing and non-fruit bearing trees, occupied and non-occupied houses of tenants, Mutharfa, Bardana, salt, Sayer and fishery rights, etc., in the Mahal, in other words, all the seemindari rights appertaining thereto (3) and 26 Bighas 13 Cottahs and 6 Dhurs, at Rs. 7 per Bigha and 6 Bighas 7 Cottahs and 12 Dhurs at the rate of Rs. 6 per Bigha, in all 33 Bighas and 18 Dhurs of the Zeraif Khudkasht lands situated within our partitioned Pattis in Mouzah Bhushan Tara, Pergannah Saraisa aforesaid, at an annual Jama of Rs. 24-15-0 excepting the items of Barhmotar, Shibator, Neaz Dargah, Chanda of Chandadarans, which have been coming down from before, i.e., we have let out on lease the above shares on a consolidated, fixed and uniform annual Jama of Rs. 917 6-0 in Company's coin, half of which is Rs. 458-11-0, as including road and public works cess for a term of 15 years extending from 1304 to 1318. We have received Rs. 3,000 as Zerpeshgi bearing interest at the rate of 12 annas per cent. per mensem and have appropriated the same. The said Sahab, the Thiccadar, should remain in possession and occupation of the leasehold property up to the end of the term, should make proper cultivation thereof at ease of his mind or should get the same cultivated by others by sowing indigo or any other crops according to his desire; and should enjoy the produce of the same. Having set off the principal amount of the Zerpeshgi money and its interest against the aforesaid amount of fixed rent he shall pay to us the proprietors, on taking receipts and Farkhati, such sums out of the amount of profit as may be found due to us instalment after instalment and year after year...and he shall cease to have any connection with the leasehold property on the expiry of the term. The expenses relating to boundary disputes and new items of expenditure shall be borne by us the proprietors. The expenses relating to the Thana and Police shall be borne by the Thiccadar and the duty of compliance with the orders which may be passed by the officers under the law now in force or that may come in force hereafter shall also rest with him. In the last year of the term, i.e., in 1318, the said Sahab shall retire from the Zerai lands of indigo on payment of rent for 10 annas Kist to us the proprietors for 1319 Fasli according to the above rate if any such Zerai will be found to exist with the Khas partitioned Patti of us the executants in Mouza Bhushat Tara, Perganna Saraisa."

The lease was given to defendant No. 1 of the 6 annas odd share of the plaintiffs and defendants 2nd party in village Damodarpore Chak along with certain shares in another village Bhushar Tara, some specific lands detailed and described in the lease measuring 33 Bighas odd out of the Zerai Khudkasht lands situate in Bhushar Tara. No specific land was leased as appertaining to village Damodarpore Chak with which we are concerned in this litigation. The lands in dispute, 45 Bighas odd, are not at all specifically leased to defendant No. 1, nor are they mentioned in the lease. The lease in question is of a twofold character, (1) it confers a right upon the lessee to hold possession of certain shares in the village in place of the lessors, i.e., to collect the rents of the same and possibly to have some direct cultivation of such lands as the lessee himself could cultivate and (2) it gives the right to cultivate specific lands mentioned in the lease, of the Zerai Khudkasht lands in village Bhushar Tara. The lessee is, therefore, a tenure-holder in respect of 6 annas odd share leased to him in village Damodarpore Chak and a lessee for cultivating purposes in respect of the specific lands mentioned above in Bhushar Tara. In order to meet the double right conferred by the lease a general clause is added, namely—"The said Sahab, the Thiccadar, should remain in possession and occupation of the leasehold property, should make proper cultivation hereof, or should get the same cultivated by others by sowing indigo or any other crops according to his desire". This clause has been relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellant as conferring upon his client a right to cultivate lands in Damodar Chak and hence it is said that the lease was for cultivating purposes and was not a lease of a tenure. In order to determine whether the right conferred by the lease is that of a tenure-holder under the Bengal Tenancy Act, the intention of the parties has to be looked into. The principal object of giving the lease of an entire village or a share therein is to enable the lessee to collect rents from tenants. The fact that the lessee may bring under cultivation some lands in the village will not alter the character of the tenure created by the lease. There could be no lease for the purpose of cultivation in village Damodarpore Chak when no lands to be cultivated are specified in the lease. 'Raiyat' has been defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act to mean "a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating them." If any Raiyati interest was intended to be conferred in respect of the lands situated in Damodarpore Chak, it would have been surely specified and described in detail as in the case of land situated in Bhushar Tara. The Zemindari rights in the share in Damodarpore Chak were clearly intended to be leased to defendant No. 1, as is obvious from the words used in the lease itself. The rights given by the lease have been summed up in the words 'All the Zemindari rights appertaining to it' and the lessee has been described in the lease as Thiccadar. The concluding words quoted in the extract from the lease will shew that there is a special stipulation in respect of the Zerait lands leased to defendant No. 1 for the purpose of cultivating indigo. There is no such stipulation with regard to such lands as the lessee might directly cultivate in Mouzah Damodarpore Chak with which we are concerned. I am, therefore, of opinion that the terms of the lease, particularly the clause relied upon by the appellant, do not confer on the lessee the right of a cultivating tenant or Raiyat in respect of the lands situated in Damodarpore Chak but that in respect of that Mouzah he occupies the position of a tenure-holder. The learned Vakil has relied upon the case of Ramdhari Singh v. Mackenzie (1) for the construction that, he contends, should be put upon a lease of this kind. The lease quoted in that case shews that Mr. Mackenzie was given a lease of 2 annas 13 Gandas share in a village and also of specified lands of 18 Bighas 1 Cottah of Zerait together with 4 Bighas 1 Cottah which he had obtained from certain tenants in the village. The suit in that case related only to the said specific lands of 18 Bighas and 4 Bighas mentioned in the lease. It was found as a fact by the Courts below in that case that about 11 Bighas out of 18 Bighas were Mr. Mackenzie's Kasht lands (Raiyati lands) prior to the execution of the lease and that 4 Bighas were the Kasht lands of other tenants acquired by Mr. Mackenzie. It was further found as a fact by the lower Courts that Mr. Mackenzie was holding land in the village for more than 12 years. In second appeal on the facts found by the lower Courts Rampini and Caspersz, JJ., held that the lease of the particular lands specified therein was only for cultivating purposes and conferred upon the lessee the rights of a Raiyat. The real reason for the decision in that case appears (at page 354) to be that the lessee could not divest himself of his Raiyati right acquired prior to the lease by describing it as a Zerpeshgi lease or the lands as Zerait of the proprietors. It further appears that the share of 2 annas 13 Gandas odd leased to Mr. Mackenzie was held by the lessor landlord exclusively and without any joint ownership with anybody else; whereas in the present case the 6 annas share leased to defendant No. 1 was held jointly by the lessor with other co-proprietors. The facts of that case and the decision in that case with regard to the lease of specific lands cannot be any guide for the construction of the lease in the present case, where we are concerned with the lease of Zemindari rights of a joint share in a village given to defendant No. 1. On the other hand, the lease in the present case agrees in all its material terms with the lease referred to in the case of Bujrangi Raut v. Mackenzie (2) decided by Rampini and Brett, JJ. Mr. Justice Rampini who was a party to the decision of the case in Ramdhari Singh v. Mackenzie (1) makes a distinction, with which I entirely agree, between a lease of specific lands and the lease of certain shares in a village. He says:-

"Now the learned District Judge has interpreted these leases as being cultivating leases and as giving occupancy rights to the defendants; and there is not the slightest doubt that as regards the first lease, that is, the lease of the 4th December 1861 relating to the 15 Bighas, he is perfectly right. But we cannot take the same view as he has done of the remainder of the leases. In the first place it will be seen that in Exhibit F, the grantee is spoken of as Thiccadar and in Exhibit 11, dated the 12th April 1874, the grantee is described in a similar manner. Although this latter lease gives to the grantee the right to cultivate personally the share of the Mouzah or to cause it to be cultivated by others, yet there are certain provisions in it which seem to us to convey but the rights of a tenure-holder, as it will be seen that the plaintiffs convey to the grantee by this document all Zemindari rights save and except Brohmotar, Shebattar and Bishnuprit land, etc., prohibited by law". This view was upheld in the case of Raghubar Mahto v. H. Manners (3), decided by Mookerjee and Teunon JJ., where the decision in Ramdhari Singh v. Mackenzie (1) was distinguished and where the lease was similar in its terms to that in the present case. The interpretation put upon the lease in that case would, therefore, apply to the present case. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the lease in question conferred upon the defendant only the rights of a tenure-holder in respect of the lands in village Damodarpore Chak.

If defendant No. 1 was a tenure-holder, he could not acquire a right of occupancy in the lands in suit comprised in his Ijara or farm while holding the village as an Ijaradar or farmer, vide clause 3, section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as it has already been shewn that he came to be in possession of the land in suit after the execution of the first lease as a lessee and that he was never in possession of the lands in suit prior to that lease. Again the lessors in this case were part proprietors of the village which was an Ijmali or joint village. They had no right to create any right in respect of any specific lands in the village to the prejudice of the other co-proprietors without their consent. Defendant No. 1 acquired only such rights to hold possession of the lands as the lessor had. The lessor could cultivate specific lands; he could not possibly acquire a tenancy right as against the other co-proprietors, inasmuch as he could not hold adversely to himself and other co-proprietors. This principle has recently been pointed out in Ram Lal Sukul v. Bhela Gazi (4). It has not been suggested, and in fact there is absolutely nothing on the record to shew, that defendant No. 1 acquired a tenancy right in the lands in suit as against the other co-proprietors.

It was urged on behalf of the respondents that the defendant No. 1 is a co-proprietor in the village and was co-proprietor when the lease was executed. He could not, therefore, under clause 2 of section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act acquire any occupancy right in the village. This point does not appear to have been raised in the Courts below. There is no issue, nor any finding on it. On the other hand, the learned Vakil on behalf of defendant No. 1 tried to shew that the defendant No. 1 acquired his proprietary interest in the lands from 1895 to 1915, that is, subsequent to the execution of the lease. A reference has been made to certain entries in a certified copy of extracts from Register D of the Collectorate. This Register shews that the defendant No. 1's name was mutated in respect of 4 annas odd in place of other proprietors from 1895 to 1915 on the basis of purchases made by him from time to time from proprietors, but when those purchases were actually made is not mentioned. Possibly these purchases were after the lease taken by the defendant. But with respect to 14 Gandas he has been entered in the Register as original proprietor without any date. That would shew that he was a part proprietor in respect of 14 Gandas soon after the Land Registration Act came into force in 1876 and hence prior to the first lease of 1882. If that is so, then clause 2 certainly bars him from acquiring any right of tenancy, occupancy or non-occupancy, in the lands.

The defendant lastly relies upon clause 2, section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for his contention that he cannot be dispossessed from the lands but that he is only liable to payment of rent to the co-proprietors. This might have been so as long as the village was held jointly by all the proprietors, but on a partition of the lands the defendant as co-proprietor has no right to claim possession of the lands under clause 2, section 22 of the Act. The clause is intended to prevent a co-proprietor from acquiring occupancy rights in the lands transferred to him: vide Ram Lal Sukul v. Bhela Gazi (4). In the next place the argument of the defendant is based upon the assumption that he acquired an occupancy right in the land. But as a matter of fact, as already shewn, neither under the lease nor upon evidence on the record the defendant acquired any Raiyati interest, occupancy or non-occupancy in the lands in suit. I fail to appreciate the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant that conceding that he could not acquire an occupancy or non-occupancy, right under clause 2 as a co-proprietor, still he has some interest under clause 2, section 22, and that he could not be deprived of that right to hold possession of the lands. But the defendant was either a Raiyat or a landlord. It has been shown that he is not a Raiyat and is only a co-proprietor. He is, therefore, bound to give up possession of the lands held by him as a lessee and to allow the lands to be partitioned and distributed between the co-proprietors of the village.

(4) 6 Ind. Cas. 370; 37 C. 709; 14 C. W. N. 814; 12 C. L. J. 15.

MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARY COMPANY, LIMITED v. DINA NATH SAHU

As a matter of fact there is absolutely no evidence on behalf of the defendant No. 1 that the lands were either cultivated by himself or on his behalf. All that is said in evidence is that the lands were in his possession, which would be so as he was a lessee of the share in the village and as also he was holding the entire 16 annas of the village partly as a lessee and partly as a co-proprietor (vide evidence of plaintiffs' witness No. 2, Genda Lal Patwari, page 13 of the paper-book). Thus it is clear that even if under the lease the defendant No. 1 could acquire tenancy right in respect of such lands as he would cultivate himself or through others, he has failed to shew that the lands in question were actually in his cultivating possession directly or through others and hence he could not acquire any Raiyati interest in the lands. The claim of the defendant No. 1 to hold the lands as a Raiyat or tenant must, therefore, fail and the plaintiffs are entitled to have them brought under partition.

The third point urged by the appellant is that the suit of the plaintiffs is barred by limitation. This contention is based upon Schedule III-1 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which requires that suits for ejectment of non-occupancy tenants should be brought within six months from the expiry of the lease under which the lands are held. In this case there is no claim by the plaintiffs to eject the defendant from the lands. The plaintiffs' suit is principally and solely a suit for partition of his share in the village. It is simply prayed that the lands in suit be declared to be the lands of the Maliks and not the lands in respect of which defendant No. 1 has acquired occupancy or non-occupancy rights. This declaration was necessary to obtain the principal relief. Again, as held above, defendant No. 1 has neither occupancy nor non-occupancy rights in respect of these lands and, therefore, Schedule III-1 (a) has no application. The Full Bench case of Janki Singh v. Jagannath Das (5), relied upon by the appellant, does not go far enough to hold that the present suit is barred by limitation. I, therefore, hold that the suit is not at all barred by limitation.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARY COMPANY, LIMITED—DECREE-HOLDERS—APPELLANTS
versus

DINA NATH SAHU AND OTHERS—
JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution, application for, dismissal of—Fresh application, maintainability of—Limitation—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), Sch. III, cl. 6.

In execution of a rent-decree, the property of the judgment-debtor was sold, but the sale was afterwards set aside on the latter's application. The decree-holder taking no further steps, the executing Court thereupon passed the following order: "Sale set aside; the decree-holder taking no further steps, the case is dismissed for default." On a second application for execution being made by the decree-holder, beyond the three years' period limited by clause (6) of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act:

Held, that the second application could not be regarded as one in continuation of the previous application for execution, which ended with the order of the Court dismissing that execution case for default of the decree-holder. [p. 713, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 14th November 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 4th Court at that place, dated the 21st July 1916.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta, (with him Babu Probodh Kumar Das), for the Appellants.—The decree-holder applied for execution on the 6th March 1914. The property of the judgment-debtor was sold on the 25th April 1914. On the 23rd June 1914, the judgment-debtor made an application for setting aside the sale, which was set aside on 16th September 1914. On 28th September 1914 the execution case was dismissed for default on the part of the decree-holder.

MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARY COMPANY LIMITED v. DINA NATH SAHU.

After the setting aside of the sale and within one month from 16th September 1914, the decree-holder appealed against the order setting aside the sale and the appeal was dismissed on 2nd January 1915. On 16th February 1916 the decree-holder made this application.

This application is in continuation of the previous application. I rely on Abdul Khayar Abdul Haque Chowdhury v. Reazuddin Ahmad Chowdhury (1). The case of Abdul Khayar Abdul Haque Chowdhury v. Reazuddin Ahmad Chowdhury (1) is exactly in point, there also the sale was set aside.

[RICHARDSON, J.—What case is against you?]

The case of Sarup Ganjan Singh v. Robert Watson & Co., (2) is against me.

The Judge says that it is against but really it is not so, it is distinguishable. See also Keramut Ali v. Nagendra Kishore Roy (3) and Manorath Das v. Ambika Kanta Bose (4).

[RICHARDSON, J.—That was decided under the old Code.]

Babu Santimoy Majumdar, for the Respondents.—The execution case was dismissed for default. As long as the dismissal order is there, no application can be treated as an application in continuation. See Bharat Chandra Nath v. Yasin Sarkar (5).

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a rent decree and the question for determination is whether an application for execution of the decree, is or is not out of time. An application for execution of a rent decree must be made within the period limited by clause (6) of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. For the present purpose that period is 3 years from the date of the decree, which was made on the 14th June 1911. The relevant dates are as follows. The first application for execution was made on the 6th March 1914; on the 25th April of the same year the property of the judgment-debtor was sold by the Court. On the 23rd June following the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside and on the 16th September the sale was set aside. On the 28th September the Court made this order: "Sale set aside, decree-holder taking no further steps, case dismissed for default." The decree-holder appealed from the order setting aside the sale. It does not appear whether the appeal was filed before or after the 28th September but the appeal was dismissed on the 2nd January 1915. The decree-holder took no further step for over a year. Then on the 16th February 1916 he made the application to which the appeal relates. The Courts below have held that the application is out of time, because it was made more than three years after the date of the decree.

It is contended, however, for the decree-holder that this application is merely a continuation of his previous application of the 6th March 1914. His learned Pleader relies on the case of Abdul Khayar Abdul Haque v. Reazuddin Ahmad Chowdhury (1) and if it were not for the order of the 28th September 1914 dismissing the previous application for default there might be something to be said in decree-holder's favour. But there is that order on the record. It is not a mere order striking a case off the file for the convenience of the Court. It is an order by which the decree holder was bound. He took no steps by way of review to have the order set aside or modified and he waited for more than a year before he came into Court with his present application. In my opinion the previous application ended with the order of the 28th September 1914, and in that view there can be no continuity between the previous application and the present application. I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the Courts below and would dismiss this appeal with costs, one gold mehur.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 31st July 1914. The plaintiff, who is a Hindu female, brought the suit for a declaration of her title as the reversionary heir of her deceased father to certain properties and for recovery of possession, following on the declaration that a certain deed of compromise entered into in Suit No. 21 of 1910 was inoperative and that certain transfers made by the plaintiff's mother following on the compromise were invalid and without legal necessity. The various defendants in the suit, excepting the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 who are the plaintiff's sons and who took no part in this litigation, filed different defences. The defendant No. 5 raised a distinct plea that the plaintiff before the time the succession opened was leading an unchaste life and was, therefore, according to the Hindu Law, incapable of inheriting on the death of her mother. It has been argued before us that that view of the Hindu Law is not accurate and a text-book has been cited in support of that contention. We are not concerned with the Hindu Law as it has been interpreted in other presidencies. On the decisions of learned Hindu Judges of this Court, it is established without doubt that the rule as it obtains in the Bengal School of Hindu Law is that any female who was unchaste before the succession opened out is excluded from the inheritance. There cannot be any doubt as to that. It is sufficient to refer to the two cases that were cited, namely, the cases of Ramnath Tolapattro v. Durga Sundari Debi (1) and Ramananda v. Raikishori Barmani (2). In each of those cases, one of the learned Judges was a Hindu and the cases they cited in the course of their judgments carried the case back much earlier than the dates of those cases. It is much too late now to raise that that is not the rule according to the Bengal School of Hindu Law. The question is, "was the learned Judge of the Court below right when he held that the plaintiff, before the date when the succession opened, that is the date of the death of her mother, was leading an unchaste life?" The evidence consists, first of all, of the statement on oath subjected to cross-examination of the mother, who stated without doubt that her daughter, the plaintiff, was leading an irregular life with the person who was looking after the present suit on behalf of the plaintiff—a man called Lahori Koer, who is the father-in-law of the elder son of the plaintiff. This man was the Mukhtear of the mother and that this man was living on the closest terms with this woman, the plaintiff, cannot be doubted on the evidence. They lived in the same house and the documentary evidence shows that, on the 10th June 1910, the plaintiff and Lahori Koer were convicted of an offence under section 294, Indian Penal Code, that is, singing an obscene song in a public place. It has been suggested that the Rajendra Bala mentioned in the record of the Court in that criminal case is some other Rajendra Bala. Well, first of all, the plaintiff herself in her deposition has not sworn that she was not convicted by the Magistrate of an offence under section 294, Indian Penal Code. Although, in the first place, in her deposition in the present case she said that she was not, but eventually she said that she could not remember whether she was. Another fact is that Lahori Koer who conducted the case on behalf of the plaintiff and who was present in Court did not go to the witness-box to explain who was the Rajendra Bala who was convicted along with him of an offence under section 294, Indian Penal Code. Then there is the evidence of one Haripada Mandal who is a cousin of the plaintiff, and his statement is that the plaintiff and Lahori Koer were living together and leading an irregular life. On that evidence the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the evidence established that the plaintiff was leading an irregular and unchaste life at the time when the succession opened. I think the evidence can lead to only one result, and that is that the plaintiff was unchaste at the time the succession opened out to her. She was found singing an obscene song with a man in a public place and was taken before a Magistrate and fined Rs. 15 or 20 or, in the alternative, was sentenced to 15 days' rigorous imprisonment; and no explanation has been given to show how this woman, if she was leading the ordinary life of a modest woman in the house of Lahori Koer, came to be out with him singing these sing-songs, which apparently they sang in concert or unison, on the day when the complaint was made by the gentleman named Satya Kinkar Mukerjee. If that is right, what is the position of the plaintiff's suit? First of all, if the compromise is binding, this suit must fail. This suit only asks for relief that the compromise is void and illegal. If the compromise is binding the present suit must fail and the rights which the plaintiff has got under the compromise she can enforce in a proper suit. If the compromise is not binding, then what interest has the plaintiff got to maintain the present suit? If the compromise is not binding, the only right she has got would be as the heiress of her father on the death of her mother. But it has been found by the learned Judge of the Court below that at the time the succession opened out to her—a finding in which I agree, the plaintiff was unchaste. According to the rules of the Hindu Law, the plaintiff would be excluded from succession which she would have taken if she had been leading a chaste life. In that view, the present suit cannot succeed. The plaintiff, as already stated, if the compromise is binding, has got the right to enforce it in a proper suit. If it is not binding, which is the present case, then she cannot maintain the present suit, on the ground that she is excluded from succession. I think that, on that view, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. The hearing fee will be divided amongst the defendants who have appeared on the following scale: Defendant No. 1 Rs. 150; defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 Rs. 75 and defendants Nos. 8 and 9 Rs. 75.

THE B. B. & C. I. RAILWAY—DEFENDANT
—RESPONDENT.

Master and servant—Liability of master for wrongful act of servant—Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 108, 121, 128, 131.

A master is liable for the wrongful act of his servant where the servant, acting in a matter which is within the scope of his authority, that is, within the course of his employment, commits a wrong by exceeding the authority vested in him. The act itself which constitutes the wrong may be in excess of the servant's authority, but if in thus transgressing his authority the servant is doing in the master's interests one of the class of acts which the master has employed him to do, then the master is liable. [p. 719, col. 1.]

Plaintiff was travelling in one of the defendant Company's trains. The compartment occupied by the plaintiff was greatly overcrowded to the inconvenience and discomfort of the occupants. After ineffectual efforts to obtain assistance from the guard or the station master at a station, the plaintiff stopped the train by pulling the communication chain. Thereupon the driver and the guard got down from the train, the driver pulled the plaintiff out of the compartment and cuffed and slapped him, the guard assisting in this assault. The plaintiff sued the defendant Company for damages for the assault committed on the plaintiff by the company's servants:

Held, that the offence of pulling the communication chain without reasonable and sufficient cause was one in respect of which the Company itself had no power of arrest and that, therefore, the assault committed by its servants was outside the scope of their authority and the course of their employment and the Company was not liable therefor. [p. 720, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the following judgment of KAJIJI, J.—The plaintiff, Girjashankar Dayashankar Vaidya, who is a managing clerk in a firm of Solicitors, claims from the defendant Railway Company Rs. 3,000 as damages for the wrongful and tortious acts of the servants of the defendant Railway Company. It appears that the plaintiff and his wife were, on 18th March 1916, travelling in a third class compartment from Charni Road Station to Choltan. It is alleged that there were nine passengers in the compartment when the train left Charni Road Station and more got in at the intermediate stations and when the train reached Mahalaxmi Station, there were in all about twenty five passengers in a compartment intended to hold ten. The plaintiff attempted to communicate with the guard and the station master at the Mahalaxmi Station but could not. After the train left Mahalaxmi Station, some of the passengers attempted to molest the plaintiff. The plaintiff and his wife got frightened, so the plaintiff pulled the emergency chain and the train stopped. The plaintiff called out for the guard, but before the guard could come up the driver of the train ran up to the plaintiff's compartment, caught hold of him, pulled him out of the compartment, struck him several times with his fist. In the meantime the guard came up to the spot and he slapped the plaintiff several times on his face. The defendants denied that the guard or driver was acting in discharge of his employment when he committed the alleged assault upon the plaintiff. They never authorised their guard or driver to commit any assault upon the plaintiff and that if any assault was committed, it was done in direct defiance of the orders, rules and regulations of the defendants. Hence the present suit. As the plaintiff stood, certainly did not disclose any cause of action against the defendants, so I allowed the plaint to be amended and it was amended by inserting at the end of paragraph 8 of the plaint the following:—

"The plaintiff says the said wrongful and tortious acts were done by the said driver and guard in the course of their employment and in the discharge of their duty as the servants of the Company and whilst acting within the scope of their authority. The plaintiff, therefore, prays that the defendant Company is liable for the said acts of their servants."

On this, Counsel for the defendants raised the following additional issue, viz.:

Whether the acts complained of were done in the course of their employment or in discharge of their duty as servants of the Company and whether they were within the scope of their employment?

Counsel for the defendants admitted that the compartment in which the plaintiff was travelling was overcrowded, that the emergency chain was pulled by him twice, that the driver and the guard were, on 18th March 1916, and are still in the defendant Company's service and that the driver and the guard committed the assault as alleged. The only question for the determination of the Court is whether the acts complained of were done by the driver and the guard in the course of their employment or in discharge of their duty and whether they were within the scope of their authority, for which the defendant Company would be liable in damages to the plaintiff. The general rule is that a master is liable for the acts and neglects and defaults of his servants in the course of their service or employment. We have, therefore, to see what is meant by the course of service or employment. The injury in respect which a master becomes subject to this kind of vicarious liability may, according to Pollock, be caused in the following four ways:—(1) It may be the natural consequence of something being done by a servant with ordinary care in execution of the master's specific orders. (2) It may be due to the servant's want of care in carrying on the work or business in which he is employed. (3) The servant's wrong may consist in excess or mistaken execution of a lawful authority. Or (4) it may even be a wilful wrong, such as assault, provided the act is done on the master's behalf and with the intention of serving his purposes. It will be seen that (1) and (2) ways do not apply to the facts of this case. Therefore, to establish a right of action against the master in such a case as the present it must be shown that (a) the servant intended to do on behalf of his master something of a kind which he was in fact authorised to do, and (b) the act, if done in a proper way or under the circumstances erroneously supposed by the servant to exist, would have been lawful. It is clear that the cause which led to the assault is the pulling of the emergency chain. It is contended by the plaintiff's Counsel that under the Indian Railways Act if, in the opinion of any railway servant, anybody pulls the emergency chain without reasonable and sufficient cause and stops the train, he thus obstructs a railway servant from the discharge of his duty, viz., moving, it is the duty of the railway servants to arrest such a person and take him to the station master. It, therefore, becomes necessary to consider sections of the Indian Railways Act which are applicable to this case. Section 108 deals with the pulling of the emergency chain. Section 108 runs as follows:—

"If a passenger, without reasonable and sufficient cause, makes use of or interferes with any means provided by a railway administration for communication between passengers and the railway servants in charge of a train, he shall be punished with fine which may extend to fifty rupees."

It is contended by plaintiff's Counsel that section 121 of the Indian Railways Act must also be read with section 108. Section 121 runs as follows:—

"If a person wilfully obstructs or impedes any railway servant in the discharge of his duty, he shall be punished with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees."

According to plaintiff's contention a person who pulls the emergency chain, without reasonable and sufficient cause, wilfully obstructs or impedes a railway servant in the discharge of his duty, viz., of running the train, and thus makes himself liable for prosecution under sections 108 and 121 of the Indian Railways Act. In support of this contention Counsel for the plaintiff says that railway officials think so too and places reliance on a passage which appears in Exhibit B, which is a letter, dated

1st May 1916, from the General Traffic Manager to the Loco. and Carriage Superintendent. The passage relied on is:—

"I may add that in such cases the Company's servants are under the Railway Act authorised to remove passengers who obstruct the Company's servants in their duty of running the train."

The first remark I should like to make in this connection is that what railway officials thought is in no way binding and that this was written by the Traffic Manager after consulting the Company's Pleader who was defending the driver in the Police Court and in mitigation of his offence for lesser sentence, and this remark in no way binds the railway company and it is not the view which either the driver or the guard took of the situation. Therefore, in my opinion, the plaintiff's contention is not only far-fetched but absolutely untenable and that section 121 of the Indian Railways Act has no application to the facts of the present case, and, in my opinion, the only section which is applicable is section 108 of the Indian Railways Act. The result is that in a case where a person without sufficient and reasonable cause pulls the emergency chain he will render himself liable for prosecution under section 108 only, and not under section 121 also for preventing the running of the train and thus obstructing or impeding a railway servant in discharge of his duty. The reason why Counsel for the plaintiff put forward this contention is obvious, for if a person commits an offence under section 121 of the Indian Railways Act then such person can be arrested under section 131 of the same Act without warrant or other written authority by any railway servant or by any other person whom he may call to his aid without any other requirements being first complied with. But if the offence committed is one under section 108, then in such a case a person who has committed such offence can be arrested only after the requirements set out in section 132 of the Indian Railways Act are complied with and those requirements are shortly: (1) there is reason to believe that he will abscond; (2) his name and address are unknown; (3) refuses on demand to give name and address; (4) there is reason to believe that the name or address given by him is incorrect. There is no evidence in this case to show that any railway official or servant or engine driver or guard ever asked plaintiff his name or address, much less he refused to give one, and I think from the evidence it is clear that the engine driver had absolutely no reason to believe that the plaintiff would abscond as he was safe in the compartment. Under these circumstances the Railway Company itself would have had no authority under the Indian Railways Act to commit or do the acts complained of with a view to arrest the plaintiff, much less its servants, and the driver and guard by doing the acts which they have done in this case cannot make the Railway Company liable in damages, and that this is the law is clear from the passage at page 255 of Volume XX of Halsbury's Laws of England. The passage I refer to is as follows:—

"The master is not liable merely because the servant, in doing the act, honestly believed that he was acting in his master's interests and intended the act to be for the master's benefit: Byrne v. Londonderry Tramway Co. (1)."

The case which is in point is Poulton v. London and South Western Railway Co. (2). I have carefully considered every case which has been cited by Mr. Wadia for the plaintiff and the importance of them, like Goff v. Great Northern Railway Company (3), v. Seymour Greenwood (4), Limpus v. London General Omnibus Company Limited (5), have been considered and distinguished by the learned Judges in Poulton v. London and South Western Railway Co. (2). To my mind it is clear that the defendant Company had no power under the Indian Railways Act to arrest the plaintiff for pulling the emergency chain; therefore, authority cannot be implied to have been given to the servants to do an act outside the scope of the employment. I, therefore, hold that the acts complained of were not done in the course of their employment or in discharge of their duty as servants of the Company and they were not within the scope of the employment. The result is that the suit must be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

BACHELOR, J.—The appellant before us was the plaintiff in the Court below, his suit having been dismissed by Kajiji, J. The plaintiff, who is a managing clerk in a firm of Bombay Solicitors, brought the suit to recover damages from the defendant Railway Company, on account of the wrongful and tortious acts of their servants, an engine driver and a guard.

Owing to various admissions made by the parties at the trial, the facts have not been elicited from the witnesses with the usual completeness, but there can be no doubt upon the record what the essential facts are, and Mr. Campbell for the Railway Company did not press his attempt to give to them any other complexion than that which appeared to the learned trial Judge. These facts are as follows:—

On the night of the 18th March 1916, the plaintiff was a third class passenger in one of the defendant's trains. The plaintiff's compartment was greatly overcrowded to the inconvenience and discomfort of the occupants. After ineffectual efforts to obtain assistance from the guard or the station master at a station, the plaintiff stopped the train by pulling the communication chain. The train was re-started, but no other incident then occurred, nor was any step taken to relieve the overcrowdedness of the compartment. Consequently when the train had gone some little distance further on its journey, the plaintiff again stopped it by pulling the communication chain. Thereupon the driver and the guard got down from the train: the driver pulled the plaintiff out of the compartment and cuffed and slapped him, the guard assisting in this assault. The degree of violence used is not now material: it was, I think, probably not much, but the assault is admitted, and the plaintiff naturally resents the indignity and affront to which he was subjected. The plaintiff was arrested by the driver and guard at Dadar Station, where he was handed over to the station master: his statement having been recorded by the Police, he was released and allowed to go on to his destination. The guard and driver were prosecuted to conviction before the Magistrate, who fined them for the assault.

The only question in appeal is whether, in the above state of facts, the Railway Company are liable for the wrongful acts of their servants.

Now the general proposition of law applicable to the question of the master's liability for the wrongful acts of his servants may, for our present purposes, be stated thus: the master is liable where the servant, acting in a matter which is within the scope of his authority, that is, within the course of his employment, commits a wrong by exceeding the authority vested in him. The act itself which constitutes the wrong may be and usually is in excess of the servant's authority, but if in thus transgressing his authority the servant is doing in the master's interests one of the class of acts which the master has employed him to do, then the master is liable. It is unnecessary to refer to decided cases in support of this general proposition, which, as a broad statement of the law, is well established and has been accepted by both sides at the Bar.

It remains to see how this principle is to be applied in such a case as this, where a person is arrested and wrongfully assaulted by the servant. Here, in conformity with the general principle, the law, as I understand it, is this: the assault being an incident of the arrest, and being an excess of the servant's authority, the master is liable if, and only if, the arrest was within the servant's authority. In other words, if the supposed offence for which the person was arrested was an offence for which the master himself would have had authority to make the arrest, then the master will be liable: he will not be liable where he himself, for the alleged offence, would not have been justified in arresting the offender, for in such a case the arresting would be beyond and outside the course of the servant's employment, and the added assault would not be referable to any of the class of acts which the master had impliedly put the servant there to do.

This principle may be illustrated by a comparison of two decisions, that in Poulton v. London and South Western Railway Co. (2) and that in Bayley v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Co. (6). In the former case the plaintiff was detained in custody under a station master's orders because he refused to pay the railway fare for a horse travelling by one of the defendant Company's trains. It was held that the Company were not liable for the wrongful arrest on the ground that, since the Company themselves would not have had the power to arrest the plaintiff on the assumption that he had wrongfully taken the horse by the train without paying, there could be no authority implied from them to the station master to arrest the plaintiff on this assumption. Bayley's case (6) fell on the other side of the line. Bayley, a passenger on the defendant Company's railway, sustained injuries in consequence of being violently pulled out of a railway carriage by one of the defendant's porters, who acted under the mistaken impression that Bayley, the plaintiff, was in the wrong train. The Court held the Company liable on the ground that the removal of a passenger from a carriage by a porter was an act within the porter's authority, so that the injuries caused by the plaintiff's violent ejection were caused by the porter in the course of doing one of the class of the acts which the Company had put him there to do.

There are numerous other cases in the books which illustrate the same principle, notably, Dyer v. Munday (7), and Rowlatt, J.'s decision in Ormiston v. Great Western Railway Company (8). But probably no more concise or lucid statement of the distinction could be found than the words used by Mr. Justice Blackburn, as he then was, in the course of the argument in Poulton's case (2). Counsel for the plaintiff there contended that the station master was the person in authority to do all acts required by the exigency of business, and that consequently the Company were bound by his act in arresting the plaintiff: and Counsel cited, in support, a case where a passenger was wrongfully arrested on the mistaken assumption that he had not paid his fare: Goff v. Great Northern Railway Company (3). Blackburn, J., interposing said:—"In that case there was a power to arrest, on the assumption that the facts were as the officer arresting supposed; here there is no such power."

The application of these principles to the present facts raises the question whether the defendant Company would have had authority to arrest the plaintiff for the offence for which the Company's servants arrested him. That offence was, clearly on the evidence, the pulling of the communication chain "without reasonable and sufficient cause," an offence made punishable under section 108 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890. It is unnecessary to decide whether the plaintiff had, or had not, reasonable and sufficient cause. I will assume, in favour of his present suit, that he had not, and that, in consequence, he laid himself open to punishment under section 108. But for this offence, it is admitted that, under the Act, the defendant Company had no authority to arrest him. It follows, as my learned brother, Kajiji, J., held, that the Company cannot be held liable for the assaults committed by their servants in the course of the arrest. To escape from this difficulty Mr. Setalvad for the plaintiff ingeniously contended that the offence for which the arrest must be taken to have been made was an offence falling, not only under section 108, but also under sections 121 and 128. If this contention were sound, the plaintiff would, no doubt, be entitled to succeed, for persons offending under section 121 or section 128 may, as provided by section 131, be arrested without warrant by any railway servant. In my opinion, however, the contention is not sound. Section 121 deals with the obstructing of any railway servant in the discharge of his duty, and section 128 (so far as we are now concerned with it) provides punishment for any person who obstructs any rolling stock upon any railway. It is admitted that, owing to the working of the mechanical contrivance, the pulling of the communication chain automatically stops the train, which cannot be re-started till the vacuum has been restored. Mr. Setalvad consequently contended that the plaintiff's action here obstructed the driver in the discharge of his duty to keep the train running, and obstructed the rolling stock of the train by bringing it to a stop. It may be admitted that, as a mere matter of words, some colour may be lent to this argument from the generality of the phraseology in sections 121 and 128, and if section 108 did not exist, the plaintiff's offence might perhaps be brought within the scope of either of the later sections. But interpreting the Act as we have it, I think that Mr. Setalvad's construction is forced and unnatural. Reading the sections together, the fair conclusion seems to me to be that the stopping of the train by the wrongful pulling of the communication chain is one special kind of obstruction, for which the Legislature has made special provision. It has ordained a particular punishment, which is lighter than that allowed for other obstructions, presumably because the stopping of the train by this mechanical means is not likely to be attended with any danger to the travelling public. This differentiation of the consequences or results seems to me strongly in favour of the view that the special provisions of section 108 are not to be controlled by the more general language of the wider sections. If Mr. Setalvad's contention were allowed, it would follow that in every case where a passenger wrongfully pulled the communication chain, he would be liable to imprisonment for a term of two years under section 128; but in section 108 the Legislature expressly enacts that for this particular offence the maximum penalty shall be a fine of Rs. 50. Remembering that we are dealing with penal sections, I think that the imposition of the heavier punishment would be a result wholly outside the contemplation of the Legislature; in other words, the plaintiff's offence is, under the Act, punishable under section 108, and not under section 121 or section 128. The rule of construction here applied is but a particular case of the general principle embodied in the maxim, generalia specialibus non derogant, which is invoked in the interpretation of a later general Act bearing upon an earlier special Act. In explaining this maxim in Barker v. Edger (9), Lord Hobhouse used the following language, which, mutatis mutandis, appears to me to guide us to the true meaning of the earlier and the later sections in the Act now under consideration:—"When", said his Lordship, "the Legislature has given its attention to a separate subject, and made provision for it, the presumption is that a subsequent general enactment is not intended to interfere with the special provision..." So here: the earlier special provision must be held to control the general provision quoad the particular case specially provided for.

On these grounds I come to the conclusion that for the offense for which defendants' servants arrested the plaintiff, the defendants themselves would have had no authority to arrest him, and, consequently, that the defendants are not liable for the assaults committed by their servants. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the tenant defendants in a suit for apportionment of rent and for recovery of arrears at the rate settled by the decree. The Courts below have decreed the suit. On the present appeal, the tenants do not attack the decree for apportionment of rent, but they contend that the claim for arrears should have been dismissed, inasmuch as at the date of the institution of the suit, there were no arrears due. This contention is based on the fact that between the 15th May 1911 and the 19th August 1912, the tenants had made sixteen deposits in Court under section 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is not disputed that if these deposits were validly made, no arrears were due at the date of the commencement of the suit. The question in controversy consequently reduces to this: Were the deposits made in accordance with section 61?

This plaintiff and the fourth defendants were, at the date of the institution of this suit, joint landlords of the tenant defendants, and this is the assumption on which the apportionment of rent is claimed. Consequently, the tenants were not bound to pay rent to their landlords, unless they could obtain a joint receipt for such payments as they might make. But, upon the facts which have been brought to light in the course of this litigation, there can be no reasonable doubt that it was not possible for the tenants to obtain such joint receipts. The case is thus fully covered by section 61 (1) (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that when the rent is payable to co-sharers jointly and the tenant is unable to obtain the joint receipt of the co-sharers for the money, and no person has been empowered to receive the rent on their behalf, the tenant may present to the Court, having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the rent of his tenure or holding, an application in writing for permission to deposit in the Court the full amount of the money then due. The District Judge would have taken this view, if he had not erroneously held that the landlords could, at their choice, collect the rent in separate shares and that if they gave due notice to the tenants, it became the duty of the defendants to comply with the demand. The District Judge has overlooked that his opinion of the relative rights and obligations of joint landlords and their tenants is contrary to the rule enunciated by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Iswar Chunder Dutt v. Ram Krishna Dass (1). Sir Richard Garth, C. J., stated in that case that a sale of a share in a tenure, which has been let to a tenant in its entirety, does not of itself necessarily effect a severance of the tenure or an apportionment of the rent; but that if the purchaser of the share desires to have such a severance or apportionment, he is entitled to enforce it by taking proper steps for that purpose. If he takes no such steps, then the tenant is justified in paying the entire rent, as before, to all the parties jointly entitled to it. But if the purchaser desires to effect a severance of the tenure and an apportionment of the rent, he must give the tenant due notice to that effect, and, then, if an amicable apportionment of the rent cannot be made by arrangement between all the parties concerned, the purchaser may bring a suit against the tenant for the purpose of having the rent apportioned, making all the other co-sharers parties to the suit, Rajnarain Bitter v. Ekadasi Bag (2). In the case before us, the plaintiff instituted the present suit for apportionment of rent on the 13th November 1912. Before the rent has been actually apportioned by the decree made herein, the plaintiff could not, as a matter of right, claim from the tenants what he estimated to be his proportionate share of the rent. The reverse of this position was, undoubtedly, the exact attitude taken by him prior to this litigation. In these circumstances, the tenants were competent to avail themselves of the provisions of section 61 (1) (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We hold accordingly that the deposits were validly made, and that at the date of the institution of the suit the amount claimed as arrears was not due.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Court below modified. The decree, in so far as it allows the claim for arrears with costs and interest, will be set aside; but in so far as it apportions the rent will stand confirmed. Under the circumstances, each party will pay his own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed;
Decree modified.

Mortgage bond made up of principal and prospective interest—Instalments—Default in payment of instalments—Interest, payment of.

Parties had dealings in money with each other and on making up accounts a certain sum was found due from the defendants to the plaintiff. To the sum found due an addition was made as prospective interest and a mortgage bond was executed in respect of the total sum by the defendants on the 4th October 1916. The bond provided for payment by instalments, and it was stipulated that in default of payment of any instalment it should carry interest at 12 per cent. per annum to be compounded every year and that in default of payment of any two instalments the whole sum should become immediately recoverable. Default was made in respect of two instalments on 26th January 1899:

Held, (1) that plaintiff was entitled to recover (a) the principal sum secured by the bond; (b) proportionate interest out of the total sum fixed as prospective interest up to the 26th January 1899; and (c) compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum on the sum due on the date of the first default from that date up to the 26th January 1899; [p. 725, col. 2.]

(2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to any interest after the 26th January 1899. [p. 725, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur, dated the 11th May of 1914, in Civil Appeal No. 70 of 1913.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are simple. The parties had dealings in money. Accounts were made up and a sum of Rs. 5,159-7-0 was found due from the defendants to the plaintiff in 1896. This was made into two sums of Rs. 3,000 and Rs. 2,159-7-0 for two bonds executed on the 4th October 1896, to which I shall refer hereafter as Bond A and Bond B. To each principal sum an addition was made as prospective interest, and instalments were settled for payment of the aggregate. In each bond there were the stipulations that in default of any instalment it should carry interest at 12 per cent. per annum to be compounded every year and that in default of any two instalments the whole sum should become immediately recoverable.

The following are the details of each bond:—

BOND A.

Principal	...	Rs. 3,000-0-0
Prospective interest	...	Rs. 500-0-0

Rs. 4,200-0-0

Re-payable by 22 instalments of Rs. 182 and one of Rs. 196. Property mortgaged, 2 village shares with sir and a house. In default of payment of whole sum when due, property to be foreclosed.

BOND B.

Principal	...	Rs. 2,159-7-0
Prospective interest	...	Rs. 563-9-0

Re-payable by 21 instalments of Rs. 119 and one of Rs. 105. Property mortgaged, 18 muafi fields and the same village shares as in Bond A. In default of payment the debt was to be recovered from the usufruct.

The plaintiff maintained a single account to cover both bonds and appropriated payments therein. On the 2nd August 1910 he filed two suits one on each bond, alleging that instalment defaults had taken place in respect of both and the whole sum outstanding having become due, he claimed payment of the same or in default foreclosure of the property mortgaged by Bond A, and possession as usufructuary mortgagee of the muafi fields mortgaged by Bond B. After making a proportionate allotment of payments between the two bonds the plaintiff claimed Rs. 4,678-7-0 in respect of Bond A fixing the 26th January 1899 as the date when his cause of action arose, and Rs. 2,819-6-0 in respect of Bond B fixing the same date for his cause of action. Post diem interest was also claimed. The first Court gave the plaintiff a foreclosure decree for Rs. 6,817-3-3 on Bond A for principal, interest and costs calculated up to the 16th May 1913, the date fixed for payment, the date of the decree being the 16th November 1912. In respect of Bond B it held the plaintiff entitled to the sum due as the result of a calculation made in the same way as in the case of Bond A, but did not work out or declare the sum due, as it certainly should have done. Usufructuary possession of the fields was decreed and the defendants were ordered to pay the costs of the plaintiff. In this case, however, the interest of one of the six defendants was held not bound by the mortgage. The defendants, except defendant No. 6 in the suit on Bond B, appealed to the Divisional Judge and in the case of the non-appealing defendant the plaintiff filed a cross objection. Both appeals were dismissed and the cross-objection allowed. The defendants have [now filed two second appeals Nos. 566 and 567 of 1914 and in respect of Bond B the plaintiff has filed a cross-objection. Both appeals and objections relate to the question of interest only; they were heard together and this judgment will govern the disposal of them all.

It seems to me that the mode of calculation adopted by the Courts below is erroneous, because it treats as principal the prospective interest fixed by the bonds. They have not appreciated the fact that each bond contains stipulations in the alternative. First of all the creditor receives a certain fixed sum as interest for allowing the re-payment of his money to be spread over 23 years in the case of Bond A and 22 years in the case of Bond B. If any instalment is in arrears, he is entitled to add compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum thereto for the period of default. This completes one part of the contract. But the creditor is given the alternative of calling in his money at once if two instalments fall into arrears. In that event no Court of Justice could properly allow him any of the prospective interest fixed for any unexpired part of the term for which that interest was agreed to be paid.

Let me take an analogous case. A lets his house to B for 20 years for Rs. 2,000, it being agreed'

(1) that B shall pay A Rs. 100 a year towards the rent;

(2) that every instalment of rent in arrears shall carry interest at 12 per cent. per. annum;

(3) that in case two instalments of rent are not paid when due, A may cancel the lease and recover possession of the house.

B makes default in the payment of the first two instalments of rent and A, exercising his option of cancelling the lease recovers possession of the house exactly 3 years after the date of the lease. Would any Court hold A entitled to more than Rs. 300 plus interest on the instalments in arrears for the period of such arrears? I think not. The same principle governs the present case. The plaintiff had the option of allowing his money to remain outstanding for the full period for which prospective interest was agreed to be paid, or in the alternative of calling it in forthwith on two defaults being made. In the former case, in addition to the prospective interest he would also be entitled to interest as stipulated on instalments in arrear. In the latter case the scheme for 22 and 23 years and all the provisions relating to it would be cancelled, and the money recovered as a debt immediately due either in cash or, failing payment, by foreclosure in the case of Bond A and by usufructuary possession of the mortgaged estate in the case of Bond B. The plaintiff has elected to exercise his option by calling in his money in consequence of default made in the instalments for 1896-97 and 1897-98 and he places his cause of action on 26th January 1899. The bonds contain no provision for the payment of any interest after the date when the plaintiff, having cancelled the term contract, calls in the whole sum due to him, and I am unable to see any rule of law or justice under which it should be given to him. The interpretation by which the first Court professed to find an express stipulation for the payment of such interest, despite the admission of the plaintiff's Pleader to the contrary, does not commend itself to me. It was never contemplated by the parties to these contracts that the creditor should call in his money in a lump sum by a purely mental process not communicated to the debtors. It was the creditor's business to communicate the demand of the whole sum to the debtors and notify that interest would run on it until it was paid. It is not the plaintiff's case that he waived the defaults in instalments until he brought this suit. His case is that he treated the debt as exigible from the date on which the two instalments were in default, namely, the 26th January 1899. He went this position undisclosed till he filed the suit leaving the debtors to think what pleased from his silence. The plaintiff must be held to that position in giving him relief. On the 26th January 1899 the whole sum then outstanding due on both bonds became payable in a lump sum. Therefore, under the contract the plaintiff is entitled only to interest upto that date, and this interest is payable under two stipulations, namely, (a) a proportion of the prospective interest; (b) compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum on instalments in arrear.

On the 26th January 1899 the contractual stipulations as to interest came to an end as did the stipulations for payment by instalments. There could be no further defaults. If the plaintiff had then notified to the defendants that he claimed payment of the whole sum at once and that he would charge interest on it while it remained unpaid, his claim to reasonable interest on the whole sum could not have been resisted. But he did nothing of the kind. What he has done in this suit is to cancel the instalment arrangement for the purpose of demanding his principal, and yet claimed the prospective interest and the instalment default interest as if the original stipulations still ran on. This is obviously unjust and cannot be allowed.

For the purposes of this suit it may be taken that each instalment was made up of principal and interest in proportion to the whole sum specified under each head. That is to say, for example, that under Bond A 1200/4200ths, i.e., 6/21ths of each instalment was interest. Default making the whole sum exigible occurred, according to the plaint, on the 26th January 1899, when the third instalment fell due. Therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to the first three instalments of Rs. 182 each or Rs. 546 in all, whereof Rs. 390 represent principal and Rs. 156 represent a proportionate part of the prospective interest. The plaintiff is further entitled to interest at 12 per cent. per annum on all or any part of each of the two first instalments from the date on which it fell due up to the 26th January 1899, such interest being compounded in the case of the first instalment in respect of any continuance of the failure to pay it after the second instalment fell due. In other words, if nothing was paid the first instalment would carry compound interest from the 18th January 1897 to the 26th January 1899 and the second would carry simple interest from 7th January 1898 to the 26th January 1899. If there were payments accepted against these instalments, the calculation would have to be modified with reference to them. The same mode of accounting must be followed with reference to Bond B. In this way it will be possible to arrive at the amount due on each bond on the 26th January 1899, when by reason of the plaintiff's exercise of his option to cancel the term stipulations and treat his whole debt as exigible, no contractual liability for interest remained. We then have the original principals, Rs. 3,000 on the A Bond and Rs. 2,159-7-0 on the B Bond plus a proportion of the prospective interest included in the first three instalments, plus interest on arrears of the first two instalments on the credit side and payments made by the defendants on the debit side. A balance drawn from these will show the amount due on the date of the suits. The plaintiff is responsible for the delay in filing those suits and for the interval between the 26th January 1899 and the 2nd August 1910. I will allow him no interest but he is not responsible for the time required to obtain a decree and secure payment by execution thereof. Therefore, from the date of the suits I will allow him simple interest at the Court rate of 6 per cent. per annum until payment or foreclosure in the suit on Bond A and until payment out of the usufruct of the mortgaged property in the suit on Bond B. But if by drawing up the account in the manner above directed the amount found due to the plaintiff works out to less than the difference between the amount already decreed and the amount for which the two appeals now before me are made, then the decree of the Courts below will be adjusted so as not to give the defendants greater relief than is claimed by them in second appeal. Both appeals must be allowed and the decrees of the lower Appellate Courts must be set aside and the case remanded for fresh decision.

For reasons already given the cross-objection of the plaintiff for even more interest post diem than the Courts below gave him fails and is dismissed with costs. This appeal is affirmed, the decree of the lower Court is reversed and the case is remanded for a fresh decision with advertence to the above remarks. There will be no refund of Court-fees. Costs here and hitherto other than the costs of the objection abide the result. The objection is dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Ex parte application, duty of party making—Order extending time for filing appeal, whether can be cancelled by same Court—Appeal—Order refusing to admit appeal filed out of time, whether decree—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal filed beyond time—Sufficient cause—Mistake of legal adviser—Proof.

ISWAR CHANDRA KAPALI V. ARJAN.

When an ex parte application is made, it is the duty of the party making the application to call the attention of the Judge not only to the portion of the law or opinion in favour of his case but also to the matters that are against him. [p. 727, col. 1.]

On an ex parte application made to the District Judge asking him under the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act to extend the time for filing an appeal and to give the appellant time for the purpose of paying the Court-fees, the Judge made an order that time would be extended. But subsequently and before the memo. of appeal had in fact been admitted, he re-considered his order and revoked it:

Held, that the Judge had ample authority under the law to revoke or alter his previous order at any time before the appeal was admitted. [p. 727, col. 1.]

Before an extension of time can be granted under section 5 of the Limitation Act on the ground that the appeal has been filed beyond time owing to a mistake made by the legal adviser of the appellant, there must be proper evidence establishing that a mistake was committed and that it was a bona fide one. [p. 727, col. 2.]

Quere.—Whether an order refusing to admit an appeal filed out of time is a decree within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 30th of April 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Kishoregunj, dated the 5th of February 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Chandra Kant Ghose (with him Babu Nilkanto Ghose), for the Respondents, raised a preliminary objection that the appeal was not competent because the order complained of was an order refusing to admit an appeal which was filed out of time, and, therefore, it was not an appealable order nor a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Appellant.—The order of the Appellate Court rejecting a memorandum of appeal on account of its having been filed out of time is a decree and hence a second appeal lies. See Rakhal Chandra v. Ashutosh Ghosh (1).

[FLETCHER, J.—Why was not the appeal filed in time?]

Because the appellant was misled by the wrong and mistaken advice given by his Pleaders in the lower Court. My submission is that the case comes under section 5 of the Limitation Act. The lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the appeal could not be admitted as proper Court-fees had not been paid on the memorandum of appeal. Under section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court has discretion in the matter when there is sufficient cause and section 149 is not controlled by the provisions of the Court Fees Act. The learned Judge has not taken into consideration the real grounds of delay. There are authorities to show that even in second appeal your Lordships can interfere in a case like this.

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—Section 28 of the Court Fees Act authorizes the Judge to exercise his discretion where a wrong Court-fee is paid, and the Judge has exercised his discretion in this case after considering all the facts and circumstances of the case.]

My submission is that the learned Judge has not exercised his discretion properly. It is one of those cases where a party is going to suffer owing to the mistake of his legal adviser.

The next point is that the order rejecting the appeal was illegal. On the 27th April the Court admitted the appeal under section 5 of the Limitation Act, and the order passed on that date was final and hence could not be subsequently revoked by the Court in the absence of an application for review.

Babu Chandra Kant Ghose, for the Respondents, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant No. 1 against the decision of the learned District Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 30th April 1915. The appeal is preferred against an order refusing to admit an appeal out of time. It is said that it is a decree under the terms of the Civil Procedure Code and is, therefore, appealable. I will assume for the purposes of this case that it is so. There may be some other cases in which there may be arguments for considering whether or not that is a decree within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code. Now what happened in this case was this. We are told that there was a conflict of legal opinion on this important case. There was a consultation amongst the Pleaders practising in the Munsif's Court as to the course the plaintiff should adopt under the law. That opinion did not, however, agree with a similar consultation that took place amongst the SAMBASIVA AYYAR v. GANAPATHI AYYAR.

Pleadings practising in the Court of the District Judge and the appellant before us admittedly allowed the time to expire within which he had to prefer his appeal. On the 27th April 1915, an ex parte application was made to the District Judge asking him under the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act to extend the time for appealing and to give the appellant time for the purpose of paying the Court-fee. Now, it is a well-established rule in all Courts that when an ex parte application is made, it is the duty of the party making the application to call the attention of the Judge not only to the portion of the law or authority in favour of his case but also to the matters that are against him and, apparently, as far as one can gather from the records of this case, the attention of the learned Judge was not called to the provisions of section 28 of the Court Fees Act and the Judge on his order sheet made the order that time would be extended. Subsequently the learned Judge discovered that under the Court Fees Act, the Court-fee ought ordinarily to be paid on a plaint or memorandum of appeal before such plaint or memorandum of appeal is admitted. It is said that the learned Judge was wrong because section 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure is opposed to that view. But so far as appears from the order sheet, the Pleader for the appellant did not call the learned Judge's attention to section 149, Civil Procedure Code, and the learned Judge clearly did not exercise any discretion that he had under section 149. That being so, the learned Judge said that the matter must be heard again. It is said that the learned Judge having discharged his duties on the 27th April 1915 was incompetent to interfere with his order made on that date. With that I do not agree. The memorandum of appeal had not, in fact, been admitted and the Judge had obviously power to revoke or alter that order at any time before the appeal was admitted. It seems to me that there cannot be the slightest doubt that the Judge had ample authority in this case to reconsider his order of the 27th April 1915 when the matter was pointed out to him.

Then the next point is that the Court has not properly considered the case under section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act and that the Judge has not taken into consideration any of the facts. There are a number of decisions now on this point and these authorities turn upon the mistake of the legal adviser. Take the case reported as Rakhal Chandra v. Asitash Ghosh (1) There the appeal was sought to be admitted on the mistake of the Pleader. But in these cases we find that the legal adviser never comes forward and states that he made the mistake but somebody else pledges his oath for another and says that the legal adviser made the mistake. As a matter of fact I understand that in this case the legal adviser has not made any affidavit stating that he made the mistake and ordinarily, before a Court can act upon a statement that a gentleman made a mistake, there ought to be proper evidence establishing the fact that a mistake had been committed and that it was bona fide. In this case, that has not been established nor do I think there is any ground for interfering with the discretion exercised by the learned District Judge. It is said that it is not shown on what grounds the learned Judge exercised his discretion. The answer is that it is not shown in this appeal that there are grounds on which we are entitled to interfere with the exercise of that discretion. I see no reason in a case of this nature to interfere with the order passed by the learned District Judge. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

which partnership is declared dissolved—Discretion of Court, nature of—Date of judgment, whether dissolution can commence from—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25.

The discretion given to a Court by Order XX, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, to fix a date from which a partnership is to be declared dissolved is a judicial and not an arbitrary discretion.

Ordinarily the Court should direct dissolution from the date of any notice 'given' in that behalf by one of the partners or from the date of the plaint, and where the parties have been at arm's length since the filing of the plaint, it should not declare that the partnership should stand dissolved from the date of the judgment.

Appeal against the revised decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 47 of 1913.

JUDGMENT.—The Subordinate Judge, in declaring that the partnership shall stand dissolved as from the date of the judgment, has given no reason for fixing that date. Order XX, rule 15 of the Civil Procedure Code, no doubt, gives a discretion to the trial Court to fix the date; but it is a judicial discretion and not an arbitrary one. Ordinarily, as pointed out in Lindley on Partnership, page 644, the Court should direct dissolution either from the date of any notice 'given' in that behalf by one of the partners or from the date of the plaint. Section 25 of the Contract Act shows that in some cases the date of the judgment would be the most convenient date. See also Lyon v. Tveddell (1).

In the present case, the parties have been at arm's length since the filing of the plaint and an attempt to get a Receiver appointed was resisted by the first defendant. We think, under the circumstances, the partnership should stand dissolved as from the date of the plaint. The decree will be amended accordingly. There must be further consequential amendments in the decree. Each party will bear his own costs.

RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow of her husband's property to pay off his debts—Payment undertaken by relative of deceased—Failure of relative to discharge obligation, whether revives debt.

A Hindu widow sold her husband's property in her possession in order to discharge debts of the deceased, which a relative of his had agreed to pay off but which he failed to discharge:

Held, that when the relative of the deceased made himself responsible and agreed to pay off the debts, they ceased to be debts either of the deceased or of his widow, and the mere fact that the relative failed to perform his obligation would not revive the debts so as to make them a good consideration for the alienation of the property by the widow.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Jhansi.

FACTS.—Gillay, who possessed some immoveable property, died in 1890 leaving one widow and two daughters, Tulsha the plaintiff and Bari Bai. In 1892 one Har Parshad sued the widow for the debts due to him by her deceased husband. Kunji a relative of the deceased undertook to pay the debts and Har Parshad allowed the suit to be dismissed in default. Kunji agreed to pay the money in instalments. He made default and on the 8th of July 1895 Har Parshad obtained a decree against him for the first three instalments. In 1907 the widow sold a part of the property to Nathu and Mannu defendants. The widow died in 1914 and her daughter Bari Bai having died before her. Musammatt Tulsha being now the sole survivor sued to recover the property from the defendants, on the ground that the sales to them were collusive and obtained by undue influence and not for consideration and legal necessity. The suit was decreed by both the Courts, the lower Appellate Court holding that the contract between Har Parshad and Kunji extinguished Gillay's debt.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think the view taken by the Court below was correct on the findings of fact arrived at by it. Assuming that there was a debt due by Gillay which it was the legal and pious duty of the widow to discharge, that debt was discharged by Kunji taking over the liability and agreeing to pay it off by instalments. It then ceased to be a debt either of Gillay or his widow. The mere fact that Kunji did not perform his obligations would not revive the debt so as to make it a good consideration for the alienation of the property. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Vizagapatam Agency Rules, Rule X, cl. (5)—Suit by purchaser of mokhasa in Court auction to recover rent illegally collected by judgment-debtor and to restrain further collections, whether suit 'for immoveable property'—Jurisdiction of Agency Court—Leave of Agent, whether necessary—Madras Local Boards Act (V of 1884), s. 73.

The expression 'suit for land or other immoveable property' in clause 5 of Rule X of the Vizagapatam Agency Rules bears the same construction as in section 12 of the Letters Patent of the Madras High Court. [p. 730, col. 1.]

The plaintiff purchased a mokhasa held by some of the defendants in a Court sale in execution of a decree against the 1st defendant the Zemindar, part of whose estate it was. The 1st defendant having collected cess by virtue of his being the registered Zemindar, the plaintiff sued for recovery of the amounts collected by the 1st defendant and for an injunction restraining him from making future collections;

Held, that this was a suit to recognize the plaintiff as a land-holder for the purpose of section 73 of the Madras Local Boards Act and could be filed in the Agency Court, Vizagapatam, without the Agent's permission. [p. 729, col. 2; p. 730, col. 1.]

Petition, under Rule 20 of the Agency Rules, Vizagapatam, praying the High Court that in the circumstances stated therein it will be pleased to direct the Agent to the Governor at Vizagapatam to review his judgment in Appeal Suit No. 4 of 1914, preferred against the decree passed in Original Suit No. 9 of 1913 on the file of the Court of the Special Assistant Agent, Koraput Division.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. G. Venkataramiah, P. Narayana-murthi and V. Ramesam, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—No valid objection has been made to the judgment under appeal. But, the question being one of jurisdiction, we are constrained to differ from it and to decide on a ground not referred to in it, though it was considered by the Assistant Agent, that the suit, being one for land or immoveable property, could be filed in an Agency Court without the Agent's previous permission.

Agency Rule X, clause 5, repeats the description "suit for land or other immoveable property," which occurs in the Letters Patent of this High Court, section 12; and we have been shown no reason why the authorities, in which that description was construed in the latter connection, should not be considered also in the former. The decisions of this Court, like those in Calcutta, have given it a wide construction, as covering "all suits, in which a decree is asked for operating directly on the land in accordance with the principle that all questions relating to land should ordinarily be decided by the Court within whose jurisdiction it lies" Sundara Bai Saheb v. Thirumal Rao Saheb (1). Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Kannappa Chetti (2) has also been referred to; and although the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., identifies the description in the Letters Patent only with clauses (a), (c) and (e) of section 16, Civil Procedure Code, that is presumably because reference to clauses (b) and (d) was unnecessary for the purpose of the case before him, since he expressly referred to the judgment in Nalum Lakshimikantham v. Krishnasawmy Mudaliar (3) in which the latter clauses also are specified. This is material, because plaintiff-appellant contends that his suit is for land, because it involves a determination of the nature contemplated in clause (d) of an interest in immoveable property.

Plaintiff's allegations in his plaint, on which (and not on the defence) the jurisdiction must depend, are that he bought the mokhasas held by some of the defendants in a Court sale in execution of a decree against the 1st defendant, the Zemindar, part of whose estate they were; that the Collector held him liable for cess, which he paid; and that he is entitled to recover the amount claimed from the defendants notwithstanding section 73 of the Local Boards Act (Madras Act V of 1884). He has impleaded 1st defendant because the latter, being still the registered Zemindar, is collecting cess and has filed some suits for it. Plaintiff asks for a decree against 1st defendant for the amounts thus collected by him or in the alternative against the others for amounts not yet collected from them and for an injunction restraining 1st defendant from collecting in future or interfering with plaintiff's collecting. In effect, he alleges that the Court sale made him land-holder for the purpose of section 73 of the Local Boards Act and asks the Court to negative 1st defendant's right to deny this. We think that the declaration of plaintiff's character as land-holder under section 73 amounts to a determination of his and 1st defendant's interest in the mokhasas, immoveable property; and that, therefore, the suit is for land within the meaning of Agency Rule X, clause 5.

Plaintiff's suit was, therefore, in our opinion, rightly filed in an Agency Court; and no previous permission for its institution there was necessary. The Agent's decision must be set aside and the appeal must be remanded to him for re-admission and disposal on the merits. Costs will abide the event. Those up to date will be provided for in the Agent's final decree.

Appeal allowed.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4, applicability of, to substituted plaintiff on death of original plaintiff.

Without the production of one of the certificates mentioned in section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act, no decree can be passed in favour of a person who has been substituted as plaintiff in a suit for recovery of money due on a bond upon the death of the original plaintiff. [p. 731, col. 1.]

Quere.—Whether the same principle applies to execution proceedings.

Civil reference by the Munsif, Bogra, in Suit No. 997 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under rule 1 of Order XLVI of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The question referred has been framed by the Court below in these terms: "Whether section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act would apply at all to the case of a person who has been substituted as plaintiff for one who has died pending the suit." The reference, however, must be limited to the true scope of clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 4, as we are concerned with a suit and not with an execution proceeding which is governed by section 4 (1) (b).

One Dalimullah Mandal instituted this suit on the 28th August 1916 for recovery of money due on a bond. The plaint was registered, and the case was fixed for disposal on the 21st September 1916. On that date it was reported that the plaintiff was dead, and the case was adjourned. On the 15th December 1916, the widow of the deceased plaintiff applied, for herself and on behalf of her infant sons and daughters, for leave to prosecute the suit and an order for substitution was accordingly made. The trial Court has now made this reference for the determination of the question, whether the substituted plaintiffs can obtain a decree against the defendant without the production of one of the certificates mentioned in section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act. We are of opinion that a decree cannot be passed in favour of the substituted plaintiffs without the production of such a certificate.

The question raised is really concluded by authority. In the case of Sahadev Sukul v. Sakhawat Hossain (1) a suit had been instituted on a mortgage for recovery of the dues of the mortgagee, first by sale of the mortgaged properties, and then by the sale of other properties of the mortgagor. The Court made the usual decree for sale; the mortgaged premises were sold and the sale-proceeds proved insufficient to satisfy the judgment debt. Meanwhile, the mortgagee had died, and his legal representative applied to the Court to pass a personal decree against the mortgagor under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. Objection was taken on behalf of the mortgagor that a decree could not be made in favour of the applicant except on production of one of the certificates mentioned in section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act. The Court of first instance overruled this objection and passed a decree under section 90. Upon appeal this decision was reversed. On second appeal to this Court, it was argued that as the succession had opened out during the pendency of proceedings in Court, a succession certificate was not necessary. This contention was overruled, and the view taken by the District Judge was affirmed, notwithstanding the doubt expressed in the case of Baid Nath Das v. Shamanand Das (2) where this particular point did not arise for decision. Precisely the same view was independently adopted by Maclean, C. J., and Coxe, J., in Abdul Sattar v. Satya Bhushan Das (3), which was decided before the case last mentioned had been reported.

Maclean, C. J., held that having regard to section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act, the Court could not pass a decree under section 90 in favour of the personal representative of the mortgagee, till a certificate had been granted to him under any of the Acts mentioned in that section and that the fact that a certificate had been subsequently granted was not sufficient to get rid of the difficulty in his path created by the clear language of section 4. The view taken in these two cases is in accord with that of Farran, J., in Torregrosa Vazquez v. Praggi Hurji (4), where he held that upon the death of the plaintiff pendente lite, though the suit may be continued by his representative, a certificate in proof of his representative title must be produced before a decree can be passed in his favour. The comprehensive language used in section 4 (1) (a), namely, that "No Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person or any part thereof" is undoubtedly capable of the interpretation adopted in these cases. The claim contemplated by section 4 (1) (a) is a claim made by a person in the capacity of and as a personal representative of a deceased person, and from the point of view of the purpose of the Statute as set out in the preamble, it is clearly immaterial whether the decree has to be made in favour of a personal representative who has himself instituted the suit or in favour of one who has taken the conduct of the suit in hand after its institution by the original creditor. The essence of the matter is that, in both the cases, when the decree is passed, it is passed in favour of a person who claims to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person and who must consequently produce proof of the representative title. Whether the same principle does or does not apply to execution cases, does not arise for consideration on the present reference, but it may be observed that there appears to be a substantial difference in phraseology between clauses (a) and (b); the former contemplates the point of time when the decree is passed, the latter refers to the point of time when the Court is called upon to proceed on the basis of the application for execution: Mahomed Yusuf v. Abdur Rahim Bepari (5). We hold accordingly that section 4 (1) (a) of the Landlord and tenant—Rent, suit for maintainability of, against one of several heirs of deceased tenant—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 43, applicability of.

A landlord cannot maintain a suit for arrears of rent against one of several heirs of a deceased tenant without joining the others as defendants. Section 43 of the Contract Act has no applicability to such a case. [p. 734, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 18th of April 1916, affirming the decree of the Mursif at that place, dated the 29th of March 1915.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha), for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.—The suit was to recover arrears of rent in respect of a tenure. This tenure originally belonged to one Ram Saran Bachaspati. On his death, the suit was brought against his heirs Jagat Chandra Talukdar and Nitya Sundari Dasi. So the suit as originally framed was all right and was not open to any objection for non-joinder or misjoinder of parties.

But when the suit came on for hearing, an objection was taken that the interest of one of the heirs Jagat Chandra Taluk-dar had ceased in the tenure by reason of his having sold it to others. One of these transferees then made an application to be made a party to the suit, but the landlord did not agree to make him a party to the suit, and proceeded with the suit as against the others. It appears that the transfer made by Jagat Chandra Talukdar was not open to any question by the landlord—the landlord's fee was paid and the name of the transferee was recorded in the khatian. So the heir Jagat Chandra Talukdar ceased to be a tenant of the landlord and he cannot be made a defendant in this suit for arrears of rent. The whole question in the suit, as it now stands, is whether the landlord can maintain it against one of the heirs of the deceased tenant. Both the Courts below held that the suit could not be maintained without the addition of the transferees of Jagat Chandra Talukdar as defendants and accordingly dismissed the suit. I submit the lower Courts are entirely wrong. They overlooked the provision of section 43 of the Contract Act under which the heirs were jointly and severally liable for the entire rent. Although there was no express contract between the landlord and the heirs of the tenant on the death of the original tenant, still there was the implied contract when the transferees of one of the heirs went to the landlord and got their names recorded and registered in the landlord's books. Referred to Chamatkurini Dasi v. Triguna Nath Sardar (1). Unless the defendant could show that there was an agreement to the contrary, he is liable for the whole rent and decree should be made against him irrespective of the question, whether the other heir is made a party to the suit or not. He cannot object to the maintainability of the suit as he is jointly and severally liable with the other heirs for the entire rent of the tenure.

Referred to Jogendra Nath Roy v. Nagendra Narain Nandi (2), Rameswar Singh v. Jaideb Jha (3), Joy Gobind Laha v. Monmotha Nath Banerji (4), Lalit Mohan Sinha Roy v. Haran Chand Khamrui (5) and Krishna Dus Roy v. Kali Tara Chowdhurani (6) in support of his contention.

Except the case in Surendra Nath Roy v. Krishna Sakhi Dasi (7), all the other cases support my contention. In Girish Chandra Guha v. Khagendra Nath (8). Mookerjee, J., points out that where all the tenants are not made parties in a suit for arrears of rent, the suit should not be dismissed but a decree could be passed as a money decree. I submit that in this suit the landlord is entitled at least to a money decree.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakrabarty (with him Babu Kali Kinkar Chakravarty), for the Respondents.—In this case the transfer of the interest of the heir of the original tenant Ram Saran was complete under section 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the landlord had no option to ignore the transferee. The case of Krishna Das Roy v. Kali Tara Chowdhurani (6) is rather against the appellant, see page 293.* Section 43 of the Contract Act applies only where there has been a joint promise. The principle of joint and several liability has been fully discussed in Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhadro (9), and also in Rameswar Singh v. Jaideb Jha (3) and in Krishna Dus Roy v. Kali Tara Chowdhurani (6). In Ahinsa Bibi v. Abdul Kader Saheb (10) the same point has been discussed. Unless it is shown that the liability of the heirs of the original tenant is a joint liability, one of the heirs cannot be liable for the rent. Section 43 of the Indian Contract Act has modified the principle of English Law on the point of joint liability.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy, in reply.—Whenever there are more than one tenant, there is an implied contract by them to pay rent jointly and severally. The landlord is not bound to realise rents from the tenants in proportion to their shares in the tenure but is entitled to realise the whole rent from one of the tenants. If one of the tenants objects to the payment of the whole rent, the onus is on him to show that his liability is joint and not several. There is nothing in the present case to show that the liability of one of the heirs sued is only joint liability, and not a several liability. In Lalit Mohan Sinha Roy v. Haran Chand Khamrui (5) Richardson, J., clearly says that "there is nothing in the Indian law to compel the landlords to make all the tenants party to the suit for rents." In conclusion I beg to submit that according to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code a suit cannot be dismissed for non-joinder of parties.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—This was a suit to recover arrears of rent in respect of a tenure. This tenure originally belonged to a man of the name of Ram Saran Bachaspati, and the persons sued for rent were two persons of the names of Jagat Chandra Talukdar and Nriitya Sundari Dassi who were his heirs.

It appears, in the first place, that in this suit the plaintiffs sued both the persons entitled to the tenure. When the case came on for hearing an objection was taken that, as stated in the pleadings, the interest of the first defendant had ceased in the tenure, for in 1305 he sold it to two persons of the names of Syam Sundar Sarkar and Nriitya Sundari Dasi, and the former sold it again to Dwarka Lal Sarkar and the latter to one Ananth Bandhu Guha. One of these persons applied to be made a party to the suit. It appears that as regards the transfer there is no question of the right of transferability—the landlord's fee was paid and the name of the transferee was recorded in the khatian. On that and on the registration of the transfers the liability of the 1st defendant ceased and such liability as was upon him devolved upon his transferees. The plaintiff, however, was unwilling to make the transferees parties to the suit. As he did not do so, both the Courts below held that the suit was not well founded and that it could not proceed without the addition of the transferees as defendants and both the Courts thereupon dismissed the suit.

The question, therefore, before us is narrowed down to a single point, namely, whether in the circumstances of this case the plaintiff could sue the 2nd defendant alone. This question again was dependent on a consideration of that which has been argued before us, namely, whether or not the liability of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who were admittedly heirs of Ram Saran Bachaspati, was a joint liability or a joint and several liability. The question then is whether the plaintiff could proceed against one of the heirs without joining the other. This turns upon the question of the applicability in the present case of the provisions of section 43 of the Contract Act. In my opinion it has not been shown that that section has applicability in the present case, which is one as I have said of heirs and transferees from such heirs. This is not a case of a contract which is referred to in that section nor, as has been suggested, has an implied contract by reason of the transferees taking possession of the land or having gone to the landlord to have their names recorded and so forth been made out. Of that we have no evidence before us in this case. A number of decisions have been referred to, but in none of them are the facts on all fours with the present case. I think the judgments of both the Courts below are right. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

SMITHER, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Judge's knowledge of character of parties or witnesses, whether can be relied upon in deciding case—Procedure—Jurisdiction.

A Judge is justified in using his knowledge about the character of the parties to a suit to come to a decision upon the credit to be attached to their evidence on the case set up by them. [p. 735, col. 1.]

Where a District Judge declined to believe in the bona fides of a suit brought by the plaintiff, unless it was supported by evidence that left no doubt in the mind of the Judge about its credibility, on the ground that many of the suits launched by the plaintiff in his Court had been found to be false:

Held, that the Judge was justified in alluding to his experience of the plaintiff's litigation in his Court. [p. 735, col. 2.]

Mr. S. M. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. E. Lambert, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—San Hla Baw sued Mi Khorow Nissa, wife of Kalathan deceased, Mi Shora Bi, Kalathan's daughter, and three minor children of the 1st defendant for recovery of Rs. 120 said to be the balance rent due on a lease executed by Kalathan on the 9th May 1913. The suit was filed in the Township Court of Rathedaung on the 25th November 1915. Neither party was assisted in the Township Court by an Advocate in the trial in which, as the District Judge has remarked, the evidence was recorded in a somewhat perfunctory way without any attempt being made to test the credibility of the witnesses. The Township Judge decreed the claim. The decision was reversed on appeal to the District Court, Akyab. On second appeal to this Court exception has been taken to the nature of the judgment written by the learned District Judge. He commences his judgment by saying: "This is a typical 'San Hla Baw' case. He wants really to get a decree for certain land standing in some one else's name; so he brings a suit, something like two years after it is due, for rent against the heirs of the late owner. . . . His ways of business are, I know, very slipshod, and usually sail very close to the wind. . . . San Hla Baw, of course, is a convicted perjurer and a man who by his own admission is prepared to swear to anything to gain time when he is pressed." The Judge also refers to the evidence of Tha Kaing who, he states, is a man who to his own knowledge is accustomed to give evidence on behalf of San Hla Baw. He describes Tha Kaing as San Hla Baw's creature. It is urged in the appeal to this Court that the Judge was not justified in making remarks about the characters of the witnesses, when such characters were not established by any evidence on the record but were matters of personal knowledge of the Judge. In Ramundoss Mookerjee v. Musammatt Tarinee (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council observe as follows: "An observation, however, is made by the Sudder Dewanny Court, that the Zillah Judge, with respect to two of the attesting witnesses, has spoken of them from his own knowledge, as being what he calls 'professional witnesses,' persons of no character, and, therefore, entitled to no credit whatever. He does not say that, as we understand him, from his own personal knowledge of the parties, as being in the habit of coming before his Court. Now, the Judges in the Sudder Dewanny Court have passed a severe censure upon the Zillah Judge, for making that observation. Their Lordships think it right to say that in that censure they do not at all concur. It is of great importance that the Judge should know the character of the parties, and it is of great advantage to the decision of the case, that it is heard by a Judge acquainted with the character of the parties produced as witnesses, who is capable, therefore, of forming an opinion upon the credit due to them." Again in Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (2) their Lordships say that they thought the Subordinate Judge was right in relying on the evidence of the Sub-Registrar and of the Mukhtar, with whose character the Subordinate Judge seemed to have been acquainted. "The Subordinate Judge says he holds a diploma, and is a respectable person in his community, and the Court has never seen any act of his by which it can suspect him." These cases are sufficient authority for justifying a Judge in using his knowledge about the character of the parties to come to a decision upon the credit to be attached to their evidence or the case set up by them. On the other hand, it has been laid down by their Lordships in Hurpurshad v. Sheo Dyal (3) that a Judge cannot, without giving evidence as a witness, import into a case his own knowledge of particular facts. Their Lordships appear to draw the distinction between the conclusion drawn from the knowledge of a Judge about the general character and position of the parties and their witnesses and his knowledge regarding any particular facts connected with the facts in issue in the case. I am of opinion, therefore, that the District Judge was justified in alluding to his experience of San Hla Baw's litigation in his Court and in declining to believe in the bona fides of the class of the cases launched by him, many or others of which had been found to be false, unless the case was supported by evidence that left no doubt in the mind of the Judge about its credibility.

CHOWDHURY—RESPONDENTS.

*Mortgage of taluk—Mortgagee undertaking to pay land revenue—Default—Sale, collusive, for arrears,

Defendant, who was the mortgagee in possession of a share in a taluk and had undertaken to pay the Government revenue, made default in payment of the revenue, so that the taluk was sold for arrears of revenue and was purchased by A. A sold it to B, who shortly afterwards sold it to the defendant. Plaintiff, who was a purchaser from the mortgagor, sued to recover possession of the taluk from the defendant on redemption. It was found that the sale for arrears of revenue and the subsequent sales to B and the defendant were collusive transactions engineered by the defendant for the purpose of obtaining possession of the taluk as owner.

Held, that the sales did not affect the rights of the mortgagor or of the plaintiff, who was a transferee from the mortgagor, and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to redeem. [p. 737, col. 1.] affect the interest of the defendant, for he purchased after 14 years after the mortgage. The auction sale of the 5th June 1897, by which the property was purchased by Abdul Bari for arrears of revenue, had wiped out previous encumbrances. This property has again come back to my client, defendant No. 1, by private purchase in July 1900. Hence plaintiff acquired no interest in it so as to affect the title of defendant No. 1.

[RICHARDSON, J.—Finding is that the purchase by Abdul Bari was benami on behalf of defendant No. 1 and if it is so, the original sale did not affect the position of the mortgagor. The purchase was a collusive one and hence your position as the mortgagee of defendant No. 5, from whom plaintiff purchased, remains unchanged.]

(2) My submission is that the amendment of issues at a late stage, viz., after the hearing of the original issues, prejudiced my client.

(3) The sale of the 8-annas share for arrears of Government revenue was not due to any neglect on my part. My 8 annas was also sold along with the mortgaged 8 annas. The principal question is whether I contributed at all to the negligence for which the property was sold for arrears of revenue. This point was not at all decided by the lower Court. I was not given an opportunity to prove that there was no wilful default on my part to pay the Government revenue, which I undertook to pay. Section 53 of the Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859) has no application to the present case. Having undertaken to pay the Government revenue if by some contingency there was default on my part, the mortgagor cannot escape liability for such default. He might have paid the arrears on my default.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chackerbutty (with him Maulvi Nur-ul-din Ahmed and Babu Khitis Chandra Sen), for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The defendant No. 1 in the suit out of which this appeal arises was the owner in her own right of a moiety share of the taluk to which the suit relates. As to the other moiety share she was the mortgagee in possession under a mortgage by way of conditional sale. As mortgagee, she had undertaken to pay the Government revenue due in respect of the share mortgaged. The taluk, however, fell into arrears and was sold on the 6th June 1897 at a revenue sale and purchased by one Abdul Bari. Abdul Bari sold the taluk in May 1899 to Basirulla and in November 1900 the defendant No. 1 purchased it from Basirulla. In November 1911 the plaintiff in the suit purchased a 4-annas share of the taluk from defendant No. 5, the mortgagor of defendant No. 1. The suit was brought by the plaintiff to redeem the mortgage of defendant No. 1 and both the Courts below have concurred in making a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

In this appeal it is contended in the first place that defendant No. 1 was prejudiced at the trial by an amendment which was made in one of the issues. In our opinion, there is no substance in this contention. The amended issue and the original issue if properly understood raise the same questions of fact, the very questions to which evidence was directed. On that point we agree with what is said on the subject by the learned District Judge in the course of his judgment.

The two remaining contentions may be dealt with together. One of them is that the plaintiff purchased nothing under his conveyance from defendant No. 5, and the second is that the learned District Judge has not found expressly that defendant No. 1 was guilty of wilful neglect in not paying the Government revenue. What the Court below appears to have found is this, that the purchase of the taluk by Abdul Bari and the purchase by Basirulla were collusive transactions engineered by the defendant No. 1 for the purpose of getting the estate into her own hands. If that is the meaning of the learned Judge's judgment, then there is an end of the case. Such collusive transaction could have no effect on the title of defendant No. 5 or on the title acquired by the plaintiff from that defendant. The findings of the District Judge appear to me sufficiently clear. In the first place, referring to the sequence of transactions he says this: "The rapidity of these transactions is very suggestive. It has been argued for the respondent that the appellant being already the owner of half the taluk, wished to make sure of getting the other half and doing away with the rights of the mortgagors, and accordingly arranged a collusive set of transactions and was obliged to purchase herself from Basirullah when her estate was taken over by the Court of Wards, since the Court of Wards would not manage a benami property. These contentions are supported by the prices paid." Then later on he sums up as follows:—"These facts alone, in my opinion, suffice to show that the transactions are not genuine." As to wilful default on the part of the defendant in connection with the payment of Government revenue the learned Judge says, "there is no evidence at all to show that the tenants were seriously in arrears over paying their rents." The suggestion made to-day that if the defendant No. 1 had had an opportunity she might have shown that the inability to pay the revenue was due to a cyclone or something of that kind, cannot be accepted in face of the findings to which we have referred.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed. The plaintiff-respondent is entitled to his costs of this appeal from the appellant.

We are now informed that pending the hearing of the appeal to this Court the appellant has died. Her two daughters have been substituted in her place. Her son claims no interest through her and appears to have been added as a party respondent. He now asks for costs. We see no reason why he should receive costs.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

daughter, contest between—Procedure—Buddhist Law, Burmese—Adoption—Divorced woman, whether can adopt.

Where the full sister and an alleged adopted daughter of the deceased whose adoption was disputed applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of the deceased:

Held, that inasmuch as in the event of the adoption being established the sister would not under the Buddhist Law be entitled to any share in the estate, the Court would be justified in going into the question of adoption. [p. 737, col. 2.]

Under the Buddhist Law as regards the power to adopt, a woman who is divorced from her husband and has divided the joint property with him is in the same position as a single woman. [p. 738, col. 1.]

An adoption is to a great extent a matter of intention and where an attempted adoption by a married woman causes a divorce between her and her husband but the intention to adopt continues after the divorce and full effect is given to it, there is a good adoption without any formal declaration. [p. 738, col. 1.]

Mr. Ba Dun, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. E. Lambert, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The present respondent Mi Ah Bon applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of Chi Ma Pru, who died in May 1916. The present appellant Aung Ma Khaing opposed the application, alleging that she was an adopted daughter of the deceased. She is also the natural half niece of the deceased. Mi Ah Bon is the full sister of the deceased. Ma Khaing appeals from the order of the District Judge granting Letters of Administration to Mi Ah Bon.

Mr. Lambert for Mi Ah Bon contends upon the authority of Ma Tok v. Ma Thi (1) that Mi Ah Bon was entitled to Letters of Administration inasmuch as she was an admitted relation and the adoption of Ma Khaing was in dispute; but that decision refers to the case of an admitted heir and if the adoption of Ma Khaing in this case is proved, Mi Ah Bon would not be an heir. She would not be a person entitled to Letters of Administration under section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act, because she would not be entitled to any share in the estate. The District Judge has taken, we consider, a correct view of the case cited. He took the evidence in support of the adoption which lasted a whole day, and then decided that it would be waste of time to take the evidence against the adoption, because it was shown that the deceased Chi Ma Pru adopted Ma

BENGAL STONE COMPANY, LTD. v. JOSEPH ISAAC JOSEPH HYAM.

Khaing against the wish of her husband. In consequence of this adoption by Chi Ma Pru there was a divorce between her and her husband by mutual consent and a division of their property was made. The learned Judge was of opinion that a sole woman can adopt but that a married woman cannot adopt without the consent of her husband and that the adoption of Ma Khaing, at its inception being invalid, could not become valid after the divorce without some formal adoption or re-adoption in order to place her in the position of a child who had been adopted with a view to inherit. No authorities have been cited to show that a single woman cannot adopt. In the case of Ma Bu Lone v. Ma Mya Sin (2) it was taken for granted that a spinster could adopt. Mr. May Oung in his work on Buddhist Law remarks that it is quite usual for widows to adopt. There is no reason in principle why a woman who is divorced from her husband and has divided the joint property with him should be in a different position as regards the power to adopt. It seems probable, as held by the District Judge in this case, that a married woman living with her husband cannot adopt without his consent. But an adoption is to a great extent a matter of intention and if Chi Ma Pru's intention to adopt Ma Khaing continued after the divorce and full effect was then given to that intention, there would be a good adoption without any formal declaration. From the evidence, so far as it has been taken, it would appear that Chi Ma Pru's intention was to adopt Ma Khaing; that such attempted adoption was the cause of the divorce and that Chi Ma Pru's intention continued after the divorce and that she gave effect to it.

The case is remanded in order that Mi Ah Bon may be allowed an opportunity of adducing evidence to show that Ma Khaing was not adopted; and the District Court will dispose of the application in accordance with the above remarks. The costs of this appeal will abide the final result.

Case remanded.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 15—Coercion—Refusal to convey equity of redemption except on certain terms—Costs—Discretion, exercise of—Solicitor acting on his own behalf, costs of.

A mortgagee, who refuses to reconvey the mortgaged property to the mortgagor except on certain terms, cannot be said to be unlawfully detaining or threatening to detain any property within the meaning of section 15 of the Contract Act. [p. 740, col. 2; p. 741, col. 1.]

The High Court is averse to interfere with the discretion of a Judge on the question of costs, but the discretion must be exercised judicially. The ordinary rule is that a party who succeeds upon a particular issue gets the costs of that issue, unless there is a good cause for depriving him of the costs of that issue and unless the issues in the case are so closely connected that they cannot be separated one from the other. [p. 741, col. 2.]

A solicitor, who is a party to a suit and acts on his own behalf, is entitled to the same costs as if he had employed a solicitor, except in respect of items which the fact of his acting directly renders unnecessary. [p. 742, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This was an action brought by the plaintiffs for an account in respect of certain building transactions which were undertaken by the defendants for the plaintiffs, Mr. Hyam and Mr. Jones. Those building transactions were undertaken in pursuance of an agreement dated the 21st of January 1909. It is not necessary for me for the purpose of this case to deal in any detail with the terms of that agreement. It is sufficient for me to state that the defendants, the Bengal Stone Company, Ltd., were to erect two sets of premises, one in Park Street, and the other in Bow Bazar Street, and that they were not to be liable to spend on all accounts more than a specified sum of money, and the method of payment was that "the owners (the plaintiffs in this case) should pay the Stone Company (the defendants) for all materials the actual cost price thereof plus all charges and expenses actually paid or incurred by the Stone Company in collecting and placing the same on site and also the actual cost of all labour employed by the contractors in or about the erections of the buildings and of completing and equipping the same in terms of the agreement." There were provisions for the remuneration of their services in respect of supervision and other matters, and then the payment of a sum equal to ten per cent. on the aggregate amount of all the items specified in the said clause of the agreement was provided for. The buildings were completed, although not within the specified time. There was also a provision in the agreement that a mortgage should be given by the owners of one of the premises to secure a sum of money which was eventually agreed upon Rs. 2,50,000.

Now, this action was brought, as I have said, primarily for an account. When it came on for trial, there were really two main questions, first, the point raised by the defendants, that there had been an account stated between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and that consequently the plaintiffs were not entitled to an account; and, secondly, the point raised by the plaintiffs that a certain letter which was dated the 22nd of August 1911 was obtained from the plaintiffs by the coercion of the defendants. That was a letter in these terms:

"In consideration of the Bengal Stone Co., Ltd., this day reconveying and releasing the premises Nos. 294 and 295, Bow Bazar Street, mortgaged by us to the Bengal Stone Co., Ltd., we hereby admit and acknowledge that the said reconveyance and release only relates to the said premises Nos. 294 and 295, Bow Bazar Street, and we hereby undertake to pay the said Bengal Stone Co., Ltd., not later than the 31st December 1911 any sum which may hereafter be found to be due from us to the said Bengal Stone Co., Ltd., under or in connection with the agreement dated the 21st January 1909 and made between the said Bengal Stone Co., Ltd., of the one part and ourselves of the other part. We hereby also agree to forego any and all claims that we may have had or have against you in respect of delays in completion of the buildings at Park Street and Bow Bazar Street and will only make such corrections in your bills and accounts as we may find to be erroneously or excessively charged. All other items of the contract agreement dated 21st January 1909 to be considered as in force."

Now, those were the two main issues that were to be tried by the learned Judge, and I must say I am distressed to think that this action took no less than sixteen days in trial. In my view, it should have been obvious, unless the learned Judge was satisfied that there had been an account stated between the parties, that there must be a reference for the purpose of an account to be taken between the parties, and how the case which (with the exception of one or two subsidiary matters the facts relating to which lay in a small compass) was limited to these two questions, first, whether there had been an account stated, and secondly, whether the letter of the 22nd of August 1911 had been obtained by coercion, could have taken sixteen days for trial, is certainly beyond my comprehension.

Now, with regard to the first point, the learned Judge has found that there was not an account stated. We have heard the arguments on the one side as well as on the other, we have read the learned Judge's judgment, and the facts to which he referred, and have heard the facts put forward by the learned Counsel for the defendants and I think, even assuming the facts which he has stated, that there was not an account stated between the parties: and, for this reason we did not think it necessary for him to go through the evidence as he had offered to do.

With regard to the other point, we agree with the learned Judge that the letter of the 22nd of August 1911 was not obtained by coercion. The section upon which this matter depends is section 15 of the Indian Contract Act. In order to understand that section, it is necessary to refer to sections 13 and 14. Section 13 says: "Two or more persons are said to consent when they agree upon the same thing in the same sense." Section 14 says: "Consent is said to be free when it is not caused by—(1) coercion

as defined in section 15, or (2) undue influence, as defined in section 16, or (3) fraud, as defined in section 17, or (4) misrepresentation, as defined in section 18, or (5) mistake, subject to the provisions of sections 20, 21 and 22." The only sub-section of section 14 which can be said to apply to this case is sub-section (1), namely: "Coercion, as defined in section 15." Section 15 says: "Coercion is the committing, or threatening, to commit, any act forbidden by the Indian Penal Code, or the unlawful detaining, or threatening to detain, any property, to the prejudice of any person whatever, with the intention of causing any person to enter into an agreement." It is admitted that the present case does not come within the meaning of the first part of that section, namely, "the committing, or threatening to commit, any act forbidden by the Indian Penal Code." But it is said that what happened in this case, to which I will refer more in detail directly, brings the matter within the words 'unlawfully detaining, or threatening to detain, any property, to the prejudice of any person whatever, with the intention of causing any person to enter into an agreement.' What happened in this case was this: shortly stated, Mr. Hyam and Mr. Jones had mortgaged this property at Bow Bazar Street to the defendants for Rs. 2,50,000. Mr. Hyam was anxious—Mr. Jones was away and Mr. Hyam was acting on behalf of Mr. Jones—to sell the premises, and apparently he got a purchaser, but he was not a very willing purchaser, and it was necessary for him to get the equity of redemption conveyed to him by the mortgagees. There was a discussion first of all as to whether Mr. Hyam would give a promissory note—I ought to have said that the defendants were alleging that the total of their bills would amount to a considerable sum above Rs. 2,50,000. He was unwilling to give the promissory note. Then an arrangement was come to whereby Mr. Hyam agreed to pay over the balance of the purchase-money, after deducting the amount which would be required for the first mortgage of the property, and also a sum of Rs. 4,000 as brokerage. It would leave about Rs. 2,80,000 and he agreed to pay over that. Now, he alleges that that discussion amounted to "a threatening to detain any property to the prejudice of any person with the intention of causing any person to enter into an agreement." The property which Mr. Hyam, the learned Counsel who argued the case on behalf of the respondents, relied upon was the equity of redemption; and, he said that the defendants threatened to detain the equity of redemption and there was an "unlawful detaining or threatening to detain," inasmuch as the defendants were refusing to convey the equity of redemption unless they were paid more than the sum secured by the mortgage. In my judgment, that was not unlawfully detaining or threatening to detain any property, within the meaning of section 15.

With regard to the law of duress in England, it is well known that that was limited, and no doubt for very good reasons limited, to the duress of person, and I may quote the following passage which I find stated in a convenient form at page 351 of the Third Edition of Leake on Contract, "Duress may also consist of threats of personal violence. But the fear must concern the safety of the person of a man; and not his house or goods, because he may recover the same, or damages to the value, without any corporal hurt. Again, if the fear do concern the person, yet it must not be a vain fear, but such as may befall a constant man. Fear of imprisonment is sufficient, for the law has special regard to the safety and liberty of a man," (that is a quotation from Co. Lit. 2536). Apparently, when the Legislature was considering this matter for the purpose of applying the law to India, they thought it right to extend it and not to limit the law of coercion to a coercion of a man's person but extended it beyond the law of England to unlawfully detaining or threatening to detain any property. I ask myself, can it ever have been intended to apply it to such a transaction as has occurred in this case? Can it be said that when a person who has refused to convey the equity of redemption except on certain terms has unlawfully detained or threatened to detain any property within the meaning of section 15 of the Indian Contract Act. Having regard to the ordinary meaning of the English language, I have no hesitation in saying that the refusal to convey the equity of redemption, except on certain terms, did not come within the meaning of section 15. I think that the learned Judge was right in saying that what took place in this case did not amount to coercion. Therefore, I think that the plaintiffs' cross-objection upon the question of coercion fails.

Then Mr. Hyam for the plaintiffs raised two other points which I may describe as less important points. The first one was that the learned Judge was wrong in finding that the defendants were not bound to charge the rates of labour which were specified by the letter of the 22nd of December 1908. I think that the learned Judge was right. That letter, as I have said, was written on the 22nd December 1908, and the contract was not made until the 21st of January 1909. I have read the clause which relates to the rate of labour. I read it again to make my meaning clear. "The owners should pay also the actual cost of all labour employed by the contractors in or about the erections of the buildings and of completing and equipping the same in terms of this agreement." In my judgment that is a clause which governs this matter, inasmuch as it was made subsequently to the 22nd of December 1903; I do not think it is possible for us to say that it was implied that the rates of labour specified in the letter of the 22nd of December were to be incorporated in the contract. If it had been so intended, one would have expected the contract to contain some such words as these "that the owners should pay also the actual cost of all labour, having regard to the rates of labour which had been agreed upon between the parties on the 22nd of December 1903."

The other point was that the learned Judge misunderstood the evidence with regard to the steam-plant. What he says is this: "In respect of the steam-plants I accept the version put forward by the defendant Company, and I hold that they are entitled to charge the plaintiffs Rs. 150 per plant per month for the actual period during which the steam-plants were working on the sites." We have been referred to the evidence. In my judgment there was sufficient evidence on which the learned Judge could arrive at that conclusion, and I see no reason for interfering with his decision upon a question of fact in that respect. That disposes of the main points that were raised in this appeal. As I have already said, it must have been obvious from the beginning of the case, as it was obvious from the beginning of the appeal, that the matter must ultimately go to reference: and, the result is that the matter must now go to the Official Referee, unless the parties agree upon some other person who can take an account quicker and more expeditiously: and, after considering the arguments on both sides, I think that the learned Judge was right in the form of the order by which he directed it. It has been read by Mr. Buckland at my request, and I do not propose to read it again. I do not think that the form of the order as to the account ought to be interfered with at all.

Then comes the question of costs. The learned Judge made an order as to the costs in these terms: "It is further ordered and decreed the defendant Company do pay to the plaintiffs their costs of this suit upto and including this decree to be taxed by the Taxing Officer of this Court under the heading 'Class 2 ordinary causes.'" In my judgment that was not a correct direction as regards the costs. There was a clear and distinct issue raised by the plaintiffs that the letter of the 22nd of December 1911 had been obtained by the coercion of the defendants. The learned Judge has not given any direction as to the costs of that issue: and, although the plaintiffs failed upon that issue, he has given the plaintiffs the costs of the whole trial of the action. Now, it is quite true that this Court is most averse to interfere with the discretion of a learned Judge upon the question of costs. But the discretion of the learned Judge upon the question of costs has to be exercised judiciously, and the ordinary rule is that a party who succeeds upon a particular issue gets the costs of that issue, unless there is a good cause for depriving him of the costs of that issue and unless the issues in the case are so closely connected that they cannot be separated one from the other. That is not the case here: It was a quite clear and distinct issue in this case, quite apart from the rest of the case. I have asked myself what good cause there was for depriving the defendants of the costs of that issue. I find none. Therefore, I think the learned Judge was not right in the exercise of his discretion in depriving the defendants of the costs of that issue without a good cause. In my judgment, the defendants ought to have the costs of the issue relating to the question whether the letter of the 22nd of August 1911 was obtained by coercion. But it would be difficult in view of the protracted nature of the trial, as pointed out by Mr. Hyam, the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, for the Taxing Officer at this stage, without going into the matter at length and putting the parties to a considerable expense, to come to a satisfactory conclusion as to what costs should be allocated to the issue of coercion, and I think we shall be doing substantial justice if we direct that one-third of the costs of this suit ought to be allocated to the issue of coercion and two-thirds of the costs ought to be allocated to the other issues.

Therefore, as regards the costs of the suit, I think the plaintiff ought to have two-thirds of the costs of the suit and the defendants ought to have one-third; and, the costs ought to be taxed upon that basis, for the reason that the defendants have succeeded on the issue of coercion and the plaintiffs have succeeded upon the issue whether there was an account stated.

As regards the costs of this appeal, I think that each party ought to bear his own costs, for the reason that the plaintiffs have failed in part and the defendants have also failed in part and both the defendants and the plaintiffs have succeeded to some extent.

As regards the costs of the reference, those costs will be in the discretion of the Official Referee or the person who takes the reference.

As regards the last point taken by Mr. Buckland on behalf of the defendants, mainly that there ought to be a special direction as regards the costs of Mr. Jones, the point is this:—It appears that Mr. Jones is a solicitor, and that at one time he was in partnership with Mr. Mitter, carrying on business under the name of Jones & Co.; Mr. Mitter died early in these proceedings, it is said before the affidavit of documents was put in. Therefore, substantially, we may say that Mr. Jones was acting as solicitor in this case on behalf of the plaintiffs. The question is whether we ought to give a direction to the Taxing Officer to tax the costs upon the principle of the rule which is laid down in the case of London Scottish Benefit Society v. Chorley (1). That was an action brought against the solicitors for money not accounted for. The learned Judge, Sir William Brett, Master of the Rolls, said this: "It is true, however, to say that the costs of a solicitor appearing in person must be taxed differently from those of an ordinary litigant appearing by a solicitor. The unsuccessful adversary of a solicitor appearing in person cannot be charged for what does not exist, he cannot be charged for the solicitor consulting himself or instructing himself or attending upon himself. The true rule seems to be that when a solicitor brings or defends an action in person, he is entitled to the same costs as an ordinary litigant appearing in person, subject to this restriction, that no costs which are really unnecessary can be recovered. Of this kind are the costs of instructions and attendances." The report says "an ordinary litigant appearing in person", which is a mistake as appears from the title of errata and should read by an ordinary litigant appearing by a solicitor. The rule laid down by this case and affirmed in Tolputt v. Mole (2) is that the solicitor is entitled to the same costs as if he had employed a solicitor, except in respect of items which the fact of his acting directly rendered unnecessary. We propose to give a direction to the Taxing Officer that he should tax the costs of Mr. Jones upon the principle laid down in that case.

We think that the costs of the paper-book in the appeal should be equally divided between the parties in this case.

JUDGMENT.

*SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—This is a suit for ejectment by a landlord, on the ground that the tenant has forfeited his right by his denying the title of the plaintiff. The District Munsif held that the act complained of did amount to a disclaimer of the landlord's title and decreed possession. On appeal the Subordinate Judge agreed with the District Munsif that there was a disclaimer but held that as the lease was granted for the lifetime of the lessee, the disclaimer had not the effect of putting an end to the tenancy and that the suit was premature.
He dismissed the suit upon that ground.There are two questions for consideration in this second appeal. The first is, was there a disclaimer of title, secondly, whether the tenant has not forfeited the tenancy, as the lease was for the lifetime of the tenant although he did deny the landlord's title. I shall dispose of the second point first.The cases quoted by the Subordinate Judge have not much bearing upon this second question. I fail to see why the denial of title during the continuance of the period of tenancy should not work a forfeiture of the right. The Transfer of Property Act no doubt has no application in terms to this tenancy, which is an agricultural one.
But the principle of section 111, clause (g), is applicable to this case. Under the second sub-section of that clause it is enacted that the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up the title of a third person or by claiming title for himself. Mr.
Justice Sadasive Aiyar in *Abbakka Shetthi v.
Seshamma* (1) points out that under the Common Law of India, a favourable construction should be placed upon the conduct of the(1) 25 Ind. Cas. 944; (1914) M. W. N. 915; 16 M. L.

KOMALAKUTTI v. PULIKALAKATH MUHAMAD.

tenant before he is adjudged to have forfeited his tenancy. I am prepared to accept this view in dealing with agricultural leases, but I can see no justification for the view taken by the Subordinate Judge that leases for a term will enure for the full length of it notwithstanding the denial of title by the tenant. Therefore, if I come to the conclusion that there has been a disclaimer of title by the tenant, I would take a different view of the case. I suggested in the course of the argument that even if there was a disclaimer, Courts may have power to relieve tenants from forfeiture. Many authorities were not cited on the question at the bar, but, on considering the matter fully, I am not satisfied that, if there is a denial of title, there is power in the Courts to relieve against forfeiture. Under the English Law there are at present still classes of cases which can be relieved against (a) for non-payment of rent; the Common Law Procedure Acts of '52 and '60 and section 4 of the Conveyancing Act of '92 provide for relief, (b) in cases of breaches of other conditions and covenants the Conveyancing Acts of '91 and '92 declare principles on which relief can be granted. No doubt it is pointed out in Barrow v. Isaacs (2) that these various enactments have not exhausted the equitable jurisdiction of the High Court to relieve a defaulting tenant from forfeiture. Lord Esher in that case says that in cases which are not provided for by the Legislature, equity will come to the aid of the party only in three cases, viz., fraud, accident or mistake. Then he proceeds to say that even if any of these elements are found, there will be no relief if the tenant had acted with great carelessness or negligently. The learned Master of the Rolls does not refer to the case of denial of title as one of the relievable cases, and I have not been able to find any authority in which relief was granted by Courts where the tenant had denied the landlord's title. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, in the case to which I already referred, seems inclined to the view that all cases of forfeiture can be relieved against. Even accepting this broad proposition as being especially applicable to Indian conditions,

I would require that, where there has been a denial of title, the tenant must prove, in the language of Lord Esher, that that denial was occasioned by the fraud, mistake or accident of the landlord and that the tenant himself was neither careless nor negligent. In the present case no attempt has been made to prove that the tenant has been misled. Therefore, I am driven to the conclusion that, if there had been a disclaimer of title, I would have decreed possession.

But I am not satisfied that the Courts below are right in holding that there is a disclaimer of title. The disclaimer is said to be contained in Exhibit J. That is an assignment of jenm right by the defendant to a third party in respect of properties which undoubtedly belong in jenm to the defendant. In the course of describing the properties assigned and in excluding certain properties from the deed of assignment, the defendant says that the excluded property belongs to him in jenm. It is true there is in this case an assertion of jenm right in respect of property now sought to be recovered, but the assertion is not addressed to the landlord, nor is that assertion followed up by transferring the particular property to a third party. There is no surrender of possession to a person claiming adversely to the jenm. It is only an incidental statement in a document which was intended to convey some other property. The question now is whether this incidental reference can amount to a denial of title. In the Transfer of Property Act the language is, 'in case the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up title of a third person or by claiming title in himself.' In this case he did not set up the title of a third person nor did he renounce his character as tenant. In ordinary parlance the expression 'renounce' would connote that some act is done to the knowledge of the landlord which was calculated to convey to him the impression that the tenant repudiated his title. The English authorities to which I shall presently refer seem to bear out the view that a casual reference like the present one will not have the effect of renunciation of title. As was pointed out in Prag Narain v. Kadir Baksh (3), the denial must be unequivocal and some act tending to the giving up of the relationship of tenant must have been committed. The authorities in England are to the same effect. In Doe d. Graves v. Wells (4) Lord Denman, C. J., seems to suggest that there must be a betrayal of the landlord's interest and that the landlord should be placed in a worse condition, before he can insist upon forfeiting the tenant's lease. In Doe d. Dillon v. Parker (5) it was held that a payment to a third person was not sufficient to put an end to the tenant's lease. Doe d. Gray v. Stanion (6), Doe d. Pittman v. Sutton (7), Doe d. Williams v. Cooper (8) may be quoted in support of the same view. In Mr. Williams' Book on Ejectment (2nd Edition), page 56, the law is thus stated: 'In order to constitute a disclaimer something must be done by the tenant which amounts to a direct repudiation of the relationship of landlord and is necessarily inconsistent with that relationship.' In Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, the statement is: "In order to make either a verbal or written disclaimer sufficient it must amount to a direct repudiation of the relationship of landlord and tenant, or to a distinct claim to hold possession of the estate upon a ground wholly inconsistent with that relation, which by necessary implication is a repudiation of it." The same proposition is stated in Cole on Ejectment also, page 41. In my opinion, the collateral reference in a document intended to convey some other property is not enough to constitute a disclaimer of title. The principle is well settled that a tenant cannot acquire title by prescription against his landlord so long as he does not, to the knowledge of the landlord, repudiate the tenancy under which he held possession. Consequently the statement in a document executed to a third party cannot ordinarily have the effect of starting adverse possession in favour of the tenant. The landlord, therefore, is not put in a worse position than he was when he let the property to the defendant. I, therefore, hold that there has been no denial of title. I would dismiss the second appeal. But having regard to the conduct of the defendant I do not think he is entitled to any costs in this Court.

NAPIER, J.—Two questions have been raised in this second appeal, the first, whether the alleged denial of title by the defendant operates to terminate his interest in the land, and the second, whether if there is a forfeiture, the Courts have power to relieve against it. The first question only has been considered by the lower Appellate Court, and the view taken by the learned Judge on his reading of some decisions of this Court is that no denial of title by a person in the position of the defendant could have that operation. I agree with the appellant that the learned Judge has misappreciated the effect of those decisions. But that does not dispose of the question.

It must be premised that there is no statutory law under which a denial of title by an agricultural lessee acts as a forfeiture. It is argued, and the argument is founded on several decisions of this Court, that the analogy of the Transfer of Property Act should be applied, although such leases are specifically exempted. I have, speaking for myself, pointed out in another case the danger of this method and, where statutory provision is absent, have preferred to seek another basis, namely, the English law of property. In doing so, we should, in my opinion, always bear in mind the difference in the origin of tenures and also the conditions peculiar to land tenures in this country.

I entirely agree with my learned brother that the only denial which we have to consider in this case is that contained in Exhibit J, and this denial is certainly not made in any transaction dealing with the property, the subject of this suit, and is not addressed to the landlord. That is the state of facts as to the denial. The tenancy in question arises in a rather peculiar manner. Claims were made to this property and other properties by the plaintiff and the defendant and the suit ensued. Their respective rights were settled by a razinama decree, under which this property was "to be held by the 2nd and 3rd defendants until the death of both of them on Verumpattom right under the plaintiff without being surrendered." The defendants should pay a rental of Rs. 2 per year, and on the death of the defendants, the Paramba should be taken possession of by the plaintiff or her representatives. The result of this decree was to create the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendants, the tenancy being one for joint lives of the defendants. The defendants have certainly, in Exhibit J., declared that they held the property in jenmi rights, but they have not granted any lease inconsistent with their life tenure, nor have they repudiated that tenure directly to the landlord.

It appears from an examination of the English cases that forfeiture for denial of title is based on two different principles when applied to two different classes of tenancies. The first is with regard to tenancies from year to year. In Doe d. Graves v. Wells (4), Denman, C. J., points out that with regard to tenures from year to year the words 'forfeiture' and 'disclaimer' are wrongly applied and that where a landlord brings an action to recover possession from such a tenant, the evidence of a disclaimer of the landlord's title by the tenant is evidence of the determination of the will of both parties, by which the duration of the tenancy, from its particular nature, was limited; and, viewed in this light, he held that a verbal assertion that the fee was in the tenant even though made to the landlord's agent, was not a sufficient indication of the desire of the tenant to put an end to the tenancy, in that mere words could not operate to affect an interest in law.

The origin of the doctrine as applying to tenancies not terminable at will is to be found in 3 Bacon's Abridgment, page 196, Estate for Life and Occupancy—"another way of forfeiture in a Court of Record is, by claiming a greater estate than he had by the feudal donation, or by affirming the reversion to be in any other person than his lord. This seems to be grounded on a rule in the old feudal law, that if a vassal denied that he held the feud of his lord, and it was proved against him, such denial was a forfeiture." And then come the words explaining the limitation of this doctrine—"But, as by the feudal law, the vassal was to be convicted of this denial, so in our law those acts which plainly amount to a denial must be done in a Court of Record, to make them a forfeiture; for such act of denial appearing on record is equivalent and equally conclusive as a conviction upon solemn trial; and all other denials, that might be used by the great lords for trepanning their tenants and for a pretence to seize their estates, by our law were rejected, for such convictions might be made by such great lords where there was no just cause; but the denial of the tenure upon record could never be counterfeit, or be abused to any injustice; and, therefore, this notorious and solemn act of the tenant was retained as a just cause of forfeiture by our law." That is the origin of the doctrine of forfeiture by denial; and it is hardly necessary to point out how unequivocal and direct denial must be to come within the mischief of this doctrine.

The modern application of this doctrine is to be found stated in Woodfall's Law of Landlord and Tenant, 19th Edition, page 431: "In order to make either a verbal or written disclaimer sufficient, it must amount to a direct repudiation of the relation of landlord and tenant or to a distinct claim to hold possession of the estate upon a ground wholly inconsistent with that relation, which, by necessary implication, is a repudiation of it." This statement of the law is taken word for word from the judgment of the Court of Exchequer in Doe d. Gray v. Stanion (6) and was quoted as the basis of his judgment by a very eminent Judge Fry, J., in Vivian v. Moat (9).

It is clear, therefore, that a mere allegation of title which does not amount to repudiation cannot work forfeiture, and it is to be noted that in the Transfer of Property Act, this distinction has evidently been borne in mind, for the only disclaimers which operate under section 111, clause (g), are in cases where 'the lessee renounces his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself.' It seems to me that both the words repudiation and renunciation require something a great deal stronger than a mere assertion not communicated to the landlord. It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule; but, to my mind, a very good test to apply would be, whether the assertion would operate as a starting point for adverse possession against the landlord [vide Doe d. Foster v. Williams (10), where Lord Mansfield applies this test]; and viewed in this light the assertion will not come within its mischief.

I am, therefore, of opinion that there was no denial of the title within the mischief of the doctrine. That being my conclusion on the first question, I do not think it necessary to enter into a consideration of the other point, whether a forfeiture for denial of title can be relieved against. I agree with the result of my learned brother's judgment.

Custom—Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding, custom of transferability subject to payment of nazar—Essentials of the custom—Nazar, tender of, whether necessary for validity of transfer.

In order to establish a custom of transferability of an occupancy holding subject to the payment of a customary nazar, the evidence must show that the landlord is bound to recognise the transfer when nazar of the amount or at the rate determined by custom is tendered to him. [p. 748, col. 2; 749, col. 1.]

An alleged custom of transferability of an occupancy holding on payment of a nazar which leaves the amount or rate of the nazar indefinite is void for uncertainty, for no one knows what the tenant has to pay by way of nazar and the landlord can demand what he pleases and refuse his consent unless he is satisfied. [p. 749, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where there is a custom of transferability of an occupancy holding on payment of a customary rate of nazar, which the landlord is bound to accept, the transferee has no title under the custom until he has paid or tendered nazar at that rate. [p. 749, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 29th of June 1915, affirming those of the Munsif, Additional Court, Rampurhat, dated the 18th of March 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bipin Behari Ghose (with him Babu Urukramdas Chakrabarty), for the Appellant.—There are authorities to show that when transfers are recognised by the landlord on payment of nazars, the custom of transferability is disproved.

The finding of the learned Judge is sufficient to give a decree for ejectment, because the holding is found not to be transferable by custom without the consent of the landlord and his finding is not sufficient to show that there was a custom that the holding was transferable by custom. If the Zemindar has to be paid a nazar for making a transfer legal, that is enough to show that the transfer is not valid without the landlord's consent. Payment of a nazar to the landlord and the acceptance of it by him do not establish a custom of transferability of a non-transferable occupancy holding without the landlord's consent. Referred to Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Sreemutty Ananda Pria (1), Srinutty Sibo Sundari Ghose v. Raj Mahan Guho (2), Bhogirat Chandra Mondal v. Sital Chandra Sarkar (3). Where a landlord accepts nazar that shows that the landlord recognises the transfer and gives his consent. Again in this case no nazar was paid nor even tendered, so even assuming that there was a custom of transferability on payment of a nazar, the transferee cannot claim any right as he did not pay or tender the customary nazar.

In Edward Dalgliesh v. Sheikh Gozaffar Hossin (4) it is held that transfers must be made with the knowledge of the landlord, though without his consent and wish, in order to establish the custom of transferability.

MINA KUMARISAHEBA v. ICHAMOYEE CHOWDHURANI.

The mere fact that a nazar is to be paid in order to get the consent of the landlord is not evidence to show that there was a custom of transferability without the landlord's consent on payment of the nazar. It must be proved that there was a customary rate of nazar on payment of which the landlord was bound to recognise the transfer and also that, that nazar at that rate was legally offered.

Babu Ram Chandra Mojumdar (with him Babu Gauranga Nuth Banerjee), for the Respondents.—The present cases are concluded by the findings of fact. With reference to the contention that a new case was made by both the Courts, I submit my learned friend has no such grievance. By referring to the issues we find that in the written statement the words used are.....(customary nazar). This was not challenged and this shows there was such a custom. This point was not at all raised in the lower Courts, so it is now too late to put forward this objection. Secondly, I submit the question as to whether the customary nazar was paid does not arise in the present case, which depends on the pleadings in which the whole question was whether there was any custom of transferability by payment of a nazar and the whole case depends on the solution of this question. The finding is that jotes were so transferable and this concluded the suit. The following distinctions are to be made with regard to the reported cases:—

(1) It is one thing to say that the landlord recognises a transfer on receipt of a nazar. Here the landlord has discretion, he may or may not accept the nazar.

(2) It is another thing to say that when a customary nazar is paid, the Zemindar is bound to recognise; and here the landlord has no discretion.

In Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Sreemutty Ananda Pria (1) these points are discussed. In the other case in Srimutty Siho Sundari Ghose v. Raj Mohun Guho (2) the same thing is found. Hence 8 Calcutta Weekly Notes cases do not touch the present case, which falls within the second class of cases. In the latter class of cases custom or local usage is the main thing. In the case in Bhogvath Chandra Mandal v. Sital Chandra Sarkar (3), cited by my learned friend, the question is put in a very significant form, see page 957.* Referred to Busul Karim v. Satish Chandra Giri (5).

Babu Bipin Behari Ghose, in reply.—The question of custom is beyond the scope of this suit. Pleadings do not allege that there was a custom as to the fixity of nazar. The defendant has not at all a valid title to resist ejectment because he has not made out a title by payment of nazar previous to the suit for ejectment, nor even up to this time any nazar has been tendered.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the plaintiff in a suit brought to recover actual possession of an occupancy holding in the village of Basanta of which he is the proprietor. His case is that the holding is non-transferable and that the defendants, who are in possession as purchasers from the original tenant, are mere trespassers. Of the defences raised we are now concerned only with the defence that occupancy holdings in the village are transferable by custom without the landlord's consent. The written statement says nothing about the payment of nazar, customary or otherwise. There is no plea that nazar has in fact been paid. Nor is there any reference to nazar in the issue framed upon this question. The issue is merely: "Are the disputed holdings transferable by local custom or usage?" At the trial, however, evidence relating to the payment of nazar has been given and both the Courts below have found in favour of a custom of transferability involving in some way, which is not clearly defined, the payment of nazar. The question is whether the finding can be supported in law.

The cases on the subject of customary nazar will be found collected in Mr. Sen's work on the Bengal Tenancy Act (3rd Edition, pages 136, 137). The principle of the cases is clearly this, that in order to establish a custom of transferability subject to the payment of a customary nazar the evidence must show that the landlord is bound to recognize the transfer when nazar of the amount or at the rate determined by custom is tendered to him. There is all the difference between a fixed nazar, which the landlord is obliged to accept whether he likes it or not, and a nazar which is bargained for and paid as the price of a consent which he may give or withhold as he pleases. A practice or course of business in a Zemindary office, according to which a transferee is recognized provided that the amount of the nazar is satisfactory to the landlord, is not sufficient.

Tried by this standard the finding of the learned Munsif is not a good finding of a custom. It is not enough to say "that there are constant transfers and the transferees pay nazar to the landlord to be recognized." The two statements that "occupancy jotes are transferable" and that "landlords recognize such on payment of nazar" are as they stand inconsistent. The payment of nazar without more is an indication that the jotes are not transferable without the landlord's consent, given on receipt of the nazar.

The finding of the learned District Judge is more artificial, but as it rests on the same materials it is perhaps not surprising to find that it is also open to objection. He holds "that a custom or usage existed in the plaintiffs' estate at Basanta by which occupancy holdings are transferred with the knowledge but without the consent of the landlord and are recognized by the landlord upon payment of a nazar fixed by custom." It may be presumed that the Judge means that the transfers are or must be recognized by the landlord. Apart, however, from any question of grammar, the substantial objection to the finding is that it does not state the amount of the customary nazar. As to that there is no definite conclusion arrived at in the judgment. The Judge says that "the landlords recognize all transfers of occupancy holdings, provided a fixed nazar, generally four annas in the rupee on the purchase of the property, is paid." But though he adds that "the nazar varies in different estates" he does not determine the rate payable in Basanta.

Now obviously a custom which leaves the amount or rate of nazar indefinite must be void for uncertainty. The position is no whit better than when the nazar is determined by agreement. No one knows what he has to pay and the landlord can demand what he pleases and refuse his consent unless he is satisfied.

Further there is another vice in the judgment. It is not found that the defendants paid or tendered any nazar. As I have said the written statement contains no such plea, and even if it be assumed that there is a customary rate of nazar which the landlord is obliged to accept, the defendants have no title under the custom until they have paid or tendered nazar at that rate. [Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya v. Srimutty Ananda Pria (1), Sreemutty Sibo Sundari Ghose v. Raj Mohun Guho (2)].

For these reasons the judgments and decrees of the Courts below should, in my opinion, be set aside and a decree made in favour of the plaintiff awarding her khas possession in accordance with the first prayer of the plaint with costs throughout. There will be a remand of the suit to the Court of first instance in order that the claim for mesne profits may be tried.

This judgment governs the consolidated appeals other than Appeals Nos. 2892, 2893, 2894, 2895 and 2896, which fail on other grounds and are dismissed with costs.

I may add that we allowed the parties, at their request, time to settle the matter, but they have not found it possible to arrive at an agreement.

Decrees set aside.

effect of—Adverse possession under Will—Alienation—Necessity—Recitals, value of.

The Will of a childless Hindu provided that his moveable and immovable property should remain in the possession of his wife until her death, and that after her death it should pass into the possession of his niece, but that if on the death of his wife and niece there were living a son and a daughter born of the womb of the niece, then two-thirds of the moveable property should belong to the said son and one-third to the daughter. But as regards the immovable property none shall have the least right of alienation:

Held, (1) that the Will purported to convey an absolute estate ultimately to the son and daughter of the niece and that the fact that the corpus was not expressly mentioned was not sufficient to justify the interpretation that the corpus did not pass; [p. 751, col. 2; p. 752, col. 1.]

(2) that the recital in the Will that there should be no right of alienation made no difference, so far as any rate as the niece's son and daughter were concerned, nor did it make any difference that the bequest in favour of the niece's son and daughter failed on the ground that they were unborn at the date of the testator's death; [p. 752, col. 1.]

(3) that the disposition in favour of the niece's son and daughter was intended as a gift of the remainder, and not merely a statement of what the testator believed to be the rule of succession in case of his niece's intestacy; [p. 753, col. 2.]

(4) that the Will was not intended to and did not vest an absolute estate of inheritance in the niece, and that, therefore, she did not in that capacity have an unfettered right of alienation; [p. 754, col. 1.]

(5) that the estate created in favour of the niece was an estate such as a woman ordinarily acquires by inheritance under the Hindu Law, which she holds in a completely representative character but is unable to alienate except in case of legal necessity; [p. 756, col. 1.]

(6) that the words restricting alienation in respect of the niece's estate were of the nature of surplusage, that is to say, the testator had in his mind the ordinary recognized restriction upon alienation which would apply independently of any provision in the Will, and that he had not in his mind the eventuality of an alienation becoming necessary either for the purposes of providing maintenance for the niece or for the preservation of his estate. [p. 766, col. 1.]

An estate of the kind that a Hindu widow inherits in the case of intestacy can be created by Will. [p. 754, col. 1.]

Where a mere contingent remainder is created after a woman's estate and not a vested remainder, this is an indication in favour of the view that the estate created was a woman's estate in the technical sense and not merely a life-estate. [p. 755, col. 2.]

In construing a Will made by a Hindu testator, it is not permissible to take into consideration what the effect of such a Will would be under the English Law. It is not permissible for instance to import the idea that where an estate is devised to enure only for life, the result is that an estate in fee in remainder, whether vested or contingent, must exist in some one. [p. 764, col. 2.]

The English classification under which estates are projected along the plane of time and are measured by time alone, is foreign to the Hindu Law which measures estates not by duration but by use. [p. 755, col. 1.]

A Hindu can by Will create an estate for life in the English sense, but his intention to do so must be made clear by the terms of the Will itself without any importation of English ideas. [p. 757, col. 1.]

Actual proof of necessity which justifies an alienation under Hindu Law is not essential to establish its validity. It is only necessary that a representation should have been made to the purchaser that such necessity existed, and that he should have acted honestly and made proper enquiry to satisfy himself of its truth. [p. 757, col. 2.]

A recital in the deed is clear evidence of the representation, and, if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible, the recital, coupled with such circumstances, would be sufficient evidence to support the deed. [p. 757, col. 2.]

Quere.—Whether where a person enters under a Will of uncertain construction, an absolute title can be acquired by adverse possession in the absence of an express claim to hold an absolute title. [p. 751 col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the title conveyed by one Sahodra Bibi to Ganpat Bhagat in a house and garden had ceased at her death, and for possession. The suit was instituted by Jagernath Prasad, the son of Sahodra Bibi, and by two other persons who had purchased a 7-annas interest from Jagernath Prasad. The deed of conveyance, which is dated the 10th January 1895 and is referred to as Exhibit C, purported to convey an absolute interest in the property. The plaintiffs' case, however, was that Sahodra Bibi had no power to convey a title to enure beyond her lifetime. The suit has been decreed and the defendants, who are purchasers from the assignees of Sahodra Bibi, have appealed to this Court.

Sahodra Bibi had held under a Will executed by Fateh Chand, who died possessed of considerable immovable property, more particularly specified in the schedule to his Will in addition to a banking business which was carried on in the town of Muzafferpur under the style and title of Fateh Chand Sakhi Chand. He died in 1848 or 1849, leaving a widow Sheudai Koer and Sahodra Bibi his brother's daughter. On the 13th of April 1848 he executed a Will whereby he devised and bequeathed all his property in the first place to Sheudai Koer and after her death to Sahodra Bibi. The widow Sheudai died in 1853. In 1884 the banking business failed and on the 5th of August 1884 Sahodra Bibi executed three conveyances of the immoveable property left by Fateh Chand to satisfy debts due by the banking business referred to as Exhibits B, B-1, B-2. On the 10th January 1885 she executed two further conveyances of the immoveable property of the testator referred to as Exhibits O and C. All these conveyances recited that they were executed in order to enable Sahodra to discharge debts due by the banking business which descended to her as assets of Fateh Chand deceased. The property, which is the subject of the present suit, was sold under one of the conveyances of the 10th January 1885 to Ganpat Bhagat, viz., Exhibit C. Ganpat sold the property to a Hindu joint family, the head of which was named Kunj Lal, on the 29th May 1888. Thereafter this particular property fell by partition to the share of one Isri Prasad, whose successors are the principal defendants in this suit.

Sahodra Bibi died on the 8th November 1899. The plaintiffs' case is that by the conveyance of 1885 Sahodra Bibi could and did only convey a title to enure until her death; and that on her death in November 1899 the title to the property in suit together with all the other property of the testator, whether moveable or immoveable, vested in her son Jagernath who was the sole heir to Fateh Chand's estate by reason of an intestacy as to the residue of his property. Jagernath and the other plaintiffs who have purchased an interest from him accordingly sued for possession.

The decision of the case depends upon the interpretation of the Will of Fateh Chand and as to the nature and character of the estate or interest which Sahodra acquired thereby.

The first contention in appeal is that this Will is void so far as the immoveable property is concerned, as it did not convey any beneficial interest in the corpus of the testator's estate either to Sheudai and Sahodra or to those designated to succeed on the death of Sahodra, and that in effect the gifts or bequests contained in the Will were thereby bequests not of the corpus of the immoveable property but of the right to receive only the rents and profits accruing therefrom; that Sahodra, when she entered in 1853, therefore, entered as a trespasser; and that by reason thereof she has acquired an absolute estate by adverse possession, and that she acquired an absolute title which she could and did convey to Ganpat Bhagat. It may be doubted whether in such a case where a person enters under a Will of doubtful construction, an absolute title can be acquired by adverse possession in the absence of an express claim to hold an absolute title. The contention however, in my opinion, fails ab initio. It is clear that the Will did contain a devise of a beneficial interest in the corpus of the immoveable property of the testator and that the limitations in respect thereof, so far as Sheudai and Sahodra are concerned, are not invalid. The Will recites that if any daughter or son be born to the testator during his lifetime, such son or daughter will be the owner of all his property but if there be no son or daughter, his niece Sahodra is to take a bequest of a lakh of rupees and the rest of the moveable and immoveable property has to remain in the possession of his wife until her death. After her death it was to pass into the possession of his niece. But if on the death of his wife and niece there be living a son and a daughter born of the womb of the niece, then two-thirds of the cash and the furniture should belong to the son and one-third to the daughter absolutely and that as to the immoveable property "they", meaning all these persons including the son and daughter, were to enjoy the balance left after the payment of rent and the expenses incurred in discharge of certain religious and charitable obligations charged upon the income of the testator's immoveable property. This Will clearly purported to convey an absolute estate ultimately to the son and daughter of his niece. The fact that the corpus is not expressly mentioned is not sufficient to justify the interpretation that the corpus did not pass; and the recitals from time to time in the Will that there should be no right of alienation would make no difference, so far at any rate as the niece's son and daughter are concerned, nor does it make any difference that the bequest in favour of the niece's son and daughter failed on the ground that they were unborn at the date of the testator's death. The failure of the gift of the remainder to them would not make the Will itself invalid. The appellant's Vakil has relied upon the case of Shookmoy Chandra Das v. Monoharri Dassi (1), where it was held that the Will which was the subject-matter of that case was invalid upon the ground that it was not the testator's intention to pass the corpus of the estate but merely the rents and profits, and that thus the Will offended against the rule of perpetuity and was void. This intention or absence of intention was inferred by their Lordships of the Privy Council from certain recitals and provisions in the Will, none of which occur in the Will which we have to construe. In the Will in the case cited the testator began by saying that his estate was to remain intact; and that his heirs were to be entitled to enjoy the profits thereof. Their Lordships said that this created an impression that the intention of the Will was to create a perpetuity as regards the estate and to limit the enjoyment of the profits for an indefinite period. This impression was confirmed by the subsequent clauses in the Will, under which a 6-annas portion of the property was dedicated to the family worship and the maintenance of the family, leaving a 10-annas share which was not to be expended at all so long as the family remained joint and which was not disposed of in any way. There was a further provision as to how the profits should be enjoyed in the event of disagreement. From the judgment of the High Court against which there was an appeal to the Privy Council, it appears that the Will provided for a succession of trustees. The only provision in the present Will which resembles the provisions in the Will in that case is the prohibition against alienation; but as was pointed out by the Privy Council in the subsequent case of Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (2), the interpretation given to the Will in Shookmoy Chandra Das v. Monoharri Dassi (1) was arrived at independently of the provisions against alienation. I have no doubt that the Will was not invalid upon the ground that the testator did not intend to convey the corpus. The first contention pressed by the appellants, therefore, fails.

The next contention is that the Will intended to create an absolute estate in Sahodra Bibi. This same Will was so interpreted in the case of Jagurnath Prasad v. Jaikishun Prasad (3). The point, therefore, requires careful consideration, and it would only be with great hesitation that we would adopt the view that was not accepted by the learned Judges who decided that case. It will be remembered that the Will created an estate in the first instance in the testator's widow Sheudai Koer. The estate in the widow is described in two passages of the Will. In the first it is said that the moveable property and the shops will remain in the possession of his wife until her death; and in other passage it is said that the immoveable property will remain in the possession of his wife during her lifetime without power to transfer them, and that his wife, after meeting certain charges recited in detail, shall bring the remainder to her own necessary expenses. The Will then proceeds to say that after the death of his wife the properties will remain in the possession of his niece Sahodra Bibi without right of transfer, and that, after defraying certain charitable charges, she will bring the balance to her necessary expenses. It then goes on to say that if on the death of his wife and his niece there be living a son and daughter born of the womb of his niece, the son and daughter are to enjoy the properties. Now there are no words in the description in the Will of the *state given to Sahodra, to suggest that the intention was that she should have an absolute estate. The expression "remain in possession", as contrasted with the expression "will be the owner" used in the earlier part of the Will with reference to his own son and daughter if there should be one, militates against the idea of an absolute estate. The condition against alienation also points in the same direction. It is, however, contended that the provision for the ultimate benefit of Sahodra's son and daughter was a provision that they were eventually to succeed as heirs of Sahodra, and that this indicates that the intention was to create an estate of inheritance in Sahodra. The point, therefore, for our determination reduces itself to the question, whether the words referring to the ultimate succession of the niece's son and daughter can be treated as leading to the interpretation contended for. The alternative interpretation of course is, that there was an absolute gift of the remainder to the niece's son and daughter and that there was no idea of an estate of inheritance in the niece at all. Shortly the question is, do the words referring to the ultimate succession of the son and daughter indicate a gift of the remainder in their favour, or do these words mean a mere description of an estate of inheritance in Sahodra. It may be premised that if the words can be interpreted as a description of an estate of inheritance, it does not matter if the description is incorrect, although no doubt the incorrectness of the description is a point to be considered in adopting one or other of the two alternative constructions.

The disposing words are:—"If on the death of my wife and my niece there be living a son and a daughter born of the womb of my said brother's daughter, then two-thirds of the moveable property will belong to the said son and one-third to the daughter. But as regards the immoveable property none shall have the least right of alienation. They will, of course, be entitled to enjoy the balance left after payment of rent, etc."

Now I am aware of no case in which where a son and daughter have alone been mentioned, the words have been interpreted to amount to a description of the course of the inheritance. The words also obviously do not provide for the case where there is no son or daughter, and it is hardly conceivable that the testator can have thought that in the absence of a son and daughter there would be no person entitled to succeed by inheritance. Moreover under the Mitakshara Law to which the testator was subject, the son and daughter would not in any circumstances simultaneously succeed. It is true that under the Bengal Law there are cases in which a son and daughter may succeed jointly to a mother. But there are no circumstances in which a son and daughter would succeed, one to two-thirds and the other to one-third. The whole wording of the disposition appears to me to be also more favourable to the interpretation of a gift of the remainder than to a description of the course of succession. It is true that later on in the Will, there is reference in one sentence to the niece's heirs born of her womb, and in the other to "the heirs of my niece." These references appear to relate back to the son and daughter in favour of whom there had been an express disposition. They do not occur in the disposing portion of the Will but merely in sentences which are precatory in character, and the expression "heirs born of the womb" relied on by Sharfuddin and Mullick, JJ., would, in any event, be descriptive only of an estate tail, which is unknown to Hindu Law. They could not be held to be descriptive of an estate of ordinary inheritance. I am unable to infer from the use of these words that the testator meant to describe an estate of ordinary inheritance as having vested in his niece. The expression "her heirs born of her womb" excluded her husband who was then living; and it is impossible to conceive that the testator would not know that if his niece took an estate of inheritance the husband would be one of the principal heirs. On a careful consideration of the terms of the Will, I am of opinion that the disposition in favour of the niece's son and daughter was intended as a gift of the remainder and not merely a statement of what the testator believed to be the rule of succession in case of his niece's intestacy. It is true that this gift of the remainder would contravene the rule against bequests in favour of unborn persons and would be bad, but this is not a point that can be taken into consideration when the question is merely the interpretation of the Will [Edwards v. Edwards (4)]. We are of opinion, therefore, that the Will was not intended to, and did not, vest an absolute estate of inheritance in Sahodra Bibi, and that, therefore, she did not in that capacity have an unfettered right of alienation.

It is then contended that the estate conferred on the niece, if not an absolute estate, was an estate of the kind that a Hindu widow inherits in the case of an intestacy, that is, that the niece had the power of alienation for legal necessity and that legal necessity was established in the present case so as to justify the particular alienation assailed in this suit.

In the course of the argument a doubt was at one time suggested whether such an estate can be created by act of parties. It was expressly held in the case of Meda Vengamma v. Mitta Chelamiah (5) that such an estate can be created by act of parties. Their Lordships of the Privy Council assumed that it could be so created so far back as 1875 in the case of Bhagbutty Devi v. Bholanath Thakoor (6), and there has been a long series of cases in the Privy Council which have proceeded upon this assumption. We are of opinion that such an estate can be created by Will.

The question we have to determine in the first place is, whether the estate created in Sahodra Bibi was a mere estate for life in the English sense of the term, or a woman's estate as known to Hindu Law. The authorities which might assist in the determination of this question are somewhat perplexing, inasmuch as the term "estate for life" has been frequently used in Indian cases as synonymous with a widow's or a woman's estate. Thus in the case of Lallu v. Jagmohan (7) Farran, C. J., described an estate in which he held that the widow had wider powers of alienation than an ordinary Hindu widow as a life estate. And in the case of Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranees Mani Dassce (8) their Lordships of the Privy Council described the estate in one sentence as a woman's estate in the property, and in another as an estate for life. Again in the case of Gooroo Das Mustafi v. Sarat Chunder Mustafi (9), Mr. Justice Geidt, while concurring in the view that the estate was merely an estate for life, went on to remark that the estate resembled that of a Hindu widow; and in Mahim Chandra v. Hara Kumari (10) the expression "the life-estate of a Hindu widow" occurs. The only case in which it is possible to say that it was held that a pure estate for life in the English sense as distinguished from a woman's estate was created, is the case of Bhagabutti Devi v. Bholanath Thakoor (6) decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council so far back as the year 1875 [Bhagbutty Devi v. Bholanath Thakoor (6)]. That, however, was a case of settlement made inter vivos.

The question, therefore, we have to determine is practically res integra, but this at any rate can be laid down with certainty that in construing the Will it is not permissible to take into consideration what the effect of such a Will as this would have been under the English Law. It is not permissible for instance to import the idea that where an estate is devised to enure only for life, the result is that an estate in fee in remainder, whether vested or contingent, must exist in some one. In the case of Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (11) their Lordships of the Privy Council desired emphatically to call attention to a passage in the judgment of the Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court with which their Lordships were in entire concurrence. The passage is this (page 474 of the Report):—

"English rules of construction have grown up side by side with a very special law of property and a very artificial system of conveyancing, and the success of those rules in giving effect to the real intention of those whose language they are used to interpret, depends not more upon their original fitness (8) 35 I. for that purpose than upon the fact that English documents of a formal kind are ordinarily framed with a knowledge of the very rules of construction which are afterwards applied to them. It is a very serious thing to use such rules in interpreting the instruments of Hindus who view most transactions from a different point, think differently, and speak differently from Englishmen, and who have never heard of the rules in question."

Again in the case of Richard Ross Skinner v. Naunihal Singh (12) their Lordships say that English rules of interpretation must not be allowed to govern the case but the matter must be determined by the principles of natural justice. It is clear, therefore, that in construing the Will we must banish from our minds for the time being the very artificial legal notions connected with the English idea of an estate for life, and substitute therefor a notion familiar to Hindu Law under which a person holding a restricted estate for life is yet regarded as representing the entire estate. The English classification under which estates are, as has been said, projected along the plane of time and are measured by time alone is foreign to the Hindu Law which measures estates not by duration but by use (Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 847). Now the Will contemplates that the estate should be held first by the widow and then by the niece, and that if a son and daughter born of the womb of the niece are living at the death of the niece, then by the son and daughter. The Will, therefore, does not contemplate the existence of any interest in the estate contemporaneously in the first place with the widow and thereafter with the niece. The bequest of the remainder to the niece's son and daughter was a bequest of a contingent and not a vested remainder. The condition is "if the son and daughter be living on the death of my wife and my niece" [Denn v. Bagshaw (13), Jarman on Wills, 6th Edition, page 1385]; that is to say, under the Will there was no interest vested in any person other than the widow in the first place and after her the niece. The Will, therefore, contemplated that the estate should be completely represented first by the testator's widow and thereafter by his niece; and it is not permissible to import the English artificial idea that an estate in fee was outstanding anywhere else.

In the case of Bhagabutti Devi v. Bhola-nath Thakoor (6) their Lordships mentioned as one of the circumstances in favour of the view that a mere estate for life was intended, and not a widow's estate, that it would follow that if the estate was a widow's estate, the gift of the remainder would not in any sense be a gift of a vested remainder but merely a contingent one. It follows that where a mere contingent remainder is created after a woman's estate and not a vested remainder, this is an indication in favour of the view that the estate created was a woman's estate in the technical sense and not merely a life-estate. The Hindu Law is, as I have said, familiar with estates which though restricted are fully representative. It is true that in describing the estate created in favour of the niece the words "without power of alienation" occur. It does not appear to us to be possible to read those words as more indicative of an estate for life in the English sense than of a widow or woman's estate. Read literally, the words would be as foreign to an estate for life as to a woman's estate. We must not forget that the testator was a Hindu and it is no easier to read into the words the power to convey a title for the remainder of the niece's life than it is to read into the words the power to alienate in the case of legal necessity. The fact is that in cases of this kind it is very easy to use the words "without power of alienation" in a loose sense, that is to say, to use them in the sense without power of alienation except in the case of recognized legal necessity. Thus the Officiating Chief Justice of Madras in the case of Carlapatti Chinna Cunniah v. Oota Wammalivariah (14) says: "We are inclined, therefore, to think he did not intend that his widow should have the power to alienate the estate", when manifestly the meaning was "to alienate otherwise than in the case of necessity". We are of opinion that a reasonable interpretation of the description of the estate created in favour of the niece is an estate such as a woman ordinarily acquires by inheritance under the Hindu Law which she holds in a completely representative character but is unable to alienate except in case of legal necessity.

In the case of Lala Ramjewan Lal v. Dal Koer (15), where the terms of the Will resembled the terms of the Will with which we are dealing in the present case, with this exception that the word malik was used to describe the estate conferred upon the woman in that case, the Judges had to consider the effect of an emphatic condition against alienation. The Judges held that an absolute estate had been conferred, and that on that ground the condition against alienation was void. It is instructive, however, to notice that the Judges say that, if a life-estate had been given, there was no reason why there should be any provision restricting the beneficiary from selling or alienating. Thus in the present case the words "without power to alienate" in respect of the niece's estate were of the nature of surplusage; that is to say, the testator had in his mind the ordinary recognized restriction upon alienation which would apply independently of any provision in the Will, and that he had not in his mind the eventuality of an alienation becoming necessary, either for the purposes of providing maintenance for the niece or for the preservation of his estate.

At a later stage in the Will there is a general expression to the effect that "none shall have the least right of alienation," but in the first place it is not certain that the testator meant by the word "none" in this sentence to refer to any person other than the son and daughter of the niece who had been mentioned in the immediately preceding sentence. So far as they are concerned, the gift in their favour being obviously an absolute gift, the condition was void. We are also not disposed to attach too much importance to the use of the word "least" in this sentence. We are of opinion that the Will must be read as a whole, and if so read, it is quite clear that the testator intended that his estate should be entirely represented in the first instance by his widow, next by his niece, and after the death of his niece, by the niece's son and daughter. It is inconceivable that he should really have intended to have prevented any of these persons from alienating portions of the estate in the event of an occasion arising such as is described by the term "legal necessity." The principle of repugnancy has been applied in a large series of precedents which deal with the more simple cases in which an absolute estate had been created: but where a completely representative estate has been created the principle, in our opinion, should be applied. In the case of Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (16) the Privy Council said that where a gift is in terms of an inheritable estate with superadded words restricting the power of transfer, the restriction would be rejected as being an attempt to take away that which the law attaches to the estate which the giver has sufficiently shown his intention to create, though he adds a qualification which the law does not recognize. Adopting the expressive words of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in a judgment which is the foundation of the rule of repugnancy [Ferrin v. Blake (17)] the indelible landmarks of property, irrevocably established by the well weighted policy of the law, cannot be exceeded or transgressed by any intention of the testator, be it ever so clear and manifest. Where a testator is found to have intended to create a woman's estate, an estate, that is to say, which is entirely representative, though restricted, an absolute prohibition of alienation even for the purposes of the preservation of the estate should be regarded as coming within the principle above laid down and rejected as being an attempt to take away that which the law attaches to the estate which the giver has sufficiently shown his intention to create. It is however, the fact that to so construe the Will would not be to defeat the real intention of the testator, which clearly was to provide simultaneously for the maintenance of his niece and for the perpetuation of his name. It is precisely with this in view that the power to alienate in the case of necessity has been grafted by judicial decision upon women's estates treated in the texts as inalienable except for religious purposes. The power has been grafted with a view either to secure the maintenance and other objects desired or to preserve the estate and the name of the last male holder.

In the case of Brandon v. Robinson (18) Lord Eldon said: "It is clear, generally speaking, that if property is given to a man for his life, the donor cannot take away the incidents to a life-estate". There is, therefore, nothing in the bare fact that the estate is to last only for life to bar the application of the rule of repugnancy.

We hold that the estate created in favour of the niece was a woman's estate with power to alienate in the case of legal necessity.

We do not doubt that a Hindu can by Will create an estate for life in the English sense, but his intention to do so must be made clear by the terms of the Will itself without any importation of English ideas.

We proceed to consider whether this particular alienation was justified upon the ground of legal necessity. The difficulty in the way of finding in favour of legal necessity is that Ganpat Bhagat, the vendee of the conveyance of 1885, though alive at the time of the suit, was not examined as a witness to testify as to whether he made enquiry or not. On the other hand, there is nothing to indicate that Ganpat would have proved anything more than that he made enquiry. The plaintiff Jagernath in his application for insolvency, made in September 1884, stated that the money lending business was insolvent and that the two debts which were discharged by the conveyances made by Sahodra Bibi in the following year were debts due by the money lending business. We have regard also to the fact that Jagernath's father signed this conveyance of 1885 for Sahodra Bibi as well as three other conveyances in August in the previous year and another conveyance on the same date as the conveyance which is the subject of the suit; and in all these conveyances the urgent necessity for alienation is recited. Jagernath himself is a witness to the three conveyances made in August 1884, in each of which the urgent necessity is recited. We would not be disposed to give undue weight to the fact that the business appears to have declined from the prosperous condition in which Fateh Chand left it in 1848, for the evidence is, and this evidence is not denied, that the plaintiff's father, and after him the plaintiff himself, managed the business; and if any blame is attached to the management for the insolvency the blame was theirs. The alienation was made at a time when Jagernath's application in insolvency was about to fail. Twenty-five years had passed since the conveyance of 1885 when the suit was instituted. It is permissible, therefore, to apply the principles laid down in the case of Nanda Lal v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (19) on the subject of the weight which may, in such a case as the present, be given to recitals made at or about the time of the conveyance. Their Lordships say (page 229 of the report): "If the deeds were challenged at the time or near the date of their execution, so that independent evidence would be available, the recitals would deserve but slight consideration, and certainly should not be accepted as proof of the facts. But, as time goes by, and all the original parties to the transaction and all those who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old or passed away, a recital consistent with the probability and circumstances of the case assumes greater importance, and cannot lightly be set aside; for it should be remembered that the actual proof of the necessity which justified the deed is not essential to establish its validity. It is only necessary that a representation should have been made to the purchaser that such necessity existed, and that he should have acted honestly and made proper enquiry to satisfy himself of its truth. The recital is clear evidence of the representation, and, if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible, the recital, coupled with such circumstances, would be sufficient evidence to support the deed. To hold otherwise would result in deciding that a title becomes weaker as it grows older, so that a transaction—perfectly honest and legitimate when it took place—would ultimately be incapable of justification merely owing to the passage of time". We find that the alienation was justified by necessity.

A point was taken, which we have not hitherto mentioned, that the plaintiffs failed to prove that Jagernath was the heir to the estate. He is the son of Fateh Chand's niece and would, therefore, be a bandhu and would not probably inherit until after many other relations. His evidence, however, is to the effect that except himself there is no other heir to Fateh Chand. This is supported by the recitals in Fateh Chand's Will that he had at that time no other heir. There is no evidence to the contrary and no suggestion that there is any heir other than Jagernath. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the plaintiffs made out sufficiently that Jagernath was the heir of the estate and that the suit cannot be defeated upon the ground of any failure of proof in that connection.

We would accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts.

Will—Conditional ratification of partition by testator, effect of—Suit by legatees impeaching partition, validity of.

A testator, by his Will, declared that the share allotted to him in a partition previously effected as between himself and his co-parceners was to be taken by his heirs on his death, if he did not question the partition during his lifetime. In a suit by the legatees under the Will to set aside the partition:

Held, that the conditional ratification of the partition by the testator was valid and that the suit was, therefore, not maintainable. [p. 760, col. 1.]

Arayalprath Kunhi Pocker v. Kanthilath Ahmad Kuti Haji, 29 M. 62, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 120 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ponnani, in Original Suit No. 285 of 1913.

FACTS of the case are clear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

The plaintiffs, the wife and children of one Sankunni Menon, deceased, brought the suit to recover possession of the plaint properties with mesne profits from the 1st defendant as karnavan and manager of his family. The other defendants in the suit are the remaining members of the tavazhi (branch) of which the 1st defendant is the karnavan and manager. Plaintiffs' suit was decreed and the 1st defendant appeals.

The respondents are the plaintiffs. The facts of the case are not in dispute. The 1st plaintiff's husband, Sankunni Menon, the defendants and some other persons formed members of Parutholli Tarwad. The defendants and other members of the Tarwad effected a partition of the Tarwad properties under a deed dated 29th Dhanu 1086 (13th January 1911). The deceased Sankunni Menon was not a party to the partition, but the properties which under the partition were set apart for the share of Sankunni Menon were put in the possession of 1st defendant by the other parties to the partition deed and it was provided that if Sankunni Menon did not take possession of the items set apart to him, during his lifetime, the defendant's tavazhi was to enjoy the same. Sankunni Menon, so long as he was alive, was not for treating the partition as valid and for accepting the properties allotted by the partition deed for his share as his own. He, however, executed a Will (Exhibit B) in favour of the plaintiffs (his wife and sons), whereby he bequeathed the property reserved for his share under the partition deed to his wife and children contingent upon the event of his not setting aside the partition-deed in his lifetime. The plaintiffs claim the properties as the devisees under the Will.

The 1st defendant resisted the claim and contended that the plaintiffs have acquired no title to the properties and that the late Sankunni Menon had no right to execute a Will in respect of his properties. He denied that he was a trustee for the suit properties and also disputed his liability to render accounts as claimed by the plaintiffs and to pay mesne profits.

The points for decision are:—

(1) Whether the plaintiffs have become the owners of the suit properties on the death of Sankunni Menon by virtue of the Will left by him in favour of the plaintiffs and of the fact of Sankunni Menon's marriage by the 1st plaintiff having been registered under the Malabar Marriage Act, and

(2) whether Sankunni Menon had a valid disposing interest in the suit properties on the date of the Will?

Exhibit A is a copy of the partition-deed entered into among the members of the defendants' Parutholi Tarwad, dated 27th Dhanu 1086 (13th January 1911). As already observed, Sankunni Menon was not a consenting party to the partition and he was not one of the executants thereof. In fact, he objected by Exhibit I, a letter (22nd December 1910) sent by him to the Sub-Registrar of Ponnani, to the partition-deed being registered. Till his death he was not for approving the arrangement evidenced by the partition-deed Exhibit A, and Exhibits II and III show his attitude of mind in respect of the partition, Exhibit A. Even from the very instrument of Will, which he left in favour of the plaintiffs (Exhibit B dated 28th June 1911), two months prior to his death, it is clear that Sankunni Menon had not given up the idea of setting aside the partition arrangement evidenced by Exhibit A, either through Court or otherwise. He bequeathed the properties in favour of the plaintiffs only contingent upon the event of his not setting aside the partition-deed during his lifetime.

It is not alleged in the plaint that Sankunni Menon ratified the arrangement made in the partition-deed. As a matter of fact, it could not be in the nature of things, as we find that even when he drew up the Will (Exhibit B), he had the intention of setting aside, if possible, the partition arrangement.

It is unquestionable that a partition of property belonging to the members governed by Marumakkathayam Law, to be valid, requires the consent of each and every one of the persons interested in the property [Arayalprath Kunhi Pocker v. Kanthilath Ahmad Kuti Haji (1)]. It admits of no doubt that an adult member of a family is entitled to be consulted and his consent secured before a valid partition could be effected. It does not appear that Sankunni Menon was consulted in the matter of the partition. It is, however, beyond doubt that Sankunni Menon was not for effecting a partition and did not consent to the partition. Nor did he, at any time before his death, ratify the arrangement, so far at any rate as it related to his share of the properties mentioned in the partition-deed. If he had ratified the arrangement and signified his assent to the other members of the Tarwad to take possession of the properties set apart for his share before his death, the plaintiffs would be entitled to succeed. It is not correct to say that it was unnecessary for Sankunni Menon to accept the partition-deed before any title passed to him, because the other members have renounced their rights to the suit items in his favour in consideration of their getting some properties for their shares. To effect a valid partition in a Marumakkathayam Tarwad, the consent of each and every one of the adult members of the family, and if they are minors, the beneficial nature of the arrangement to the family as a whole, including the minor members, are essential. If one adult member of the Tarwad stands against the partition, the partition, as a whole, is invalid and it cannot be said to be invalid only in respect of his share.

It is, no doubt, true that the other members of the Tarwad have given effect to the partition and were in possession and management of the respective shares in the properties as per the partition-deed. This fact, by itself, cannot render a partition valid when its validity is impeached, as it could certainly be impeached. With this matter, however, we are not here concerned.

Sankunni Menon had the personal right of election either to avoid the partition or to ratify the partition during his lifetime. He did neither before his death. And failing to do so, he had no disposing interest in the properties (at the time of his death) either at the time of the Will or at the time of his death. The Will takes effect only after his death. Plaintiffs acquired no right to the properties, under the Will or by the marriage.

My findings on the two points are in the negative.

As regards the mesne profits, I am not prepared to disturb the finding of the lower Court. The account books Exhibits VII and VIII are unreliable as the 1st defendant, admittedly, has no personal knowledge of the entries contained therein.

Grounds Nos. 2 and 3 attack the position assigned to 1st defendant as the trustee for Sankunni Menon so far as the plaint properties are concerned. I think that on a reading of the partition-deed, the 1st defendant is, more or less, an implied agent for Sankunni Menon in respect of suit properties.

In the result I allow the appeal with costs throughout."

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think the Will amounted to a conditional ratification of the partition, to take effect if he died without setting it aside, and that the ratification completes the partition. Arayalprath Kunhi Pocker v. Kanchilath Ahmad Kuti Haji (1). The properties claimed were assigned to the deceased as his share, and we do not think his right to them could be made conditional on his taking possession of them during his lifetime.

We reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Probate, revocation of—Legatee under earlier Will, locus standi of.

A legatee, whose interest under a Will has been considerably cut down by an alleged Will said to have been subsequently executed by the testator revoking the earlier one, has locus standi to apply for the revocation of the Probate of the later Will on the ground of non-service of citation, even before he has obtained Probate of the earlier Will. JUDGMENT.

CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal is against an order refusing an application for revocation of Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed, which had been granted to the respondent Raj Kumari Dasi in 1914.

It appears that one Broja Kishore died leaving his widow Kunja Mani, a daughter Raj Kumari, a daughter's son Sarat, a widowed daughter-in-law Draupadi and two granddaughters Sarala and Khiroda. Brojo Kishore executed a Will on the 3rd November 1896 by which he bequeathed, subject to the life interest to be enjoyed by his widow Kunja Mani and with the exception of some properties and legacies, an 8-annas share of his estate to his widowed daughter-in-law Draupadi and the other half to his daughter Raj Kumari. In 1907 Kunja Mani applied for and obtained Probate of a later unregistered Will said to have been executed by Brojo Kishore on the 8th June 1906. By this Will the right of the daughter-in-law in the estate was considerably cut down. Kunja Mani died in 1914 and her daughter Raj Kumari and her son Sarat obtained Letters of Administration] with a copy of, the Will annexed. On the 20th November 1914 an application for revocation was made by Draupadi on the ground that no citation had been served upon her at the time when Letters of Administration were granted to Raj Kumari. Raj Kumari and her son pleaded that citation had been served upon Draupadi. A large number of witnesses were examined on the point as to whether citation had really been served or not. After the evidence on both sides had been taken, at the time of argument it was contended on behalf of Raj Kumari that Draupadi had no locus standi to apply for revocation of the Will, and the learned Judge has thrown out the application on that ground.

We are of opinion that this case ought not to have been disposed of in this way. The fact that there was an earlier Will is admitted and in the later Will itself it is stated that the earlier Will is thereby revoked. There are many references in the evidence on both sides to the earlier Will. Now, if the later Will stands, Draupadi cannot claim any rights under the first Will under which she has a substantial interest. She had, therefore, sufficient interest to oppose the grant of the later Will and to apply for revocation of the later Will.

It is contended that she cannot apply for revocation of the later Will unless and until she obtains Probate of the earlier Will. We think that it is not necessary that Draupadi should obtain Probate of the earlier Will for the purpose of enabling her to apply for revocation of the Letters of Administration. If she succeeds in showing that there was no later Will, it will be open to her to prove the earlier Will and to apply for Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed. We think therefore that she has locus standi to make the application.

In this view, it is unnecessary to consider how far the right of Draupadi for maintenance is affected by the later Will and whether she is entitled to apply for revocation of the later Will on that ground.

The order of the lower Court is set aside and the case sent back to that Court for decision on the question whether Draupadi had been served with citation in the proceedings for grant of Probate in 1907 and for Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed in 1914 to Raj Kumari upon the evidence on the record.

Costs will abide the result. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Jurisdiction—Mistake of law, whether ground for revision—Promissory note, liability of minor on.

Where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a matter and in the exercise of its jurisdiction it makes a mistake in law, that does not entitle the party against whom the decision is given to come to the High Court in revision. [p. 762, col. 1.]

Plaintiff brought a suit on a promissory note executed by the defendant. Defendant pleaded infancy, whereupon the Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was a minor but that he had fraudulently misrepresented his age, so that he was estopped from setting up his minority as a defence. It, therefore, decreed the suit. The suit being of small cause nature, the defendant applied in revision to the High Court:

Held, that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding the minor liable on the finding of fact arrived at by it, but that the mistake being a mere mistake of law the High Court could not interfere in revision. [p. 762, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this application. The suit was brought upon a promissory note. The defendant pleaded that he was a minor at the date of the note. The Munsif held that he was a minor and dismissed the suit. In appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the defendant was a minor but that he had fraudulently misrepresented his age to the plaintiff, and on this ground reversed the decision of the Munsif and decreed the suit. The preliminary objection is that the suit being of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court, the Code does not provide for a second appeal and that the defendant is not entitled to apply in revision under the provisions of section 115. It is quite clear that the Court had jurisdiction to determine the matter and in exercise of its jurisdiction, if it made a mistake in law, this does not entitle the party against whom the decision is to come here in revision. We may mention that the Court was clearly wrong in holding the minor liable on the promissory note on the finding of fact arrived at by it. We reject the application but under the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (VIII of 1869), ss. 59, 64, 65—Non-transferable holding, whether can be sold in execution of decree for rent in District of Sylhet.

In execution of a decree for rent in a case in the District of Sylhet governed by the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, whether the decree is a decree for the co-sharer landlord's share of rent or a decree for the whole rent due on the holding which is non-transferable, the holding cannot be sold under the provisions of section 59 or section 64 or 65 of the Act.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Sylhet, dated the 12th December 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 4th Court at Habiganj, dated the 5th August 1916.

Babu Birendra Chandra Das, for the Appellants, Babu Birendra Kumar Dey, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of a rent decree by attachment and sale of the holding. In the Courts below the case was treated practically as one falling under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the learned District Judge held that the holding not being transferable and the decree in his view being one not for rent but for money, neither the whole of the holding nor the 8-annas share therein, that is to say, the share corresponding with the share of the executing decree-holder could be sold. But the case comes from the District of Sylhet and is, therefore, governed by the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Whether it is, as the District Judge supposed, a decree merely for the co-sharer landlord's share of the rent, or a decree for the whole rent due on the holding, it must be dealt with under the provisions of the Act which we have just cited. In the suit brought by the co-sharer landlord to which all his co-sharers, it appears, were parties there was no prayer and therefore, no order for ejectment. The holding is admittedly not transferable and it would, therefore, seem that it cannot be sold under the provisions of either section 59 or section 64 of the Act. Section 65 of the Act requires that in the first instance execution should be taken out against the person or moveable property of the debtor and thereafter against his immoveable property, if any. If satisfaction cannot be obtained in the manner indicated in section 65 the unexecuted decree may, it appears, become the basis of a suit for ejectment under the provisions of section 52. Whatever may be the proper course open to the decree-holder landlord, it is clear that he cannot in the present proceeding at least obtain satisfaction of his decree by attachment and sale of this non-transferable holding.

For these reasons we dismiss this appeal with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

The connected Rule No. 343 of 1917 is discharged. We make no order as to costs in the Rule.

—RESPONDENT.Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, paras. 14, 15, 21—Arbitration, reference to, out of Court—Revocation of submission by guardian of minor—Award binding minor, validity of—Absence of guardian in proceedings before arbitrators, effect of—Arbitrators, duty of—Misconduct.

The principles of Order XXXII, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, apply to references to arbitration made out of Court. [p. 764, col. 2; p. 767, col. 1.]

Where the guardian of a minor, on whose behalf a reference was made to arbitration, has been grossly negligent or has acted fraudulently in conducting the proceedings before the arbitrators, it is open to the minor to impeach the award by a suit instituted through a guardian or when he attains majority. [p. 764, col. 1.]

Hoghton, In re, Houghton v. Fildes, (1874) 16 Eq. 573 at p. 576; 43 L. J. Ch. 758; 22 W. R. 854, applied.

The Court may also refuse to file the award on objection taken on behalf of the minor. [p. 765, col. 2; p. 767, col. 1.]

Where a reference on behalf of the minor is revoked by the guardian and the arbitrators nevertheless proceed with the reference, it is the duty of the guardian to watch the proceedings on the minor's behalf, and any award passed binding the minor without his being duly represented is liable to be vacated at his instance. It is the duty of the arbitrators to see that the minor is properly represented. [p. 766, col. 2; p. 767, col. 1.]

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—An award cannot be said to be ipso facto invalid because it is not shown to be advantageous or beneficial to the minor. [p. 764, col. 2.]Ramji Ram v. Satiy Ram, 11 Ind. Cas. 481; 14 C. L. J. 188, approved.Romon Kissan Sett v. Hurreddoll Sett, 19 C. 334; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 667, not approved.

An award that is invalid under the law governing minors, as where it is passed on a reference out of Court without the minor being duly represented, comes within the expression 'or otherwise invalid' in paragraph 15 (c) of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, and the Court can, for that reason, set aside the award. [p. 765, col. 1.]

There is no distinction between void and voidable awards so far as paragraph 15 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, is concerned. The rule itself states the circumstances under which an award becomes void in cases dealt with in paragraph 14, suggesting that awards which can be set aside under rule 15 are not to be treated as void awards. [p. 764, col. 1.]

The words 'or otherwise invalid' in paragraph 15 (c) of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, are not ejusdem generis with the other cases mentioned in the clause, but are meant to include all cases of invalidity on grounds other than those mentioned. [p. 765, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—Under paragraph 21 (1), Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, the Court must be satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and must, therefore, enquire into the validity of the reference. In such enquiry the question of benefit to the minor can be raised [p. 766, col. 1.]

An award passed on a reference out of Court binding a minor who was not in fact represented in proceedings before the arbitrators, should be set aside under paragraph 15 (1) of the Schedule as for the arbitrator's misconduct. [p. 767, col. 1.]

An arbitrator fails in his duty and is guilty of misconduct if he does not secure for each party an opportunity to present his case, and he should even go beyond strict legal requirements to do so. [p. 767, col. 1.]

An arbitrator should refrain from passing an award, so long as he is deprived of the power to pass a just one, and should either adjourn the proceedings in case a change in the representation of the minor is probable, or, if one is not probable either generally or within the time, if any, fixed for the award, he should refuse to act. [p. 767, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Court, South Canara, dated the 13th September 1916, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1916.

Messrs. K. V. Adiga and K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Sitaramu Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—This appeal arises in a suit to file an award and is preferred by the 2nd defendant, who is a minor represented by his mother, the other parties being the 1st defendant his father, and the plaintiff, the brother of the 1st defendant and uncle of the 2nd defendant. All these three persons were members of an undivided Hindu family, and the arbitration was sought for the purpose of partitioning the properties between the plaintiff on the one hand and the first and second defendants on the other. The very next day after the submission the 1st defendant, who was acting as the guardian of the 2nd defendant, gave notice to the arbitrator revoking the submission; thereafter he did not appear at all in the proceedings and the arbitrator proceeded to make the partition, no one being there to watch the proceedings on behalf of the 2nd defendant and to protect his interests. It has been held that the revocation by the 1st defendant was not justified and the question for decision, therefore, is whether the failure of the 1st defendant as guardian to conduct the case of the 2nd defendant before the arbitrator, which in my opinion amounted to gross neglect of his duty, is sufficient to vitiate the award. I am clearly of opinion that the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant that an award is ipso facto invalid if it cannot be shown to be beneficial or advantageous to the minor is not sustainable. I am not clear that the learned Judge in the decision in In the matter of Romon Kissen Sett v. Hurrololl Sett (1) has laid down any such proposition. At any rate, I agree with the view of the law as propounded in Ramji Ram v. Salig Ram (2) on this point. Nor am I able to accept the contention of the appellant that the 1st defendant's interest in the arbitration proceedings was adverse to that of the minor and the submission was bad on that ground. No doubt one of the questions which the arbitrator had to deal with was whether certain debts incurred by the 1st defendant were binding, but that question was not raised between the 2nd defendant and the 1st defendant but only between the plaintiff on the one side and the 1st and 2nd defendants on the other and the decision of the arbitrator has in no way concluded that matter between the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant.

On the main question there can be little doubt that it would be open to the minor, by a suit instituted either through a guardian or when he attains majority, to impeach the award if he can prove that his guardian has been grossly negligent or has acted fraudulently in conducting the proceedings before the arbitrator. There can be no doubt that a decree may be impeached where there has been negligence on the part of the next friend in the conduct of the plaintiff's case, and it is stated by Vice-Chancellor Malins in Hoghton, In re; Hoghton v. Fidley (3): "The question which I have to decide is, whether this infant, on whose behalf a decree was taken by consent in 1867, is to suffer by any negligence or want of knowledge on the part of her then next friend. I am clearly of opinion she cannot be called upon to endure that inconvenience. The proposition that an infant of tender years may have her whole fortune wrecked by the neglect of her next friend is so monstrous that I cannot pay attention to it. She is entitled to have a next friend who is diligent and who will protect her interests." See also Lalla Sheo Churn Lal v. Ramnandan Dobe (4). It is unfortunate that there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code which makes it incumbent on the arbitrator, where a reference has been made out of Court, to see that the case of the minor is in the hands of a proper guardian, similar to that laid down by Order XXXII, rule 11, with respect to the Court. I think the proposition laid down by Vice-Chancellor Malins is equally applicable to the proceedings before an arbitrator. This has hardly been disputed before us. The argument which is used to uphold the award is that the Court can refuse to file an award only on the grounds mentioned in the Second Schedule of the Code, rules 15, 14, etc., and that, though a separate suit may lie, the same objections to an award which would justify a suit are not available to the minor when the award is filed and sought to be made a decree of Court under the special procedure provided by the Second Schedule. If this argument were accepted, it would follow that where an award which affects a minor is invalid because of the fraud or neglect of the guardian in the conduct of the arbitration proceedings, the Court is bound to pass a decree in the terms of the award although the next day it would be set aside by a suit on the very same allegations. Unless one is compelled by clear words of the Statute one would not countenance such an interpretation of the law.

Rule 15 says: "No award shall be set aside except on one of the following grounds" be it noted that this does not seem to be confined merely to objections to filing an award but is wide enough to cover suits to set aside an award, including those mentioned in clause (c) which runs as follows, "the award having been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration and proceeding with the suit or after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court, or being otherwise invalid."

LAKSHMINARAYAN TANTRI V. RAMACHANDRA TANTRI.

The phrase "or being otherwise invalid" was for the first time introduced into the new Code and it seems to me that it is wide enough to cover such a case as this. If an award is invalid under the law governing minors, I see no difficulty why such invalidity is not included in these words. It was suggested that "invalid" means "void" and an award which an infant could get set aside would only be voidable, but I do not think that there is any substance in this distinction. If a party does not choose to get rid of an award even in cases falling under clause (c) it would be binding on him, and there seems to be no sense in the distinction between void and voidable awards so far as rule 15 is concerned. In fact, that rule itself states the circumstances under which an award becomes "void" in cases dealt with in rule 14, suggesting that awards which can be set aside under rule 15 are not to be treated as void awards.

Then it was suggested that we must read the words "or being otherwise invalid" as ejusdem generis with the other cases mentioned in clause (c), that is to say, it would only apply to cases where an award is bad on grounds like want of jurisdiction. It seems to me that those words do not call for an ejusdem generis interpretation, but are meant to include all cases of invalidity on grounds other than those mentioned. This view seems to have the support of a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Lutawan v. Lichiya (5), where Richards, C. J., says: "It seems to me that it was the clear intention of the Legislature by this amendment of the Code that objections to the award on the ground of invalidity from any cause whatever would be decided by that Court and by no other Court." This passage might also suggest that the only remedy of the 2nd defendant to the suit would be under rule 15 of the Second Schedule, and not by a separate suit. But it is not necessary in this case to consider whether that general proposition is correct.

It is argued by Mr. Sitarama Rao in support of the lower Court's order that it has not been shown that the 1st defendant as the guardian of the 2nd defendant was, in fact, negligent in the conduct of the case of the 2nd defendant before the arbitrator. But he was not justified in rescinding the submission and when he found that the arbitrator proceeded with the arbitration, it was his duty to appear and watch the proceedings and put forward the case of the minor before him. This is not one of those cases in which there may be a question whether the minor had a good defence or not, if a minor has not a good defence to a suit it is undoubtedly not the duty of the guardian to incur unnecessary costs in defending the suit. The very nature of the arbitration proceeding is ordinarily such that every person having a claim would be interested in seeing that the partition made by the arbitrator is just and fair. In this case the minor alleges that by the partition he has been prejudiced. I am of opinion that the appellant has a valid objection to any decree being passed on the award.

Having regard to the nature of the award which is one for partition, the proper order to be passed is that the suit must be totally dismissed. As regards costs, since it was the conduct of the 1st defendant that led to the award being treated as invalid, I would make him pay the costs of the 2nd defendant in this Court and in the lower Court. The plaintiff-respondent will bear his own costs throughout.

OLDFIELD, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge, South Canara, under section 21, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, filing an award, and against the decree passed in its terms. We have to deal only with the order, since no independent objection has been made to the decree. The arbitrators were asked to make a partition of family property between plaintiff and 1st defendant, brothers, and 2nd defendant, minor son of the last mentioned, the present appellant.

The first objection to the award is that on 2nd defendants's behalf there was no valid submission to arbitration, first defendant, who acted for him, having an interest adverse to his in the proceedings, because an important question in them was whether 1st defendant had incurred certain debts as manager of the family and whether he or its members, including 2nd defendant, were liable for them. But the partition, it was not disputed before us, was of the family properties between the plaintiff on one side and the 1st and 2nd defendants on the other and the interest of the two last mentioned was identical in it, to establish the liability of the family and make a portion of the debts recoverable from the plaintiff instead of the whole being recoverable from the 1st defendant primarily and 2nd defendant secondarily in virtue of his sonship.

It is urged next that the lower Court should, before filing the award, have considered whether the submission to arbitration under the award itself were advantageous to 2nd defendant. As regards the latter there is, so far as we have been shown, only one authority in support of 2nd defendant's claim, Bomon Kissen Sett v. Hurrololl (1), and its weight is small, since it is the decision of a single Judge in an uncontested case. It is in fact impossible to consider whether the award, as distinguished from the submission, is advantageous to the minor concerned, without a discussion of the merits of the questions referred, which would be inconsistent with the principles of arbitration procedure; and it was held in Balaji v. Nana (6), following Jagan Nath v. Mannu Lal (7), that where the reference was not impugned, the Court was bound to pass a decree in terms of the award, if there were none of the objections specified in the Code to doing so. I accordingly turn to the objection that the reference itself was disadvantageous and, therefore, invalid. Under section 21 (1), Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, the Court must be satisfied that the matter has been referred and, no doubt, must, therefore, enquire into the validity of the reference. There is then authority in the first of the two last mentioned cases, which I should be inclined (if necessary) to follow, for the view that the question of benefit to any minor concerned can be raised in such enquiry. See also Ramji Ram v. Salig Ram (2). But it is unnecessary to pursue the matter further, because the objection to the reference, as distinguished from the award, on the ground of disadvantage to the minor 2nd defendant has not been taken in the grounds of appeal here and was not, so far as appears, taken in the lower Court; and I am not prepared to condone the omission and dispose of the point on the materials on record, because it is eminently one which should be stated explicitly with a clear specification of the matters in respect of which disadvantage to the minor was to be feared. It may be added that no attempt at such specification was made in the argument before us.

The next objection is more important. The 1st defendant the day after he consented to the reference revoked his consent and no suggestion has been made that this revocation was legally effective. Subsequently he did not attend the arbitration proceedings, although as regards him personally the arbitrators fully complied with their duty because they did not proceed or place him ex parte until they had given him notices of their intention to do both. But as throughout 1st defendant appears to have acted also as the guardian of the 2nd defendant, the decision to proceed ex parte affected both; and the proceedings took place and the award was passed without any person attending to protect the latter's interest. It is contended that in these circumstances the award should be set aside either under section 15 (1) on account of the arbitrator's misconduct or under section 15 (3) as "otherwise invalid."

As I shall accept the first of these contentions, I need not consider whether the general words "otherwise invalid" cover all conceivable grounds, other than those already specified, on which an award might in proceedings of any description be set aside or only grounds ejusdem generis with those specified in section 15 (3). Turning to section 15 (1), I observe first with reference to Lalla Sheo Churn Lal v. Ramnandan Dobey (4), a decision which has been followed in various unreported cases, that, if first defendant's conduct had occurred in proceedings before a regularly constituted tribunal, it would have justified the subsequent vacation of any decision passed adversely to the minor he represented, since there is no suggestion that he absented himself on consideration of the merits of the case or because he could have had no contention worth advancing with reference to them; and next, with reference to Order XXXII, rule 11, that the Court would have been bound to be vigilant in the minor's interest and, after removing 1st defendant for his failure in his duty, to appoint another guardian in his stead. Are arbitrators acting, like those here in question, on a reference without the Court's intervention under that or any similar duty and is their failure to perform it misconduct? No authority directly in point has been shown us. But generally arbitrators will fail in their clear duty and be guilty of misconduct, if they do not secure for each party an opportunity to present his case: and according to English authority they should even go beyond strict legal requirements in order to do so. Crompton & Co. and Mohan Lal (8), Gladwin v. Chilcote (9), Haigh v. Haigh (10) and Whatley v. Morland (11). The principle involved is one of substance and the case of a minor, such as that before us, is not one, in which it should be relaxed. True, arbitrators cannot, like a regularly constituted Court, protect his interest by removing the defaulting guardian and appointing another in his stead. But their duty may fairly be taken to be to refrain from passing an award, so long as they are deprived of the power to pass a just one, and either to adjourn the proceedings in case a change in the representation of the minor is probable, or, if one is not probable either generally or within the time (if any) fixed for the return of the award, to refuse to act. In the present case the arbitrators' failure in this duty amounted, in my opinion, to misconduct and on this ground their award must be set aside.

This entails that the appeal should be allowed, the lower Court's decision being set aside and the petition being dismissed. I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother as to costs for the reason he gives.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 148 A, suit under, form of—Suit by co-sharer landlord for separate share of rent, or in the alternative for total rent, nature of—Decree, form of.

Co-sharer landlords, who by arrangement with the tenants collect their shares separately and have in previous years brought separate suits for recovery of their dues, are competent to sue jointly for the total amount due to them under the terms of the original lease, which can be enforced by all the co-sharers together without the consent of the tenants. But if a plaintiff seeks to avail himself of the special provisions of section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he must in his plaint seek to recover the entire amount due to himself and his co-sharers. [p. 768, cols. 1 & 2.]

A co-sharer landlord sued for rent and alleged, in the first paragraph of the plaint, that he had separately collected his share of the rent from the tenant-defendant in previous years. In the second paragraph he stated that he had demanded his separate share of the rent from the tenant but to no avail. He added, in the third paragraph, that he was not aware whether his co-sharers (whom he joined as defendants) had separately realised their shares of the rent. In the first clause of the fourth paragraph he prayed that a decree might be made in his favour for his share of the rent; then followed a second alternative clause to the effect that if it was found that the tenant had not paid the rent due to his co-sharers, he might be granted leave to amend the plaint so as to secure a decree for the entire sum.

Held, that this was not a suit contemplated by section 148 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 768, col. 1.]

The nature of the decree to be made in the suit depends upon its true character. If it is a suit for the share of the rent recoverable by the plaintiff separately by reason of the fact that he has on previous occasions collected that share of the rent separately from his co-sharers, the decree will be a money-decree; if, on the other hand, it is a decree in a suit properly framed under section 148A, the decree will operate as a rent-decree capable of execution under the special procedure prescribed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 768, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The question for determination in this Rule is, whether the suit as framed is maintainable under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff alleged, in the first paragraph of the plaint, that he had separately collected his share of the rent from the tenant-defendant in previous years. In the second paragraph he stated that he had demanded his separate share of the rent from the tenant but to no avail. He added, in the third paragraph, that he was not aware whether his co-sharers (whom he joined as defendants) had separately realised their shares of the rent. In the first clause of the fourth paragraph he prayed that a decree might be made in his favour for his share of the rent; then followed a second alternative clause to the effect that if it was found that the tenant had not paid the rent due to his co-sharers, he might be granted leave to amend the plaint so as to secure a decree for the entire sum. We are of opinion that this is not a plaint in a rent suit of the character contemplated by section 148A.

Reference has been made to the decisions in Pergush Lal v. Akhowri Balgobind Sahoy (1) and Nunda Lal Choudhury v. Kailu Chand Choudhury (2) which, however, do not support the contention of the plaintiff. In each of these cases the plaintiff-landlord instituted the suit on the allegation that rent was recoverable by him jointly with his co-sharers and that he was obliged to institute a suit alone inasmuch as his co-sharers had not joined and had not disclosed how much, if any, sum was due on account of their shares. In the case before us, the plaintiff throughout the plaint proceeds on the allegation that he has previously collected his share of the rent separately and in the first prayer clause actually seeks to recover that share. No doubt, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (3) and subsequently by this Court in the case of Bhola Nath Bose v. Belchambers (4), co-sharer landlords, who by arrangement with the tenants collect their shares separately and have in previous years brought separate suits for recovery of their dues, are competent to sue jointly for the total amount due to them under the terms of the original lease, which can be enforced by all the co-sharers together without the consent of the tenants. But it is plain that if a plaintiff seeks to avail himself of the special provisions of section 148A, he must in his plaint seek to recover the entire amount due to himself and his co-sharers; this the present plaintiff has failed to do. The Courts below have concurrently found that the plaintiff never collected his share of the rent separately and that the evidence he has adduced in support of the allegation made in the plaint is untrustworthy. In our opinion, the suit as framed is not a suit under section 148A and should not have been entertained. We cannot accept the contention that there is no substance in this objection. The nature of the decree to be made in the suit depends upon its true character. If it is a suit for the share of the rent recoverable by the plaintiff separately by reason of the fact that he has on previous occasions collected that share of the rent separately from his co-sharers, the decree will be a money decree; if, on the other hand, it is a decree in a suit properly framed under section 148A, the decree will operate as a rent-decree, capable of execution under the special procedure prescribed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. We are accordingly of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute and the suit dismissed with costs, inasmuch as the allegation of separate collection has not been established. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

A similar order will be drawn up in Rule No. 306 of 1917.

PAPALA CHAKRAPANI v. LACHIMIACHI.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2592 OF 1914.

January 9, 1918.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Napier.

PAPALA CHAKRAPANI—PLAINTIFF

versus

LACHIMIACHI, LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF
THE DECEASED 1ST RESPONDENT SUBRA-MANIA CHETTIAR—DEFENDANT No. 1—
RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Sub-mortgage, rights of—Discharge of original mortgage by substitution of other mortgages, how far affects rights of sub-mortgagee—Assignment of mortgage, absence of notice of, to mortgagor, effect of—Sale, right of, by sub-mortgagee—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 67.

There is no necessity to give notice of an assignment of a mortgage to the mortgagor, and such want of notice will not render the sub-mortgage invalid, save in so far as the assignee holds subject to the accounts between him and the original mortgagee. [p. 770, col. 1.]

The substitution of one mortgage by another mortgage will not affect the rights of a sub-mortgagee from the original mortgagee to bring the mortgagee's rights under the earlier mortgage to sale. [p. 770, col. 1.]

A sub-mortgagee has the right to sell the mortgagee's rights against the particular properties sub-mortgaged to him for the whole amount due to him and the mortgagor's remedy against him is just what he would have against the original mortgagee if the latter sought to enforce his debt against those particular properties, viz., to redeem by paying the amount due. [p. 770, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 40 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 379 of 1908.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar (with him Messrs. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar and N. A. Krishna Aiyar), for the Appellant, contended that the position of a sub-mortgagee was not affected by the replacement of the mortgage by subsequent mortgages. The fact that the mortgagor had no notice of the sub-mortgage was immaterial. The only circumstance that could put an end to the sub-mortgage was redemption.

Mr. K. N. Aiyar, for the Respondent, argued that as substitution extinguished the original mortgage, it had the same effect in regard to rights created under the earlier mortgage. It had virtually the same effect as redemption. Further, the mortgagor had no notice of the sub-mortgage and could not be called on to recognise rights created by his mortgagee who had himself been a party to the suppression of his mortgages.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal comes before us for re-hearing so far as the 12th respondent is concerned, our judgment in Second Appeal No. 2592 of 1914 and the decree being to that extent set aside. The points arising have now been re argued on behalf of that respondent. With regard to the question of proof of the sub-mortgage sued on we do not think it necessary to say more than that we consider the proof sufficient. The point most strongly pressed on us was that the plaintiff's sub-mortgage does not now legally affect the property covered by the original mortgage which it purported to charge, that mortgage having been discharged by the substitution of two mortgages, Exhibits C and D, covering distinct portions of the property and executed by two different branches of the family, both documents being executed in ignorance of the existence of the sub-mortgage in favour of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title. We have asked the learned Vakil for authority for the proposition that a sub-mortgage executed without notice to the mortgagor was invalid or that such a sub-mortgage could be rendered inoperative except by redemption of the mortgaged property, and he has been unable to give us any such authority. He has contended, however, that substitution must have the same operation as redemption, the interest affected having been destroyed. This proposition is clearly unsound in principle and has been negatived by authority of that Court. It was laid down in Jones v. Gibbons (1) that there is no necessity to give notice of an assignment to the mortgagor. Vide Fisher on Mortgages, page 631, and White and Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity, 7th Edition, Volume 2, page 38*, where the cases are collected. In Matthews v. Wallwyn (2) it was held that the only rights of a mortgagor without notice of the assignment are that the assignee holds subject to the account between him and the original mortgagee. This latter proposition was re-affirmed (1) (1804) 9 Ves. (Jun.) 407; 32 E. R. 659; 7 R. R. 247. (2) (1798) 4 Ves. (Jun.) 118; 31 E. R. 62.

in Chambers v. Goldwin (3). This principle applies both to payments made prior to the assignment and to those subsequent to it. Vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 21, page 179, and Dixon v. Winch (4), where the limits of the doctrine were considered. As pointed out in our previous judgment the case in Narayana Mudali v. Raghavammal (5) is a direct authority on the point argued before us. It was there held that a subsequent mortgage, in consideration of further advances to the mortgagor although it might operate as a merger of the earlier mortgage as between the original mortgagor and the mortgagee, "could not prejudice the rights of the sub-mortgagee, or affect his rights to bring the mortgagee's rights under the earlier mortgage, to sale." The right to the state of account between the original parties was also recognised, but in that case as in this it was found that the mortgagor had paid nothing.

The next point taken was that the sub-mortgagee could not bring a suit for sale of some of the items covered by the original mortgage which items alone were sub-mortgaged to him by Exhibit B. There is nothing in this objection. The rights of a sub-mortgagee are stated in a decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, Ram Shankar Lal v. Ganesh Prasad (6), as follows:—"A sub-mortgagee is entitled to a decree for sale of the mortgagee rights of his mortgagor subject to the right of redemption by the original mortgagor." In this case the right of the original mortgagee was to bring any one of the properties to sale for the amount of his debt. His right with regard to some of those properties he has assigned by way of sub-mortgage for a sum less than the amount covered by the original mortgage and it is now vested in the plaintiff. The plaintiff has, therefore, the right to sell the mortgagee's rights against those particular properties for the whole amount due to him, and the mortgagor's remedy against him is just what he would have against the original mortgagee if the latter sought to enforce his debt against those particular properties, namely, to redeem by paying the amount due and sued for. We must, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs payable by the 12th respondent both here and in the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decree of the District Munsif. Time for redemption is extended for three months from this date.

Evidence Act (1 of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel by representation or action causing another to change position—Conveyance by person entitled by estoppel, whether transfers good title against those bound by estoppel.

The doctrine of estoppel is based upon the change of position brought about by the representations or actings of the persons bound by the estoppel. [p. 772, col. 2.]

Estoppel applies not only in favour of the person induced to change his or her position, but of a transferee from such person, and it binds not only the person whose representations or actings have created it, but all claiming under him by gratuitous title. [p. 772, col. 2.]

The estates of B., a Raja, were taken under Government management under the Encumbered Estates Act. The manager appointed, who had a power of sale under the Act, put up a village to sale. B. bought it benami in the name of K, but the manager never executed any conveyance to K. Thereafter the management was removed and B. was restored to his estates. K. having died, B. procured K.'s heir L. to convey the village to B.'s illegitimate daughter R. After B.'s death R. conveyed it to A. who sued B.'s heir J. for possession:

Held, that J. was estopped from denying R.'s title. [p. 778 col. 1.]

JAGANNATH PRASHAD SINGH v. ABDULLAH.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently set out in their Lordships' judgment.

Syed Abdullah's suit was dismissed by the first Court, but decreed by the High Court (Chatterjea and Newbould, JJ.). Defendant appealed.

Mr. Dunne, K. C., with him Mr. Ramsay, for the Appellant.—The estoppel relied on by the High Court is that the Raja's conduct prevented us from alleging that the ostensible title was not the real title. But Rajeshwari here was not even ostensible owner. Her transferor never got a conveyance such as would have given him title. Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that to affect immoveable property there must be a registered instrument. The Board has held that until registered a contract has no effect: and that if registration is not effected all equitable rights under the contract are extinguished.

That was a clear case of a representation being acted on: it was not so here. Rajeshwari did not act on any misrepresentation: it has been found she paid no consideration. If the Raja wished to make a gift of the village to her, section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act requires a registered instrument signed by him or on his behalf. Syed Abdullah cannot avail himself of section 41 of that Act, for he neither made reasonable enquiries nor acted bona fide: there are recitals in the deed, but the smallest enquiry would have shown him that they were untrue, and indeed the deed itself recites that he relied on Rajeshwari's representations as to her title.

Sir W. Garth, for Respondents, was not called on.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DUNEDIN.—In this suit Syed Abdullah sues the Raja of Deo for possession of a village called Badam. The plaintiff is purchaser from a dancing girl, Rajeshwari Koer, who is the natural daughter of the late Raja Bhikham of Deo, father of the present Raja, defendant.

The history of the matter is this: Raja Bhikham having got into involved circumstances, his estate was put under management under the provisions of the Chota

(1) 19 I. A. 203; 201 C. 296; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 224; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 20 (P. C.).

Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, which had been made to apply to Deo by a special Act. The manager appointed under the Act one Bhuan Lal, who had in terms of the Act powers of sale, put up to public auction the village of Badam. It was bought by Kashi Nath Singh for the sum of Rs. 2,000. As a matter of fact, Kashi Nath had been put forward by the Raja himself, who provided him with the money. No conveyance was executed by Bhuan Lal in favour of Kashi Nath. The management came to an end in 1896, and the Raja was restored to his estate. In 1897, the Raja, who had expressed his desire to benefit Munni Bibi, the mother of Rajeshwari, and his infant daughter by her, caused Lajjadhari, the adopted son of Kashi Nath who had by this time died, to execute a conveyance of Badam in favour of Rajeshwari. The deed of conveyance bore to be in respect of a consideration of Rs. 5,000 but in reality no money passed—Lajjadhari merely acted on the command of the Raja. On the 22nd April 1898 Rajeshwari, being a minor, applied through her mother as guardian for registration and mutation of names in respect of the village of Badam. On the same day the Raja presented a petition in which he narrated the fact of Badam having been sold by Bhuan Lal, the manager, set forth that Kashi Nath had died without having obtained a conveyance and that Lajjadhari his son had sold the property to Rajeshwari, and prayed that Rajeshwari's petition should be granted and her name inserted in the register, "to which your petitioner has no objection whatever." Rajeshwari's name was accordingly entered in the Government register as proprietrix of the village of Badam.

In October 1898 Raja Bhikham died and the present Raja being a minor the estate came under the management of the Court of Wards. Sometime in 1899 Mr. Wright, the manager, turned out Rajeshwari who was in possession, via facti and without process. In 1901 Mr. Wright conveyed Badam to Ranees Chandra Koer, the surviving widow of Raja Bhikham, on the idea that it was gur property descending from Ranees to Ranees. In 1902 the Ranees applied for mutation of names. Her application was opposed by Rajeshwari and was refused. In 1904 the Ranees raised a civil suit for a declaration that the property was hers. To this suit she called as defendants

JAGANNATH PRASHAD SINGH v. ABDULLAH.

Rajeshwari and the young Raja, the present defendant. The whole facts were gone into. The Ranees had based her case on an allegation that Kashi Nath was a benamidar for her. The Subordinate Judge held that Kashi Nath was the benamidar of Raja Bhikham, and not of the Ranees, and dismissed the suit, adding an opinion that Raja Bhikham himself would have been estopped from denying that the property belonged to Rajeshwari. On appeal the District Court affirmed the judgment, but did not repeat the dictum as to estoppel. In 1908 Rajeshwari executed a conveyance in favour of the present plaintiff, who in the same year raised the present suit.

The defence to the suit was, after discounting irrelevant pleas, based on two grounds, first, a denial of Rajeshwari's title to convey anything to the plaintiff; second, a denial that Rajeshwari had conveyed to the plaintiff on the allegation that she was a minor at the time of the conveyance. The learned Subordinate Judge upheld both defences and dismissed the suit. The Appeal Court reversed and gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff.

It will be convenient to dispose of the second ground of defence first, as it depends on a pure question of fact. The Subordinate Judge, while commenting on the unreliability of the witnesses, three in number, adduced by the defendant to prove the minority, gave judgment on the ground that the rebutting evidence was not what it might have been. The High Court, agreeing with the criticism on the defendant's witnesses, came to the conclusion that the defendant had not made out his allegation. Their Lordships agree with the High Court. The onus to prove minority is on the defendant who asserts it. He brings no reliable evidence to prove this assertion. This defect in his proof cannot, their Lordships think, be cured by a mere criticism of the evidence brought by the plaintiff. It would further seem to their Lordships that the evidence tendered by the brother is not open to any obvious objection. But it is enough to say that the matter being left in doubt the defendant fails to prove his assertion.

The sole question then is whether there was a title in Rajeshwari. Formal title by progress there was not. Both Courts find that the sale by auction, though it gave a right to the purchaser to get a title, did not give him an actual title. Admittedly Kashi Nath never got the actual title, to which as purchaser he was entitled. The plaintiff in the Court below attempted to prove that Kashi Nath was a true purchaser for value. In this he failed, and both Courts are agreed as to this. He was only trustee for the Raja Bhikham. The argument in the lower Court then turned mostly on the effect of the judgments of 1905 and 1906 in the suit by the Ranees. The plaintiff urged that as between Raja Bhikham and the defendant, who were both co-defendants to the Ranees's suit, these judgments formed a res judicata to the effect that the property belonged to Rajeshwari. In deciding rightly that this was not so, the learned Subordinate Judge overlooked the fact that, though the dictum of the Subordinate Judge in the Ranees's suit that Raja Bhikham was in a question with Rajeshwari estopped from denying that the property was hers was an obiter dictum, yet on the emergence of the same facts as were found in that suit, the question arose to be decided in this suit, it being obvious that if Raja Bhikham was estopped, the present Raja, his son, taking by gratuitous title from him, was equally estopped. But the High Court took up that point and decided it in favour of the plaintiff. The question before their Lordships is whether that view was right.

Their Lordships think that it was. In the first place, they are satisfied that the facts are as have been stated above. When, therefore, Lajjadhari executed the conveyance in favour of Rajeshwari at the instance of Raja Bhikham, he (Raja Bhikham) was the true owner. Kashi Nath was a trustee for Raja Bhikham, and Lajjadhari could only succeed to his father's trusteeship. Further, Raja Bhikham was the proprietor of the estate of which Badam was a part. So that if by renunciation or limitation the right of Kashi Nath to get a conveyance became extinct, the full right as well as the title was in him. In this position of affairs not only did Raja Bhikham cause Lajjadhari to execute the conveyance, but when Rajeshwari proceeded to give effect to that conveyance by applying for registration he actively assisted her. By so doing he caused her to change her position, for by registration she became bound for all the State liabilities which attach to the registered holders of immoveable property. If then Raja Bhikham had lived and attempted to regain the property these actings of his would, in their Lordships' view, have estopped him from making the claim. He did not do so. The present defendant is his son, and succeeded by gratuitous title, and he, therefore, cannot do what his father would have been unable to do.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 89, 92—Sale in execution, setting aside of—Deposit by judgment-debtor in treasury, whether deposit in Court—'Court', meaning of—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

The deposit under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code of the purchase-money plus 5 per cent. compensation to the auction-purchaser, is an indulgence to the judgment-debtor. The auction-purchaser is entitled to the benefit of his purchase, unless the rule is strictly and completely complied with. Whether or not the section has been completely complied with, is a question which the Court has jurisdiction to decide and if in the exercise of such jurisdiction, it comes to an erroneous conclusion, the High Court is not entitled to interfere with its order in revision [p. 774, col. 2.]

A judgment-debtor deposited the sum necessary for getting a sale set aside under Order XXI, rule 89, in the treasury owing to the Civil Court being closed on that day. On the re-opening of the Court he applied under the above rule, stating that he had already deposited the money in the treasury. The Court refused to set aside the sale on the ground that the deposit had not been made in the Civil Court:

Held, that as the word 'Court' in Order XXI, rule 89, means Civil Court, the Court had jurisdiction to decide whether the deposit had been made in Court and that the order of the Court, even if it was erroneous, could not be interfered with in revision. [p. 774, cols. 1 & 2.]

The Code gives a right of appeal to an auction-purchaser against an order setting aside a sale, as he is the party mainly affected by the order. [p. 774, col. 2.]

The High Court is not entitled to create what are really appeals put forward in the shape of revisions. [p. 774, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju (with him Mr. Peary Lal Banerji), for the Applicant.

Mr. S. M. Sulaiman (with him Mr. T. N. Chaddha), for the Auction-purchaser.

JUDGMENT.—The facts connected with this application may be stated very shortly. There was a decree for about Rs. 1,000. Certain property of the judgment debtor was directed to be sold. The sale was held by the Collector on behalf of the Civil Court. The sale took place on the 20th September 1916. The property was put up to sale and fetched Rs. 850. On the 15th October the judgment-debtor came to the Collector and stated that he was anxious to have the sale set aside and to save the property; that he could not deposit the decretal amount plus 5 per cent. compensation to the auction-purchaser as the Civil Court was closed but he was anxious to lodge the money in the Treasury. The money was accepted by the Collector. On the 11th November, which was the day on which the Civil Court opened, the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside and stated how the money had been already deposited in the Treasury. There was a Rubkar from the Treasury to the effect that the money had been deposited. In December following the Civil Court directed that the money should be transferred to the account of the Civil Court. The Court of first instance, thereupon, set aside the sale, holding that the money had been deposited within thirty days. The auction-purchaser appealed and the lower Appellate Court held that the money had not been deposited within thirty days or on the 11th November, which was the day on which the Civil Court opened, and accordingly the rule had not been complied with and the auction-purchaser was entitled to the benefit of his purchase. The judgment-debtor has applied in revision. There is no appeal from the order of the lower Appellate Court refusing to set aside the sale.

KADIRVELU NAINAR v. KUPPUSWAMI NAICKER.

It is contended in the first place that the money was in fact deposited within the meaning of the rule and that consequently the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to refuse to set aside the sale, and in the second place that the Court of first instance having set aside the sale no appeal by the auction-purchaser lay to the lower Appellate Court.

Rule 89 provides: "Where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court (a) for payment to the purchaser a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the purchase money, and (b) for payment to the decree-holder, the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder."

Rule 92, clause 2, provides "that where in an application under rule 89 the deposit required by that rule is made within thirty days from the date of the sale, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale."

The question which the Court below had to decide was whether or not the money had been deposited in Court. It is quite clear that Court means the Civil Court. This was a question which admittedly the lower Appellate Court had not only jurisdiction but was bound to decide. It is somewhat difficult to say whether the Court was not technically right in holding, unfortunate though the judgment debtor may have been, in strictness that the money was not deposited in Court within thirty days or on the 11th November, which was the first day the Court opened. It was not until December following that the money was accepted in the Civil Court by ordering the transfer of the deposit to the Civil Court account. It has been decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the High Court is not entitled to create what are really appeals put forward in the shape of revisions and accordingly even if we thought that under the exceptional circumstances of this case the lower Appellate Court might very well have upheld the Court of first instance, this would not justify us in interfering with the decision of the lower Appellate Court in revision.

In this connection it must be remembered that the deposit of the purchase-money plus 5 per cent. compensation of the purchase-money to the auction-purchaser is an indulgence to the judgment-debtor. The auction-purchaser is entitled to the benefit of his purchase unless the section has been strictly and completely complied with. We think that the question whether or not the section has been complied with completely was clearly a question which the Court below had jurisdiction to decide, that it exercised its jurisdiction and that even if we thought it had come to an erroneous conclusion, we would not have been entitled to interfere in revision.

As to the second contention, namely, that an auction-purchaser has no right to appeal, the Code undoubtedly gives a right of appeal against an order setting aside the sale. The party mainly affected by the setting aside of the sale is the auction-purchaser and the Code provides that the sale should not be set aside without notice to him. We think it would be most unreasonable to hold that the Code restricts the right of appeal to the decree-holder or judgment-debtor. We think the application fails and we accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Revision dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in Original Suit No. 498 of 1916.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 10th of December 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgment and decree of the lower Court and the material papers in the suit and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. S. Ganapathi Aiyar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. K. Venkataraghavachari, for the Respondent, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 8th January 1918, the Court (Wallis, C. J., and Sadasiva Aiyar, J.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The present defendant had brought a suit against the present plaintiff in the Presidency Small Cause Court for money due by the plaintiff to a Chit fund, of which the defendant was the stake-holder and in which the plaintiff had four shares, the plaintiff having executed a promissory note in favour of the defendant. The defendant obtained a decree for Rs. 117-2-0 in the suit filed in the Presidency Court of Small Causes against the plaintiff notwithstanding certain defences raised by the plaintiff. The decree is dated the 5th February 1914. The present suit was brought on the 14th December 1916 in the City Civil Court (a) for a declaration that the decree in Small Cause Suit No. 1492 of 1914 is null and void, and (b) for a decree directing the defendant to pay the plaintiff Rs. 399-12-0 (the damages incurred by the plaintiff through the defendant's fraud in obtaining the unjust decree) with interest thereon and costs of suit. The grounds alleged as the foundation of this claim are found in paragraphs 8 to 10 of the plaint as follows: "The defendant falsely swore in that suit that he paid only ten monthly instalments" (to the Chit) and that certain receipts were passed only for instalments paid in respect of the Chit fund transaction, and not for independent loans advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant, "that the defendant also dishonestly suppressed the fact that he was bound to give credit for Rs. 68 due to the plaintiff as premia in the Chit and that the decree of the Small Cause Court which was obtained by the plaintiff's wilful perjury and suppression of material facts was obtained in fraud of the Court."

The plaintiff's suit was dismissed by the learned City Civil Judge, on the ground that his Court cannot be converted into a Court of Appeal on a question of fact from the decision of the Small Cause Court. In Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) Boddam and Moore, JJ., purported to follow the English cases in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (2) and in Vadala v. Lawes (3) and held that a judgment obtained by perjury is a judgment obtained by fraud committed upon the Court and could be set aside in a separate suit. The learned Judges evidently thought that the decision in the well-known case of Flower v. Lloyd (4) was overruled by the two later English decisions referred to by them. The decision in Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) has been afterwards considered in at least two cases in this Court. In Kumarasawmy Chetty v. Kamakshi Ammal (5), which came before Sundara Aiyar, J. and myself, I said: "I also wish to add that I should not be understood as admitting that a plaintiff can maintain a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud simply because the decree had been obtained on perjured testimony. I know it has been so held in Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1), but I have grave doubts as to the correctness of that decision." Sundara Aiyar, J., agreed with my above observations. Then there is a reported case in Logadapatti Chinnayya v. Kotla Ramanna (6) in which Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., dealt elaborately with the same point. At page 206* it is said: "It is indisputable that the decree may be vacated on the ground that it was obtained by the successful party by fraud. The question is what would amount to fraud which would entitle an unsuccessful litigant to get the decree vacated. He cannot, it is clear, be allowed to get round the rule of res judicata and to prove that the judgment given by the Court was wrong because it came to a wrong conclusion on the evidence before it. It follows from this that the Court's conclusion, both on the construction to be put on the evidence placed before it and on the inference to be drawn from such evidence as well as on the trustworthiness of the evidence, should be regarded as final. If the Court acts erroneously in forming its judgment on any of these matters, the proper remedy is to invoke the help of the appellate tribunal where an appeal is allowed by law. Another mode of rectifying an erroneous judgment is to apply for review of judgment. The unsuccessful party has, in such an application, an opportunity to adduce any evidence which he failed to adduce at the hearing and which he could not, with all proper diligence, have then adduced. It cannot be doubted that, in such cases, he cannot institute a fresh suit to get the judgment vacated." "The test to be applied is, is the fraud complained of not something that was included in what has already been adjudged by the Court, but extraneous to it? If, for instance, a party be prevented by his opponent from conducting his case properly by tricks or misrepresentation, that would amount to fraud. There may also be fraud upon the Court if, in a proceeding in which a party is entitled to get an order without notice to the other side, he procures it by suppressing facts which the law makes it his duty to disclose to the Court. But where two parties fight at arm's length, it is the duty of each to question the allegations made by the other and to adduce all available evidence regarding the truth or falsehood of it. Neither of them can neglect his duty and afterwards claim to show that the allegation of his opponent was false." Then the learned Judge refers to Black on Judgments in 23, Cyclopaedia of American Law and Procedure, as regards the acts which can be relied on as constituting the fraud which would vacate a judgment, namely, things which are collateral to the matters which have been adjudged by the Court. Then the passages from the judgment of the Lord Justice James in Flower v. Lloyd (4) are quoted: "Assuming all the alleged falsehood and fraud to have been substantiated, is such a suit as the present sustainable? That question would require very great consideration indeed, before it is answered in the affirmative. Where is litigation to end if a judgment obtained in an action fought out adversely between two litigants sui juris and at arm's length could be set aside by a fresh action on the ground that perjury had been committed in the first action, or that false answers had been given to interrogatories or a misleading production of documents or of a machine, or of a process had been given? There are hundreds of actions tried every year in which the evidence is irreconcilably conflicting, and must be on one side or other wilfully and corruptly perjured. In this case, if the plaintiffs had sustained on this appeal the judgment in their favour, the present defendants, in their turn might bring a fresh action to set that judgment aside on the ground of perjury of the principal witness and subornation of perjury and so the parties might go on alternately ad infinitum. There is no distinction in principle between the old Common Law action and the old Chancery suit and the Court ought to pause long before it establishes a precedent which would or might make, in numberless cases, judgments, supposed to be final only the commencement of a new series of actions. Perjuries, falsehoods, frauds, when detected, must be punished and punished severely, but in their desire to prevent parties litigant from obtaining any benefit from such foul means, the Court must not forget the evils which may arise from opening such new sources of litigation, amongst such evils not the least being that it would be certain to multiply indefinitely the mass of those very perjuries, falsehoods and frauds." The learned Judge declined, therefore, to follow Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1). As regards the two English cases Abuloff v. Oppenheimer (2) and Vadala v. Lines (3), they were cases of suits brought upon foreign judgments. In the case in Nanda

KADIRVELU NAINAR v. KUPPUSWAMI NAICKER.

Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (7) Jenkins, C. J., says at page 998* that the jurisdiction to set aside a decree for fraud "is to be exercised with care and reserve, for it would be highly detrimental to encourage the idea in litigants that the final judgment in a suit is to be merely a prelude to further litigation." In Ramratan Iol v. Bhuri Begam (8) Richards, C. J., quotes with approval passages from Flower v. Lloyd (4), dissents from Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (9), which was disapproved of in the Calcutta High Court itself in Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (10), and approves of Jenkins, C. J.'s observations in Nanda Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (7). In Janki Kuar v. Lachmi Narain (11) also Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) was expressly dissented from and the learned Judges say that the weight of authority is in support of the view taken in Nanda Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (7) and in Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (10), that is, in favour of the view taken in Flower v. Lloyd (4), and in the Madras case Logadapatti Ohinnayya v. Kotla Ramanna (6). I think that in India the considerations mentioned by James, L. J., in Flower v. Lloyd (4) apply with very great force, as it is dangerous to allow a fresh suit to be brought by an unsuccessful litigant to set aside the decree passed against him on the ground that his opponent had imposed on the Court by letting in perjured evidence. The two cases relied on in Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) and the later case in Cole v. Langford (12), merely follow old English precedents and do not attempt to tackle with the weighty reasons given in Flower v. Lloyd (4). The passion for litigation, wherever it exists in this country, is likely to turn into almost incurable mania and the doctrine of res judicata would become practically useless if Lakshmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (9) is followed in Indian Courts.

Having regard, however, to the conflict of views found in the decisions in Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) and in Logadapatti Chinnayya v. Kotla Ramanna (6), I would refer the following question to the Full Bench:—

"Was the question of law considered in Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) rightly decided in that case?"

WALLIS, C. J.—I concur in the order of reference.

The appeal came up for hearing before the Full Bench on 9th April 1918.

Mr. K. S. Ganapatty Aiyar, for the Appellant, relied on Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1), which holds that a judgment obtained by false evidence is a judgment obtained by fraud and is, therefore, liable to be vacated. Vide also Aboulloff v. Oppenheimer (2) and Vadala v. Lawes (3).

Mr. K. Venkataraghavachari, for the Respondent, urged that Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) was against the preponderating weight of judicial decisions and should not be followed. Reference was made to Logadapatti Ohinnayya v. Kotla Ramanna (6), Moruful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (10), Janki Kuar v. Lachmi Narain (11). The effect of upholding the decision in Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) would be to make the Court which is asked to vacate the decree of another Court virtually a Court of Appeal. The perjury committed in a proceeding must be exposed in the very action itself. The finality of a judgment should, as far as possible, be preserved and there should be no loopholes for fresh litigation.

Aboulloff v. Oppenheimer (2) and Vadala v. Lawes (3) are actions on foreign judgments.

The English case of Flower v. Lloyd (4) was also cited.

OPINION.—In Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) the Court decided that a suit could be instituted to set aside a decree on the ground that it had been obtained by false evidence tendered at the trial and by the suppression of evidence. On reference to the printed papers it appears that the alleged suppression of evidence consisted in the non-production of a promissory note the very existence of which the defendant denied when giving evidence in the case. There has been considerable difference of opinion in England as to whether an action would lie to set aside the judgment of an English Court on the ground that it had been obtained by perjured evidence. In India the weight of authority appears to be in favour of holding that such a suit will not lie for the reasons given by Sundara Aiyar, J., in Logadapatti Chinnayya v. Kotla Ramanna (6), by the Calcutta Court in Mornful Huq v. Surendra Nath Roy (10), and by the Allahabad Court in Janki Kuar v. Lachmi Narain (11). We are, therefore, of opinion that Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (1) was wrongly decided and must be overruled.

Mortgage—Part of consideration kept in deposit and paid afterwards—Remedies of mortgagor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16, 74—Undue influence—Penalty—Interest, high rate of, whether allowable.

Where at the time of the execution of a mortgage bond for Rs. 3,000, only the sum of Rs. 1,000 was advanced to the mortgagor and the balance was kept in deposit with the mortgagee, which was subsequently paid over to the mortgagor on a registered receipt after the expiry of the due date of repayment stipulated in the mortgage bond:

Held, that in regard to the balance of Rs. 2,000 subsequently advanced the remedy of the mortgagee was not a mere personal action based on a simple contract, but he could recover the whole amount of Rs. 3,000 by a suit on the mortgage security. [p. 779, col. 1.]

* Without any evidence of undue influence exercised or unfair means adopted by the lender, a rate of interest agreed to by the borrower cannot be disallowed as being penal unless it is so high as to shock the conscience of the Court. [p. 779, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Midnapore, dated the 29th August 1916,

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Khitish Chunder Chuckerburtty, for Babu Nilkant Ghosh, for the Appellant.—The mortgage-bond is only a bond, for Rs. 1,000 though the consideration of Rs. 3,000 was mentioned in the bond because as a matter of fact Rs. 1,000 was advanced at the time of the execution of the bond. The other sum of Rs. 2,000 remained with the mortgagee even after the due date of repayment. They were advanced subsequently on taking a registered receipt. Therefore the lending of this sum of Rs. 2,000 was the subject-matter of a separate contract and did not form part of the mortgage-bond. So with regard to this sum limitation applicable would be 3 years only, vide Munshi Bajrangi Sahai v. Udit Narain Singh (1). Then the question remains whether the money advanced on receipt can be taken as the part of the consideration money of the bond. I submit not. The case is on all fours with Walker v. Carleton (2). See also the Full Bench case of Gokal Chant v. Rahman (3). Moreover, the compound interest allowed in this case is penal.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerburtty (with him Babu Khirol Narain Bhuiin) for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant from the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Midnapore, dated the 29th day of August 1916. The appeal is one of the most frivolous nature. I doubt whether I have ever seen an appeal with less to support it than the present one; and, if I may say so, that is saying a good deal. The suit was brought to enforce a registered mortgage bond. The suit was of the simplest description and the mortgage-bond bore interest at the rate of $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum with annual rests, which in this country certainly is not excessive. The mortgage is admitted by both sides.

The two points raised in this appeal are these: First of all, that a part of the claim is barred by limitation and secondly, that the interest contracted to be paid by the mortgage-bond is penal. Both the points are equally bad. The mortgage itself was dated the 7th May 1906. I give the date under the Gregorian Calendar, because I find it more convenient. The mortgage purported to secure a sum of Rs. 3,000 with interest. The mortgagor took only Rs. 1,000 at the time of the execution of the bond; the other Rs. 2,000 was what is called in this country kept in deposit with the mortgagee, that means that the money was placed in a separate account in the hands of the mortgagee, the mortgagor having the right to have the same whenever he wished. The date of the repayment was agreed to be 13th April 1908. The date of the repayment arrived and the sum of Rs. 2,000 still remained in deposit with the mortgagee. On the 1st October 1905 the Rs. 2,000 was paid over to the defendant by the plaintiff and subsequently—and wisely I expect—the mortgagee plaintiff obtained a registered receipt for the Rs. 2,000 on the 7th January 1909. The first point is that the suit to recover the sum of Rs. 2,000 is not based upon the mortgage security at all but that it is a mere personal remedy to recover the sum of Rs. 2,000 due upon a simple contract and, therefore, it is barred by limitation. There is nothing in this point. It is a non-arguable point and it only requires to be stated to show how wrong it is. It is said that there are decisions of some of the Courts in India and also in America that support such a proposition. All I can say is that, if there are such decisions, I respectfully disagree with them and I expect that, if the decisions were available and could be looked at, one would find that they do not lay down the proposition that the learned Vakil for the appellant in this case says that they do.

(2) 97 Ill. 582.

(3) 69 P. R. 1907 (F. B.).

The other point is an extremely frivolous point, namely, that the rate of interest is penal. What the non-penal rate is is not suggested. The defendant has not gone into the witness box to state that any undue influence was exercised or any unfair means were adopted. This rate, the rate of $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum, is clearly not so high on a mortgage in the district of Midnapore of a property of this nature as to shock the conscience of the Court. It is a rate which the Judges in the local Courts at Midnapore must see exceeded every day the Court sits,

Certainly $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum with annual rests is usual in the Mofussil and, so far as I know, it is a rate that has not been quarrelled with in this Court. I notice that, since the intended legislation, this class of penal rate seems to have increased in this Court. When the mortgagor sees that he cannot repay the money the rate is stated to be penal and excessive. The short answer is either do not borrow money at this rate or, if you do borrow, repay the money on the date you agreed on the contract to repay. The mortgagor has only got himself to thank if on account of his failure to pay off the loan for a long period of years, the debt amounts to a considerable sum. The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one hundred and fifty rupees.

SHMASUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 19, 20, 21—Contract for supply of goods—Goods not ordered sent with goods ordered—Return of goods not ordered by buyer—Claim for value of goods ordered and damages for negligent re-transmission of goods not ordered—Place of suing—Cause of action—Jurisdiction—S. 21, applicability of, to usurpation of jurisdiction of foreign Courts.

Defendants, who were residents of Sagaram in the Mysore State, contracted with the plaintiffs, residing at Kumbakonam in British India, for the supply of certain articles by the latter. The plaintiffs sent the goods ordered by the defendants along with goods not ordered. The defendants having returned all the goods, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit at Kumbakonam for the value of the six articles ordered and of the other articles also on the ground that they were negligently re-transmitted causing loss to the plaintiffs.

MANJAPPA V. RAJAGOPALACHARIAR.

Held, (1) that the cause of action arose at, and the suit was properly filed, at Kumbakonam in respect of the goods ordered, as the proposal by defendants was impliedly accepted at that place; [p. 780, col. 2.]

(2) that the cause of action in respect of the other articles was distinct, and the defendants' liability being for damages for alleged negligence, the cause of action arose at Sagaram and it was not competent for the Kumbakonam Court to take cognizance of that portion of the claim; [p. 780, col. 2.]

(3) that section 21, Civil Procedure Code, did not apply to usurpation of the jurisdiction of a foreign Court. [p. 780, col. 2.]

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell, in Civil Revision Petition No. 1116 of 1916, preferred to the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Small Causes at Kumbakonam, in Small Cause Suit No. 285 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Ramanath Shenai, for the Appellants, argued that the cause of action in respect of the goods ordered was distinct from that in respect of the goods not ordered. The defendants' liability, if any, did not arise from any contract with the plaintiffs. Some of the goods were not ordered by defendants and they were returned at plaintiffs' express request. Defendants could only be held accountable for negligence in handling them or for their method of reconveyance. The negligence, if any, was committed at the place where defendants resided. The Kumbakonam Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this portion of the claim.

Mr. T. Narasimha Iyengar, for the Respondents, argued that the requisition to the defendants to return the goods not ordered and the latter's returning the goods in compliance therewith constituted an implied contract between the parties and the contract was entered into at Kumbakonam. The Kumbakonam Court, therefore, had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the claim.

Besides, the objection was not taken in the lower Court, and section 21, Civil Procedure Code, barred the objection at that stage.

Mr. Ramanath Shenai was heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' claim is first to be paid for six articles ordered by defendants, which the latter were, therefore, bound to pay for and which they had no right to return. Part of the cause of action as regards these articles arose at Kumbakonam, where plaintiffs complied with defendants' order by despatching the articles to them, thus impliedly accepting their proposal. The lower Court, therefore, had jurisdiction as regards this part of the case. There is no answer to it on the merits.

Next, however, plaintiffs claim the value of 17 other articles, which, it is not disputed, they sent in excess of defendants' order, on the ground that they failed to use the proper amount of care in the method by which they returned them to them at their request and that they consequently did not reach them.

It is argued, first, that the cause of action for this amount arose in part at Kumbakonam, where plaintiffs were, because it is based on a contract entered into between defendants and plaintiffs to return the articles and plaintiffs entered into that contract there. It is clear, however, that there was no contract, defendants simply undertaking to return the articles at plaintiffs' request made without reference to the passing of any consideration. The liability, if any, is in fact for damages for their alleged negligence; and that negligence took place, it is not denied, at Sagaram in Mysore State. They must, therefore, be sued there.

Next section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure is relied on. But we have been shown no authority for holding, and we do not think, that this provision is applicable to usurpation of the jurisdiction of a foreign Court.

It is then suggested that, as the part of plaintiffs' claim relating to the 6 articles was properly made at Kumbakonam, the whole could be made there. But when the causes of action in respect of the 6 and the 17 articles were distinct, there is no reason why the jurisdiction competent in the case of one should be competent in the case of the other also.

The claim as regards the 17 articles was, therefore, not made in a competent Court and it should have been disallowed. The claim as regards the 6 articles should have been decreed.

The lower Court's decision and that of the learned Judge are set aside and the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 102 (dd), 106—Suit under s. 106—Dispute between neighbouring proprietors—Question for determination.

In a suit under the provisions of section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, to amend a Record of Rights in which the dispute is between two neighbouring proprietors, and which comes within the provisions of section 102 (dd), the only question between those rival proprietors that can be gone into, is the question as to which of them was in possession of the land in question at the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights. [p. 782, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 28th January 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 7th December 1914.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose II (with him Babu Urukram Das Chuckerbarty) for the Appellant.—The suit was under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for correction of Settlement records after declaration of plaintiff's title to the disputed land. The plaintiff asked for a declaration that the disputed land entered in the finally published Record of Rights as appertaining to defendant's village really appertained to plaintiff's village and that the Settlement record should be corrected accordingly. The disputed land was mainly waste land but a portion of it was cultivated for several years. There was a local investigation by a survey-knowing Pleader Commissioner, who found that most of the disputed land belonged to the plaintiff's village. The first Court gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, holding that in case of disputed possession title settles the dispute, and as in the present case title was with the plaintiff so possession went with it. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the first Court and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court held that all that the plaintiff could get, if successful in this suit between rival landlords, was (1) a declaration that the Record of Rights was wrong in showing that at the time it was published the disputed land was in defendant's possession as part of his village and not in plaintiff's possession as part of his village and (2) an order directing an entry showing plaintiff as the landlord under section 107 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

As regards the cultivated land, the lower Appellate Court says the Record of Rights raises a presumption that it was in defendant's possession at the time of publication and the plaintiff has failed to rebut that presumption. The defendant being in possession of part of the disputed land and having claimed title to the whole of the disputed land and the plaintiff having notice of the defendant's claim to the entire suit land (waste and cultivated), the Record of Rights was clearly right as to the possession of the land in suit. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit, holding that the first Court had misconceived the case entirely in treating the suit as one for declaration of title.

The disputed land being mainly waste land the suit comes under section 102, clause (dd) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case reported as Mohunt Padmalay Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1) was decided before the clause (dd) was inserted in section 102 of the Act. By this clause a change in the law has been introduced. When the case comes under this clause, the Court cannot decide the question of possession without going into the question of title. See the remarks of Mr. Justice Coxe in Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1), last paragraph. By the insertion of clause (dd) the Legislature has made a change in the law and such questions of title between rival proprietors can now be gone into under the Act and in deciding such questions the Court must go into the question of title.

In the case reported as Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1) there were tenants and the question was to whom the tenants must pay their rents, but in the present case there was no recorded tenant.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with him Babu Surendro Nath Das Gupta), for the Respondent. —All the decisions of this Court commencing from Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1) are in my favour. Though the decision in Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1) was before the insertion of the clause (dd), in section 102 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the decisions in Kali Sundari v. Giriya Sankar (2), Ram Chandra Bhanj Deo v. Nanda Nandananda Deb (3) and Pran Krishna Saha v. Trailakhy Nath Chowdhury (4) are all decisions after the insertion of the clause (dd) and in all these cases the decision in Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1) has been followed. In the case reported as Ramchandra Bhanj Deo v. Nanda Nandananda Deb (3) it was argued that the decision in Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1) was wrong and should be referred to the Full Bench but that contention was disallowed.

Babu Bipin Behari Ghose, in reply.—The later decisions have blindly followed the decision in Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1) which was before the insertion of the clause (dd), and in those decisions the significance of the clause (dd) has not been observed. The remarks of Mr. Justice Coxe at page 13, last paragraph, of 12 Calcutta Weekly Notes make it quite clear.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned District Judge of Birbhum, dated the 28th January 1916, reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge of the same place. The plaintiff brought the suit under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to amend a Record of Rights. The dispute in this case is a dispute between two neighbouring proprietors and, therefore, the case comes within the provisions of section 102 (dd). The learned District Judge in this case has considered that having regard to the authorities in this Court, the only question between these rival proprietors that he can go into in a suit instituted under the provisions of sections 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is the question as to which of these two rival proprietors was in possession of the land in question at the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights. I think that the authorities in this Court do establish that. I have authorities beginning with the decision of Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Coxe reported as Mohunt Padmalav Ramanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1), and that decision is followed by the cases reported as Kali Sundari v. Giriya Sankar (2), Ramchandra Bhanj Deo v. Nanda Nandananda Deb (3) and Pran Krishna Saha v. Trailakhy Nath Chowdhury (4). We are bound by these authorities and we content ourselves by simply saying that following those decisions the present appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Where a sale is set aside under Order XXI, rule 89, Civil Procedure Code, the result is that there are no assets realised under which other creditors of the judgment-debtor can claim rateable distribution.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the 2nd defendant attached the suit property in execution of a decree and brought it to sale. The sale was set aside under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code. The result of setting aside the sale was that in accordance with a recent decision of the Privy Council in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (1) and a recent Full Bench decision which followed it. No assets had been realised under that attachment against which other creditors could claim rateable distribution under section 64 of the Code.

The 2nd defendant's claim against the suit property was satisfied by the deposit pursuant to rule 89, but the decree was not fully satisfied and a particular sum has subsequently accrued as interest.

Assuming that the 2nd defendant, the attaching creditor, had the right to bring the property to sale a second time in satisfaction of that balance, that has not been done; if it were done, that sale could again be set aside on payment of the balance and other charges provided for in the rule. No assets have been realised under this attachment against which the 2nd defendant is entitled to proceed in respect of another decree which he has obtained. If the 2nd defendant wishes to bring this property to sale, he must attach under that other decree and bring it to sale. But then he would be met by the objection that the sale to the plaintiff was prior to that attachment. The circumstances very much resemble the circumstances of the Privy Council case. In both the cases, the attaching decree-holder was seeking to make use of the attachment for the satisfaction of some other debt when there had been no sale and no realisation of the assets under the attachment. On the other hand there has been an alienation to a third party, which is good against any subsequent attachment by the 2nd defendant. In the result we allow the appeal, reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and remand the case to the District Munsif for disposal on the first issue. Costs will abide.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Chittagong, dated the 30th July 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, Fatickeheri, dated the 29th June 1912.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Dayal De, for the Appellants.—If the mortgage is redeemed, it is extinguished. It must be redeemed as a whole. The lower Appellate Court by applying sections 95 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act has made a new case for the plaintiffs. Even assuming that the lower Appellate Court is competent to do so, it ought to have considered the question of limitation.

Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act does not make Article 148 of the Limitation Act of any application to the facts of the present case. Article 144 of the Limitation Act is applicable here. I rely on Vasudev v. Balaji (1), Jai Kishen Joshi v. Budhanand Joshi (2) and Vithal v. Dinkarrao (3).

[RICHARDSON, J.—The case of Vasudev v. Balaji (1) is in your favour, the facts are similar.]

Jai Kishen Joshi v. Budhanand Joshi (2) is also in my favour. The facts in Nidhiran Bandopadhyaya v. Sarbessur Biswas (4) are not similar, there Article 132 was applied. In no case is the period of limitation more than 12 years. The question of limitation was taken in the first Court and there was an issue to that effect, but it was not pressed. If it was treated as a charge, the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below ought to have decided the question of limitation. The plaintiff's suit is clearly barred by limitation.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Dharendra Lal Kastgir), for the Respondent.—The question of limitation was not pressed at the time of argument in the lower Courts. The appellant cannot take the point now. That it was not taken there might depend on many circumstances. If the point was taken, then the facts would have been gone into. The possession of the defendant might not be adverse. Whether it was adverse or not is a question of fact as well as of law. A question of law which involves consideration of facts cannot be taken for the first time in second appeal.

The Bombay case would not apply to the present case because Sir Lawrence Jenkins says at page 504*: "So it depends on many circumstances."

I rely on Ashfaq Ahmad v. Wazir Ali (5), Article 148 would apply to the present case. Why should the period of 60 years be cut down to 12 years? The recent case on the point is Khiali Ram v. Taik Ram (6). There is no Calcutta case on the point. There are earlier Bombay cases, Ramchandra Yashvant v. Sadashiv Abaji (7), Faki Abas v. Faki Nuruddin (8), and a Madras case, Moidin v. Oothumanganni (9).

[RICHARDSON, J.—The principle there laid down is different.]

However, this is a new point and a new point cannot be raised here for the first time in second appeal and there are cases on this point.

JUDGMENT.

a certain Taluk. The facts are as follows: The Taluk originally belonged to three brothers Dhaniram, Gurudas and Kailash. In the year 1249 M. E. (1887) the Taluk was mortgaged by the three brothers to defendant No. 1, Abidulla. On the 7th May 1890 a person of the name of Akbar Ali purported to purchase the whole Taluk in execution of a decree against Dhaniram and Gurudas. On the 6th April 1892 Akbar Ali redeemed the mortgage of Abidulla. Having done so, on the 19th April 1892 he obtained possession of the land through Court. On the 15th September 1893 he further procured from the superior landlord a settlement of the whole Taluk in his favour. The Record of Rights, which was published in the year 1898, contains an entry showing that the Taluk was then in exclusive possession of Akbar Ali under and by virtue of the sale-certificate in his name. On the 5th January 1902 Akbar Ali's sons granted a Raiyati lease of the land to defendant No. 2 and on the 10th January 1907 they sold the superior right to defendant No. 9. On the 25th September 1907 the plaintiff purchased the right of Kailash, one of the original owners of the Taluk whose interest did not pass at the sale in execution of the decree obtained by Akbar Ali. On the 7th June 1911 the plaintiff brought the present suit claiming the right, as I have said, to redeem the defendant No. 9 and to recover possession of the land. In the Trial Court the case appears to have been discussed and decided on the footing that the plaintiff was claiming a right to redeem the mortgage in favour of Abidulla. The learned Munsif found that on that footing the plaintiff was only entitled to redeem as against the defendant No. 9 a one-third share of the Taluk on payment of a proportionate amount of the mortgage-debt. The Munsif further held that the plaintiff was not entitled to eject the defendant No. 2, being apparently of opinion that the defendant No. 2 had a right to remain in possession on the principle laid down in the case of Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (10).

From the Munsif's decree the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court and there was also a cross-objection on behalf of the defendant No. 9. The learned Subordinate Judge dealt with the case on a somewhat different footing. He held, in my opinion, rightly that on the redemption of the original mortgage by Akbar Ali that mortgage came to an end and ceased to exist. Applying section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act, he held that Akbar Ali became entitled as against Kailash to a charge on a one-third share of the land in respect of the latter's one-third share of the mortgage-debt, and that, by paying that share of the debt, Kailash, or the plaintiff in right of Kailash, was entitled to redeem the charge. In regard, therefore, to the plaintiff's claim as against the defendant No. 9, the learned Subordinate Judge arrived by a different process at the same result at which the learned Munsif had arrived. In regard, however, to defendant No. 2, the learned Subordinate Judge took a somewhat different view of the facts and held that defendant No. 2 was not entitled to remain in possession. By his decree the Subordinate Judge varied the decree of the first Court by directing that the plaintiff should recover Khas possession of a one-third share of the Taluk by ejecting the defendant No. 2.

The defendants Nos. 2 and 9 have appealed to this Court and on their behalf it is argued that the Subordinate Judge, though he may have correctly appreciated the legal position, was not entitled to decide in favour of the plaintiff without considering the question of limitation. On that question the learned Pleader for the appellant relies on the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Vasudev v. Balaji (1). It was held there in circumstances somewhat similar to the present that Article 148 of the Limitation Act was inapplicable to a suit for the redemption of a mere charge and, apparently, that in default of any other Article such a suit would be governed by Article 144. For the plaintiff, on the other hand, reference has been made to the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ashfaq Ahmad v. Wazir Ali (5) and to the decision of a Division Bench of the same Court in the case of Khiali Ram v. Taik Ram (6). The view expressed in these cases appears to be that a suit of this nature comes within Article 148 and may be brought within 60 years from the date when the original mortgage became redeemable. According to that view the present suit would no doubt be in time. With great respect, however, it appears to me that the view taken in the Bombay case is more consistent with the language of sections 95 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act and the language of Article 148 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. The Transfer of Property Act draws a clear distinction between a charge and a mortgage, and it is difficult to interpret the word 'mortgagee' in Article 148 as including a charge. If Article 148 has no application then this suit is prima facie out of time. It was certainly brought more than twelve years from the date when the charge came into existence and more than twelve years from the date when Akbar Ali obtained exclusive possession.

It has been argued, however, for the plaintiff that in the Trial Court, though the question of limitation was made the subject of one of the issues framed for the purposes of the trial, the learned Munsif stated that the point had not been pressed at the time of the argument. It is suggested that as the point turns partly on a matter of fact, it cannot now be raised. The reason, however, why it was not pressed seems to be that in the Trial Court, the parties dealt with the case on the footing that the legal position was such that the relevant Article could only be Article 148. If the period of limitation be 60 years, then there is no room for argument on the point. If, however, as the Subordinate Judge held, the right to redeem must be referred to the charge instead of to the mortgage, the question of limitation assumes another aspect. The learned Pleader for the plaintiff says that the learned Subordinate Judge made a case for the plaintiff which he had not made himself. But that is not so. The Subordinate Judge merely applied the law as he understood it to the facts on which the plaintiff's claim was based. As the plaintiff's success now depends entirely on his right to redeem the charge, he cannot take the advantage of that position without also accepting its disadvantage.

The question then remains whether Akbar Ali, after he obtained possession of this Taluk in the year 1892, i.e., 19 years before the present suit was brought, was in adverse possession of the land as against Kailash. The learned Pleader says that by his purchase of the interests of Dhani-ram and Gurudas he became a co-sharer or partner with Kailash in the mortgaged property. That is so, in a sense. But there is no suggestion that there was any particular connection between him and Kailash. They were not co-sharers in the ordinary sense of the word and having regard to the title which the sale-certificate purported to give him and what subsequently happened to the settlement which he obtained from the superior landlord and to the entry in the Record of Rights, in my opinion there is no room for the suggestion made, i.e., that the possession of Akbar Ali was as a co-sharer also the possession of Kailash. On the contrary it was a possession exclusive of Kailash.

This litigation has lasted for a number of years and as the Courts below have not found on this issue whether Akbar Ali's possession was or was not adverse as against Kailash, it is open to us under section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure to decide the issue ourselves. Speaking for myself, I have no doubt in the circumstances as to what the finding ought to be. In my opinion the suit is barred by limitation.

I should, therefore, allow this appeal and dismiss the suit. The plaintiff must pay the costs of the defendants Nos. 2 and 9 throughout.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

primarily for doer's benefit incidentally benefiting another—Irrigation channel, repair of, benefiting both repairer and third party—Contribution, claim for—Refusal of defendant to pay for repairs—Charge, enforceability as—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 61, 120—Regulation XXVII of 1802, s. 32—Collection of cost of repairs by Collector, effect of.

Section 70 of the Contract Act does not apply to cases where a person does an act for his own benefit and that act incidentally benefits his neighbour or any other person. In such cases the latter need not pay for the extent of the benefit derived by him from the act. [p. 789, col. 1.]

A person claiming contribution from another under section 70 of the Contract Act must prove that he did some act for the latter. An act cannot be described as done by one person for another, unless it can be shown that, but for the existence of that other's interest, it would not have been done. [p. 792, col. 1.]

Plaintiffs, the lessees of the Sivaganga Zemindari, executed certain necessary repairs to a tank which irrigated their lands and the defendants' lands and also the lands of other persons. Before commencing the repairs they intimated to defendants their intention to do so and called upon them to bear their rateable share of the expenses. Defendants replied that they did not want the repairs and refused to pay any portion of the expenses. The plaintiffs, however, completed the repairs, and filed the present suit for contribution against the defendants, relying on section 70 of the Contract Act. They prayed also that the amount that may be decreed to them may be made a charge on the defendants' properties:

Held, (1) that as the repairs were executed by the plaintiffs mainly for their own benefit, though the defendants were also incidentally benefited by them, the latter were not liable for a proportionate share of the expenses under section 70 of the Contract Act; [p. 789, col. 1.]

(2) that, even if defendants were liable, plaintiffs were not entitled to a charge on their property; [p. 791, col. 2.]

Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setruckerla Samaschhararaz, 26 M. 686, distinguished.

(3) that Article 120 and not Article 61 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case. [p. 791, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—Article 61 of the Limitation Act can be applied to cases under section 70 of the Contract Act where the payment made by the plaintiff produced an immediate benefit to the defendant, as in cases of payments of Government revenue or of decree amounts, but the Article will not apply when the benefit will only arise at a subsequent stage and plaintiff's cause of action will not be complete until that subsequent stage is reached. To such cases Article 120 must be applied. [p. 793, col. 2.]

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—The fact that the Collector has levied some portion of the expenses for repairs from defendants by coercive process under section 82 of Regulation XXVII of 1802 will not affect their non-liability under section 70 of the Contract Act. [p. 789, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura (East), in Original Suit No. 53 of 1905.

Messrs. C. S. Govindaraja Mulaliar, C. S. Vencatachariar and N. R. K. Thathachariar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, T. R. Venkatrama Sastri and S. R. Muthuswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

This appeal and the memorandum of cross-objections put in by respondents Nos. 1 and 2 coming on for hearing on the 20th, 21st and 22nd November 1917, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—This appeal is from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, by which he directed the defendants to pay a sum of money as compensation for the benefit enjoyed by them as a result of certain repairs executed by the plaintiffs to a tank called Marnad Tank situate in the Sivaganga Zemindari. The defendants are Inamdars of a village called Vellikurichi and, admittedly, this tank is the source of irrigation for that village and also a number of Ayan and Devasthanam villages. Vellikurichi is what is called a jividam Inam. It was granted prior to the Permanent Settlement to a descendant of Tirumal Naick and is held rent-free. The first ground of the claim is based on section 70 of the Contract Act. Sivaganga Zemindari is now in the possession of the plaintiffs who are lessees, and their case is to the effect that the tank which is a common source of supply to the Ayan villages as well as to Vellikurichi was badly in need of repairs, the bund, in more than one place, had been worn out and the sluices were not in order. It was necessary for the maintenance of the tank in proper condition that considerable repairs should be executed. The finding of the Subordinate Judge is that the tank was, as a matter of fact, in need of repairs and, as a result of the repairs, it has been restored to its proper capacity and even improved. Vellikurichi has benefited by these repairs just as much as other villages, and the Subordinate Judge also finds that, were it not for the repairs, the tank would have gradually gone into ruins. The plaintiffs sent a notice to the defendants that repairs were necessary for the maintenance of the tank in proper condition and also a copy of the estimate, claiming that the defendants were liable to contribute to the cost in proportion to the land which was cultivated with water from the tank. The defendants, in reply, denied their liability and, in fact, said that they did not want any repairs to be done to the tank, so far as they were concerned. The plaintiffs, however, proceeded with the repairs, the cost of which has amounted to Rs. 14,000 and odd.

There can be no doubt that, as a result of the repairs, the tank has been improved. The plaintiffs have not only repaired the tank but they have improved the sluice and put in a regulator under lock and key for the purpose of regulating the discharge of water from the tank. The Subordinate Judge has held the defendants liable for a proportionate share of the expenses of the repairs, but that, so far as the repairs to the sluice are concerned, they could not be said to be for the benefit of the defendants, and he has disallowed the cost of those repairs. The memorandum of cross-objections mainly relates to the cost of repairs to the sluice.

The question we have to consider in this case has a fairly long history, going as far back as 1820 or so. On going through the entire evidence both oral and documentary, one fact seems to be clear, namely, that the Inamdars have all along been refusing to pay anything for the repair of the tank. I shall have again to refer to that matter later on. So far as the application of section 70 of the Contract Act is concerned, it must be taken to be proved that the defendants never authorized the plaintiffs to execute the repairs at their cost and never assented to payment of the expenses. I may assume for the purpose of argument, so far as this question is concerned, that the defendants did in fact enjoy the benefit of the repairs done by the plaintiffs. But that is not enough to bring the case within section 70. This section has been the subject of interpretation in a number of cases in this Court beginning from Damodara Mudaliar v. Secretary of State (1), and it could not be said that the rulings have been consistently uniform on every point. But the weight of the decisions undoubtedly preponderates in favour of the views expressed by Munro and Sankaran

Nair, J.J., in Yogambal Boyee Ammani Ammal v. Naina Pillai Markapur (2) and by Sankaran Nair and Spencer, J.J., in Rajah of Pittapur v. Secretary of State (3). In those cases, the scope of the section has been fully discussed. That section says: "Where a person lawfully does anything for another person, or delivers anything to him, not intending to do so gratuitously, and such other person enjoys the benefit thereof, the latter is bound to make compensation to the former in respect of, or to restore, the thing so done or delivered". In this case, there can be no doubt that the act of the plaintiffs was lawful. The next element that has to be proved by them is that they did the act, the compensation for which they claim from the defendants, for the defendants. It has further to be proved that they did not intend to do what they have done gratuitously and this, we may take it, has been amply proved and is not disputed. The last condition that has to be satisfied is that the defendants should have enjoyed the benefit of the act. As regards this, it is laid down, in the two cases already referred to, that the person who is sought to be charged must have the option of refusing or adopting the benefit. But on this point, there seems to be some difference of opinion. Ayling and Tyabji, J.J., in Saptharishi Reddiar v. Secretary of State for India (4) appear to have doubted whether that view of the law is correct. It is not, however, necessary for us in this case to go into that question.

I think that the plaintiffs have failed to bring their case within section 70 by failing to prove that they did the repairs for the defendants. The irrigation of their own villages also depends as much upon the maintenance of this tank as that of Vellikurichi. The extent of land irrigated in the Ayan villages is more than three times that of the wet land of Vellikurichi. So they had undoubtedly a preponderating interest in the maintenance of the tank. The tank is situated in the plaintiffs' Zemindari and they are the owners of the soil and the tanks. There is nothing in the terms of the notice which the plaintiffs gave to the defendants or in any other evidence to show that the plaintiffs were executing the repairs for the benefit of the defendants. The fact that it is this tank which irrigates their own land and that land is much larger in extent than the wet lands in Vellikurichi village would suggest that when they executed the repairs, they did so for their own benefit. If they did not keep the tank in order, their lands would suffer and we have not been referred to any circumstance which would suggest the inference that they wanted to repair the tank not primarily for the benefit of their own lands but for the benefit of the defendants' lands. The natural inference is that as they had to repair the tank in order to cultivate their own lands, and did so for that purpose, no doubt the repairs would inevitably and incidentally also benefit the defendants' "lands". But that in itself would not show that the plaintiffs' intention in executing the repairs was to benefit the defendants. The law is not that, when a person does any act for his own benefit, and that act incidentally benefits his neighbour or any other person, that neighbour or other person must pay for the extent of the benefit he derives from the act. That certainly is not the scope of section 70 and we have not been referred to any authority that, apart from all question of intention of the person who seeks to charge the defendant for the benefit which he has derived from a certain act of his, the defendant would be liable, if the act happens to be beneficial to him. That, at any rate, is not the scope of section 70, and none of the cases which have been referred to at the Bar have in any way minimised the importance of the condition that the act must be done for the benefit of the defendant. This proposition has never been doubted, though in some cases the question did not really arise, for instance, where payments were made in discharge of arrears of Government revenue by a co owner of the property or by any other person interested in making the payments. To cases of that class which have been brought to our notice, section 69 would apply.

The history of the present case is this. The documents show that before 1820, the Sivaganga Zemindar used to receive a certain periodical payment from the Inamdars in the shape of Kulavettu, that is to say, annual payment in connection with the digging of, or repairs to, the tank. This appears from Exhibit III. However by 1852, the demand made by the Zemindar was not for any Kulavettu but for the defendants' share of the cost of repairs, which is something quite different from Kulavettu. There is nothing whatever to show that at any time, the Inamdars acceded to this demand. Only once in 1854, the Court of Wards, or rather, the Collector, who was in charge of the Zemindari at the time, though it does not clearly appear in what circumstances, did, under section 32 of Regulation XXVII of 1802, realise a certain sum of money in connection with the repairs to the tank. That section deals only with the payment of Tuccavy or of advances of money for repairs of tanks. The plaintiffs now seek, not to recover any advance of money made for repairs, but to enforce contribution towards the cost of repairs already executed without authority from the Inamdars. Section 32 of Regulation XXVII of 1802 would have no application to the present claim of the plaintiffs. If, therefore, the Collector attached the property of the Inamdars and under coercion of such process realised any proportion of the costs of repairs executed by the Zemindar, he clearly acted beyond the powers given to him under section 32 of the Regulation. If, on the other hand, the provisions of the Regulation were properly enforced, that is to say, in order to realise the advances made by the Zemindar or by the Government, then such enforcement can in no way support the present case of the plaintiffs. So I do not think that the plaintiffs now in any way rely on what the Collector realised in 1854 under coercive process. It is conceded that that was the only time when any money was actually realised, so far as the evidence goes, from the Inamdars in connection with any repairs to the tank. But the Inamdars have throughout been protesting against any obligation to pay anything for repairs done against their wishes or without their consent.

Then certain accounts have been produced of the year 1880 and thereabouts. In one or two instances, a small sum of money is shown as due from the Inamdars of Vellikurichi on account of repairs to this tank. But it is not proved by any evidence that anything was paid on this account by the Inamdars. The evidence, both oral and documentary, shows clearly that there had been repairs done to this tank since 1854. There is a body of evidence to this effect of witnesses, whom I do not find any reason for disbelieving, and the accounts produced by the plaintiffs themselves corroborate that evidence. One witness says that, sometime ago, repairs which cost about Rs. 2,000 were executed. If, as a matter of fact, the Zemindar was conscious that he had a right to levy contribution for repairs or at any rate that he had not lost that right if he had it at any time, it is not conceivable that since 1854 to the date of the present suit, he would not have made any serious attempt to realize the share of the defendants' liability. In fact, the result of the entire evidence is that, at no time, the Inamdars either actually paid anything for the repairs or that their liability for such repairs was ever established or admitted. I have already pointed out that what the Collector did under section 32 of Regulation XXVII of 1802 is of no importance in the absence of clear evidence as to the circumstances in which the money was realised, and so far as it appears, his action does not seem to have been authorised by the law.

Then the plaintiffs sought to base their case on a general custom, to the effect that every village held under a Zemindar by way of Inam or similar tenure is liable to contribute to the cost of repairs done to their sources of irrigation, whether tanks or channels. The evidence that we have on record falls far short of establishing any such general custom. We have been referred especially to the accounts maintained by the Zemindar and produced by the plaintiffs, Exhibits F, G, H and M series. They do not extend lower down than 1886, and it is not possible to extract from these accounts sufficient particulars upon which one could find with any amount of certainty that a custom such as that alleged prevailed in the Zemindari. We ought to know much more about the circumstances in which the payments were made by the different Inamdars or holders of Devastanam and other villages. It is not even clear that such payments as were made were not made voluntarily or under contract. It is not shown at what rate the contributions were made, or on what basis. We do not know anything about the conditions of the tenures of the villages from the proprietors of which these contributions towards the cost of repairs, either to channels or to tanks, were received. Unless these points are cleared up, it could not be said that any custom has been established. Then it is remarkable that, so far as Vellikurichi is concerned, there is only a single instance which has been already alluded to in which a small payment is shown as due from the Inamdars. I cannot, upon the evidence in the case, hold, whatever else the accounts of the Zemindar might show in this connection, that the Inamdars either agreed to make any such payment or did in fact make it. Whatever might be the case with the other villages shown in the accounts, they certainly do not make out a case against Vellikurichi. Even if it be taken to be sufficiently established that a general custom exists in the Zemindari such as is contended for by the plaintiffs, the evidence and the circumstances above alluded to indicate that, so far as Vellikurichi is concerned, the custom has lost its force for a very long time if it ever applied to it. In this connection, I may refer to what happened in the lower Court with respect to the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs to prove a general custom. It is stated in paragraph 38 of the judgment, from which it would appear that the Subordinate Judge at one stage of the trial formed an opinion that a general custom had been proved by evidence adduced by the plaintiffs, and he intimated to the plaintiffs that it was unnecessary for them to encumber the record with further documents in support of the alleged custom. Such an observation on the part of the Subordinate Judge was unjustified, as it might have had the effect of deterring the plaintiffs from adducing all the evidence they had on the point. But whether they were in fact so deterred and whether any further evidence which they were in a position to adduce would have improved their case, is not at all made clear. No application has yet been made to us to admit into evidence any documents wrong fully rejected by the Subordinate Judge; nor is the learned Vakil for the respondents able to state what the materiality is of the evidence which the respondents might have produced. None of the documents are here. And the only inference I can draw from what has happened is that it did not strike the respondents or their Pleaders that any further evidence which they could have produced would have improved their position so far as the question of custom was concerned. I hold that the plaintiffs have failed to make out their right.

The question relating to limitation discussed at the Bar does not arise, but I may state that it is difficult to see how Article 61 of the Limitation Act has any application to the facts of the case. Under section 70 of the Contract Act, the plaintiffs would have no cause of action merely because of their having incurred expenses in executing the repairs. It has to be further made out that the benefit of those repairs was enjoyed by the defendants. Both the elements must be present in order to constitute a cause of action, that is, the incurring of cost by the plaintiffs and the enjoyment of the benefit by the defendants. Article 61 applies to cases of money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant and time runs from the date when the money is paid. But here it cannot be said that the payment made by the plaintiffs to the contractors was money paid for the defendants. Under section 70, if the case of the plaintiffs fell within it, what they would be entitled to is compensation for the benefit enjoyed from the act done by the plaintiffs for the defendants. If, for instance, defendants never derived any benefit from the plaintiffs' act, the mere payment of money by the plaintiffs to contractors who executed the repairs would not entitle them to any compensation under section 70. The only Article that would be applicable to a case like this, if the plaintiffs were able to establish their right, would be Article 120, which is the residuary Article dealing with suits for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the First Schedule, and the right to sue would accrue from the date of the doing of the repairs and the enjoyment of the benefit thereof by the defendants. On that view of the matter the suit would be in time.

I may also mention that the Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to a charge on the village for the share of costs payable by the defendants. None of the cases cited at the Bar support that proposition. One case in which there are some expressions to be found which might favour the Subordinate Judge's views, viz., Rajah of Vizianagram v. Rajah Setrucherla Samasekhararaz (5), has no analogy to this case. There the payment was by one co-owner for arrears of revenue due to the Government, and the charge on the property which was saved by such payment might be supported on the basis that the person making the payment should be allowed in equity to stand in the shoes of the Government, who under the Act have a lien for arrears of revenue on the lands concerned. It is difficult to see how such a charge could be sustained under section 70 of the Contract Act. Then the Subordinate Judge seems to think that the doctrine of salvage lien has some application to this case. It is rightly conceded, however, by the learned Vakil for the respondents that he could not uphold that view of the law.

I, therefore, allow the appeal and reverse the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The suit will be dismissed with costs here and in the Court below.

The memorandum of cross-objections also fails and is dismissed with costs.

OLDFIELD, J.—The plaintiffs have sustained their claim with reference either to section 70 of the Contract Act or custom; and in either case, the burden of proving all the necessary facts is entirely upon them. As regards section 70, it is only necessary to deal with one of the requisites for its application. It requires that the plaintiff shall have done something for the defendant. In this case, the plaintiffs allege that they have made the repairs for the defendants. But it is difficult to say exactly in what sense they have done so, or that they have shown that they have done so in any sense other than the very general one, that the defendants have derived or may derive some advantage from the repairs. That does not seem to be sufficient, and it is not the current of decisions that it is so. I refer to Rajah of Pittapur v. Secretary of State (3) as an instance of a case very similar to the present; and it is clear there that the learned Judges did not think that the work connected with an irrigation source was done for the defendant on the grounds either that the defendant derived some benefit from it or that he was asked to contribute to it. It is not desirable to attempt to formulate any general test as to whether a thing is done by one person for another; but, it is, I think, sufficient to say that what is done cannot be described as done by one person for another, unless it can be shown that, but for the existence of that other's interest, it would not have been done. Here we have evidence of demand, and it may be assumed for the present that there is evidence of benefit conferred. But there is nothing further, since the evidence of demand, does not, in any way, show that the intention was to do the work, only if the defendants wanted it done.

There was a suggestion in the course of the arguments that the plaintiffs' attitude was indicated directly by the fact that they had actually supplied other villages besides those, which have hitherto taken water from the tank, with irrigation from the increased supply, which the tank is alleged to have received in consequence of these repairs. Only two cases were, however, referred to, in two years, and the evidence is conflicting regarding them. Under that head, therefore, it does not seem to me that anything is proved. Then as regards the Ayacut, we have the fact that one portion of it is in a Devastanam village; but it is insignificant and may be neglected. Roughly, the defendants own a little over a quarter. But that fact, in the absence of anything else adduced, does not seem to be sufficient to enable us to assume that the defendants' interest in the Ayacut was the factor which determined the plaintiffs' favour of making these repairs. When the plaintiffs owned such a preponderating interest, as they did, in the property, the burden is on them to show that they did not make the repairs for themselves and that they did make them for the defendants, and it does not seem to me that they have discharged that burden. In these circumstances their case based upon section 70 of the Contract Act fails.

Then as regards custom, I entirely agree with my learned brother's conclusion, and only wish to say a few words regarding the particular custom alleged with reference to the liability of the defendants' village. Really, there is very little evidence regarding that liability except that which is afforded by Exhibit S, an order from the Collector in 1852 to the Manager of the Estate, in which the tank is situated, and which is apparently in the possession of the present plaintiffs. The Collector's position in this matter is not clear. It is suggested on the one side that he was acting as the Agent of the Court of Wards and that he really was simply a managing superior and was in the position of Zamindar. On the other hand, it is suggested for the plaintiffs, though nothing has been adduced to prove it, that he attached the Estate for the recovery of revenue due on behalf of Government. In Exhibit S, we simply have a reference by the Collector to the fact that Kulavettu, a periodical charge for tank repairs payable by the Inamdar or tenant to the proprietor, had been hitherto levied on this village. But the only evidence the Collector refers to in support of his statement is the information he had received from a Gumasta, whom he names, that in the accounts of one year 1816, about 40 years before he was writing, this Kulavettu had been entered. That is all there is by way of an affirmative statement regarding Kulavettu. The Collector asked the Manager to try and find further evidence and to look to other accounts in order to find it. It is clear that we have here only a very insufficient foundation for a conclusion that any custom ever existed. If any custom did exist, this indicates the existence of only a custom to make a periodical charge and not of a custom which would enable the proprietor or the plaintiffs acting as his representatives to make a definite demand on a particular property for an amount proportionate to the defendants' interest in the tank towards making all these repairs. After Exhibit S, we have not got a reply to it, and we do not know whether anything was found by the Manager by searching the accounts. So far, therefore, the custom alleged is only as to Kulavettu; and it rests entirely upon what the Collector heard from a Gumasta about an account written 40 years before, which, so far as it appears, no one else ever saw.

The next letter Exhibit S-1 does not mention any further information than that the Collector, for reasons which are not very clear, considered himself justified in directing the Manager to recover a lump sum, which was being claimed on account of repairs; and he directed him to recover it under section 32 of Regulation XXVII of 1802. That section, as my learned brother has pointed out, is, on the information before us, inapplicable to the recovery of any such sum, and the Collector's action must be taken as entirely unauthorized by law. It is in evidence that money was recovered in this illegal way which obviously had nothing to do with the assertion of the custom, and cannot be considered as equivalent to one. After that, there is nothing more for about 30 years. We then have got one or two entries to the effect that insignificant sums are due on account of the repairs. But whether they were ever collected or not there is no evidence to show. On the other hand, it must be borne in mind that the plaintiffs, though they are lessees of the estate, do not suggest that they are under any disability in the way of producing the accounts or that ordinary accounts of the estate have been withheld from them.

There is evidence that in comparatively recent times, the tank has been repaired at very considerable expense and we have had no excuse offered for the plaintiffs' failure to produce distinct evidence as to the making of these repairs and as to the recovery of contribution, if any was recovered from the defendants. It seems to me in these circumstances that the plaintiffs have adduced practically nothing in favour of any custom as binding on the defendants' village. I do not wish to add anything to what my learned brother has said regarding the more general custom alleged except that the plaintiffs, who will have all the estate records in their possession, should have been able, if their case was correct, to produce very much clearer evidence either regarding the period to which the accounts they have produced relate or regarding the later period; and it seems to me that their explanation as to what happened in the lower Court for not doing so cannot be accepted, when, as is the case, they have not made any definite request here for an opportunity to repair their failure to adduce evidence at the trial.

Regarding limitation, I think that Article 61 is clearly inapplicable. So far as the claim is made with reference to section 70 of the Contract Act, it is an essential part of the cause of action under that section that the defendants shall have received a benefit from what the plaintiffs have done; and apart from the fact to which my learned brother has referred that Article 61 refers only to money paid for the defendants, and we have no such payment alleged here, there is a further objection to the application of that Article, that there was at the time of payment no question of any immediate benefit being conferred on the defendants by it, for it is not suggested that the benefit derivable by the defendants from the repairs to the tank could have arisen, when the money was paid. No doubt, there are cases in which Article 61 may be applied to claims under section 70. Such application will be legitimate in cases of the common type concerned with payments of revenue or decree amounts on the part of the defendants. The benefit to the defendants is then immediate; but it is quite otherwise, when, as here, the benefit will only arise at a subsequent stage, and the plaintiffs' cause of action will not be complete until that subsequent stage is reached. In these circumstances, no other article having been suggested, we must apply Article 120.

With these observations, I concur in the decretal portion of my learned brother's judgment.

RESPONDENT.

Benamidar, whether can sue for possession of immoveable property.

A benamidar is not competent to maintain a suit for possession of immoveable property. [p. 794, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Purnea, dated the 28th February 1917.

Mr. Siva Narain Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Sahay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff preferred this suit for the declaration of title to and recovery of possession of the land in suit. The lower Appellate Court has reversed the decision of the Munsif and has held that the plaintiff could not maintain the suit as he was only a benamidar. It appears that the plaintiff in his evidence had admitted that it was his father who had purchased the property but in the plaintiff's name. On the strength of this admission the lower Appellate Court had held that the plaintiff was a benamidar. In appeal it is contended on his behalf that on the authority of Upendra Nath Nag v. Bhupendra Nath Nag (1) the subsequent conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances should have been taken into consideration by the lower Appellate Court before coming to a finding on the question of benami. On the other hand reliance is placed on Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (2) for the proposition that where purchase of real estate is made by a Hindu father in the name of his son the presumption of the Hindu Law is in favour of its being a benami, and that the burden of proof lies on the party in whose name it was purchased to prove that he was solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in such purchased estate. Attention is also drawn to Moulvie Sayyud Uzhur Ali v. Musamat Bebee Ultaf Fatima (3) and Nawab

Azimut Ali Khan v. Hurdwaree Mull (4).

The admission of the plaintiff that the land in suit was purchased by his father is clear and unequivocal. The point was not left in any doubt involving such investigation as was necessary for decision in the case reported as Upendra Nath Nag v. Bhupendra Nath Nag (1). The lower Appellate Court was, therefore, right in holding that the purchase in plaintiff's name was benami. It is, however, contended that even if the plaintiff is only a benamidar that ought not to stand in the way of his maintaining the suit. For this proposition reliance is placed on Dagdu v. Balwant Ramchandra Nattu (5) and Nand Kishore Lal v. Ahmad Ata (6).

Mr. S. N. Sahay, Counsel for the defendant, meets this contention by quoting the ruling reported as Atrabannessa Bibi v. Safatullah Mia (7). The present suit is for possession of land and he contends that on a review of a very large number of decisions referred to in that case, the Calcutta High Court regards it as a doctrine well settled in that Court that a benamidar is not competent to maintain a suit for possession of immoveable property. I accept the contention of the defendant on this point and hold that a benamidar cannot succeed in his suit for possession of immoveable property.

The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant further contends that even if the plaintiff is a trespasser he can maintain the suit on the authority of Sahedra Kuer v. Gobardhan Tiwari (8). This contention, if accepted, involves a complete change of the entire frame of the plaintiff's suit. He rested his claim in the plaint on the allegation that he was purchaser of the land in suit and that he had a good title thereto but was wrongfully dispossessed by the defendant. To allow the contention of the learned Vakil to prevail would be to transform the entire case of the plaintiff. Moreover, the present case is distinguishable from the case referred to above. I am unable, therefore, to attach any importance to the point raised.

HARSHANKAR OJHA v. GOURI SHANKAR.

As a last resort it is urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the decree of the Munsif should not have been reversed on account of the father of the plaintiff not having been made a party to the suit. This contention is without any substance inasmuch as the plaintiff, who has been held to be only a benamidar, cannot maintain a suit for possession of immoveable property.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Procedure.*

Where according to the finding of the first Appellate Court both the plaintiff and the defendant have set up a false case, the way in which the High Court ought to deal with the matter in second appeal is to decide the case upon the facts which have been found by the lower Appellate Court, irrespective of the original cases respectively made by the parties in their pleadings. [p. 797, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeals against the judgment of Mr. Justice Roe, dated the 14th December 1915, in Second Appeals Nos. 3476 of 1911 and 531 of 1912.

Dr. Sir Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Surendra Madhab Mullick, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—(March. 15th 1917.)—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff asking that it might be adjudicated that the disputed lands formed part of the guzasta lands of the plaintiff, that after the death of the plaintiff's mother and after the expiry of the term of the pattah granted by her the plaintiff was entitled to possession, and also asking for a declaration that the proceedings taken at the time of revision of the Settlement were not binding on the plaintiff, that the plaintiff was no party to the same and that the said proceedings were ultra vires and illegal.

The plaintiff claimed to hold the lands as an occupancy-raiyat, the land consisting of some 25 bighas. The plaintiff's mother appears to have given a lease of the land for seven years and the mother died before the expiry of the lease. The lease was granted to the first defendant, whose name was Ram Naresh Ojha. The plaintiff alleged that finding Ram Naresh Ojha in possession on her mother's death she allowed him to remain in possession of the land until the termination of the period for which the lease had originally been granted.

The defendants in this case consist of 26 persons, and they may be divided into six groups. The first group consisting of defendants Nos. 1 to 6 was constituted by the family of Ram Naresh; the other 20 may be divided into five groups, all the people being connected in some way or other by relationship with the first group, defendants Nos. 1 to 6. It appears that the 26 defendants had succeeded in getting their names recorded in the Record of Rights as being in possession of the 25 bighas and as kusht-kars and also in having the record made to the effect that the plaintiff was a tenure-holder.

The plaintiff alleged that this record was not binding upon her, that it had been made in collusion with the husband of the plaintiff who was a man not capable of understanding business.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 set up the defence that they were not in possession of the 25 bighas but that they were in possession of 5 bighas only; that they had entered into possession of these 5 bighas not under the lease to which I have referred but that these 5 bighas were part of the ancestral property of defendants Nos. 1 to 6; that it was not part of the guzasta land of the plaintiff but that it was part of the mourusi guzasta land of these defendants: that the plaintiff was in truth and fact a tenure-holder; and, they further alleged that they, defendants Nos. 1 to 6, had many lands in the Mouzah in question having transferable right; that they were settled *raiya*t in the Mouzah and that consequently these defendants had acquired an occupancy and guzastadari right.

The other defendants set up similar defences with regard to the other 20 bighas. It was alleged that these 20 bighas were split up into five plots of 4 bighas each. Just in the same way as the first group of defendants had alleged, they alleged that they had not come into possession of these lands under the pattah or under the first group of defendants Nos. 1 to 6, but that these 20 bighas were part of the ancestral lands of these defendants Nos. 7 to 26; that the plaintiff was a tenure-holder; and that these lands were part of the guzasta lands of the defendants.

The issues which are material to this appeal were the third and fourth issues as stated in the judgment of the learned District Judge. The third issue was, what was the status of the plaintiff in the disputed lands; and, the fourth was, what was the status of the defendants in the same.

As regards defendants Nos. 1 to 6, their case, as I have stated, was that 5 bighas of the 25 bighas were held by them under their ancient *raiya*t title; and they asserted that the plaintiff had a mokurrari interest of the nature of a tenure. The plaintiff on the other hand alleged that she had no tenure interest, that she was in possession as a *raiya*t.

That issue was found against the plaintiff, and the District Judge held that her interest was of the nature of a tenure.

As regards the fourth issue, namely, what was the status of the defendants in the same lands, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that as regards the first six defendants, that is to say, the Ram Naresh group if I may so call them, they had come into possession of their lands under the lease; that the 5 bighas of which they were in possession were not part of their ancient *raiya*t lands but that they were holding the lands as *raiya*t. He also held that inasmuch as these defendants, the Ram Naresh group, had other *raiya*t holdings in the village and were settled *raiya*t of that village, he came to the conclusion that they would have occupancy rights in all lands held by them as *raiya*t. He, therefore, proceeded to consider whether the Ram Naresh group of defendants were holding the lands in suit as *raiya*t; and, as I have said before, he came to the conclusion that Ram Naresh had by virtue of the pattah granted to him entered upon possession and remained in possession of the 5 bighas of the land in dispute, and consequently, inasmuch as he was a settled *raiya*t holding other lands in the village, he had acquired occupancy right in that portion of the land which was in fact in possession of Ram Naresh and his group. It was pointed out that he claimed 5 bighas only of the disputed land on behalf of himself and his group, and consequently the District Judge held that he had acquired occupancy right in the 5 bighas only and, therefore, could not be ousted by the plaintiff from those bighas.

As regards the other defendants Nos. 7 to 26, the District Judge, having first of all pointed out that they claimed the land as their ancestral guzasta land, proceeded to find that that claim was a false one and that that was part of the land which was included in the pattah already referred to. Then he went on and found as a fact that these defendants, namely, Nos. 7 to 26, did not claim under the pattah, that they did not claim under Ram Naresh or his group and that Ram Naresh himself did not claim anything beyond the 5 bighas, and did not put in any claim for the remaining part of the land or that he had settled the 20 bighas with the other defendants. He, therefore, came to the conclusion that the remaining defendants were not in possession of the remaining lands in suit as *raiya*t or by virtue of any valid title, and that they were mere trespassers; and that consequently the plaintiff, having title, to the land was entitled to possession. He, therefore, decreed the suit so far as these defendants were concerned and directed that these defendants be ousted.

Perhaps, before I proceed with my judgment, I ought to point out at this stage that the difficulty in this case has to a certain extent arisen from the fact that both the plaintiff and the defendants have, according to the finding of the learned District Judge, set up a false case in respect of what I have already mentioned, and, that being so, it seems to me that the way in which the Court ought to deal with this matter is to decide the case upon the facts which have been found by the learned District Judge, irrespective of the original cases respectively made. But when the matter came to this Court and was before Mr. Justice Roe, the whole body of the defendants took up the ground of argument as set out in the learned Judge's judgment in this way, "Ram Naresh took a lease of 25 bighas of land from the plaintiff's mother, that he was an occupancy-raiyat (I think he means there settled raiyat) from before the taking of that lease and that from the moment he entered under cover of the lease upon any part of the land, he acquired an occupancy right in the whole 25 bighas and that having thus acquired occupancy rights in the whole 25 bighas it was immaterial what Ram Naresh chose to do with the land after his first induction upon it." The learned Judge then proceeds to say: "This argument appears at first sight to be one of great weight. It would seem that by the creation of a pattah under the signature of the mother of the plaintiff a holding of 25 bighas was constituted and that by virtue of that pattah Ram Naresh must be considered to have entered upon a holding of 25 bighas as a raiyat, whether or not he chose to occupy forthwith the whole area and actually manipulate each inch of the soil. Indeed had this contention been put forward on behalf of the Ram Naresh group as the basis of their defence in the lower Court, I cannot conceive how it could have failed. But unfortunately that was not the defence taken in the lower Court." On the other hand, as I have already pointed out, the defence taken by the defendants in the lower Courts was that these lands were part of the ancient lands of the respective groups, and that they were in possession of them before the pattah was granted. That point was taken by them, to which I have already referred. A further point was taken by Ram Naresh to this effect that the 25 bighas which were the subject-matter of the lease ought to be regarded as one holding; and that if it was found that the first group, that is defendants Nos. 1 to 6, were in possession of any part of it at the institution of the suit, then they must be taken to be in possession of the rest and, inasmuch as they were settled raiyyats of the village, they must be taken to hold occupancy right not only in respect of the 5 bighas of which they were in fact in possession but also in respect of the remaining 20 bighas of which in point of fact they were not in possession. Now, with regard to both these points the matter depends upon the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act contained in section 21 (1), which runs as follows: "Every person who is a settled raiyat of a village within the meaning of the last foregoing section shall have a right of occupancy in all land for the time held by him as a raiyat in that village." One has to look to what was the position of affairs at the time of the institution of the suit, and inasmuch as both parties, as I have said before, had set up a false case in their pleadings, one must be guided not by what appears in the pleadings but by the facts as found by the District Judge. The learned Judge has found, as I read his judgment that at the time of the institution of the suit, defendants Nos. 1 to 6 were in possession of the 5 bighas and the 5 bighas only, and, he has, I think, rightly come to the conclusion that defendants Nos. 1 to 6 were occupancy raiyyats by reason of the provisions of section 21 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in respect of the land of which they were in fact in possession for the time as raiyyats. The words of the section are "shall have a right of occupancy in all land for the time held by him as a raiyat." As regards the land which we are now considering, he was holding, as a raiyat for the time, 5 bighas and 5 bighas only. Consequently, in my judgment, the learned Judge came to the right conclusion when he said that as regards those five 5 bighas the plaintiff would not get a decree for evicting defendants Nos. 1 to 6, but that with regard to the rest, neither the first group, Nos. 1 to 6, nor the second group had any right of occupancy at the time of the institution of the suit and consequently they must be regarded as trespassers, and the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession. I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything more than that.

For these reasons the judgment of the learned Judge must be upheld and these appeals dismissed.

CHATTERJEA, J.—(March 19th, 1917.)—I agree in dismissing the appeals. No doubt, a plaintiff seeking possession must show that at the date of the suit he was entitled to such relief, and a landlord cannot sue to eject even trespassers so long as a lease is outstanding. In the present case, however, the defendant No. 1, who is found to have a right of occupancy, claimed such right only in five out of the twenty-five bighas. The other defendants did not claim under the defendant No. 1, nor did they rely upon the fact that he had any outstanding lease with regard to the remaining 20 bighas, their case being that these 20 bighas were held by them as part of their ancestral holdings, which has been found to be false. The defendant No. 1 being a party to the suit does not claim any right to these 20 bighas against the plaintiff. Under these circumstances I think the Court below was right in giving a decree to the plaintiff for possession of the 20 bighas.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 85, 88, 89
—Mortgage, suit on—Puisne mortgagee not made party, effect of—Order absolute, for sale effect of.

Under section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act a first mortgagee is bound to make a second mortgagee a party to his suit for sale, and if he does not do so, the second mortgagee is not bound by any order for sale obtained in such a suit. [p. 800, col. 1.]

On the making of an order absolute for sale under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act the mortgagee's security as well as the mortgagor's right to redeem are both extinguished, and for the right of the mortgagee under his security there is substituted the right to a sale conferred by the decree. [p. 800, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court, dated May 19, 1913, reported as 20 Ind. Cas. 59, modifying a decree of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Moradabad, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge.

FACTS.—Certain property was mortgaged first to Lachman Das on February 25, 1880; second to Shadi Ram, on October 15, 1881. Lachman Das brought a suit for sale, but did not make Shadi Ram a party, although he had notice of Shadi Ram's mortgage. He obtained a decree for sale in 1892, and an order absolute in 1895, but did not proceed further. Shadi Ram brought the present suit for sale in 1910. Het Ram, who had succeeded not only to the rights of the mortgagors, but to the rights (if any) of Lachman Das, claimed that the sale could only be subject to the latter's mortgage. This contention was allowed by the trial Judge, but on appeal the High Court (Richards, C. J., and Lyle, J.) held that Lachman Das's mortgage merged in the decree, and, therefore, expunged the trial Judge's direction that the land should now be sold subject to such mortgage. Hence this appeal.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C. (with him Mr. Ramsay), for the Appellant.—Appellant has succeeded to the rights of both parties in the earlier mortgage suit. The decree in that suit may be barred by limitation, but Het Ram's right to use the mortgage as a shield remains. It was no one's intention that the first mortgage should be extinguished for the benefit of Shadi Ram, who was not a party to the suit at all: according to the rule of justice, equity and good conscience it should be treated as remaining alive: Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premeek Das (1); Dinobandhu Shaw Chowdhry

HET RAM V. SHADI RAM.

v. Jogmaya Das (2). [Reference was made to Whiteley v. Delaney (3)].

The mortgagee's security and the mortgagor's (or puisne mortgagee's) right to redeem go together. Shadi Ram was not a party to the suit, and retained his right to redeem. The provisions of section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act apply only between the parties to a suit.

Limitation does not apply as appellant is not suing. Further, he could not execute the decree in any case, as he is now proprietor.

Mr. Dube, for the Respondents.—Any rights under the decree are barred by limitation. Not only was the decree itself barred after three years, but even if Lachman had never sued at all, he would be time-barred after 12 years. The fact that Het Ram, assuming him to be the assignee of Lachman, subsequently became proprietor makes no difference, once limitation has begun it runs on: Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (4).

This case depends on the procedure laid down in India in the Transfer of Property Act. By section 89 of that Act the security, after the decree for sale was obtained, ceased to exist: there was substituted for it the decree itself, which is now time-barred.

Mr. Dunne, in reply.—Shadi Ram was not a party to the suit. Section 89 and the order absolute for sale can only operate in favour of the plaintiff in that suit against the defendant in that suit. The fact that I have not executed the decree is immaterial: the respondent's only security is subject to mine. I am not bound by limitation, as I am not pursuing any remedy: I still have my right.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Section 89 says your right is converted into a right to sell—a right you cannot now enforce].

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—How can you be considered an encumbrancer? If you have any rights under the decree, go and execute them.]

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Why should the Statute turn a mortgage for all purposes into a mortgage for some purposes only? I think there is no mortgage left.]

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The material point in this appeal, which comes from the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, lies in short compass. The question in the suit was whether property in mortgage to the respondent Shadi Ram, as to which he had sought to obtain a decree for sale under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, should, when sold, be treated as sold subject to an alleged prior right of the appellant under an earlier mortgage. This mortgage was dated the 25th February 1880; Shadi Ram's mortgage was dated the 15th October 1881.

The appellant had become the successor-in-title to the mortgagors, and it is assumed, for the purposes of this appeal, that he had also acquired such title as remained to the mortgagee under the earlier mortgage. In 1892 the prior mortgagee, whose name was Lachman Das, brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree for a sale under the Act referred to. But the suit was brought only against the remaining mortgagor, and the second mortgagee was not made a party. This decree neither Lachman Das nor his successor-in-title took any steps to execute, and under Article 179 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1877, it ceased to be operative when three years had elapsed from the date of the decree becoming absolute. It had thus become wholly ineffective long before the present suit was commenced. The only other observation which it is necessary to make before considering the question of law that arises under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is that on the admissions of the parties it is to be taken that the second mortgage was duly registered and that the first mortgagee must be taken to have had notice of it when he brought his suit, and obtained a decree for sale in 1892.

The mortgage made to Lachman Das in 1880 was a simple mortgage within the meaning of section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, and under section 67 the mortgagee had a right to obtain, as he actually did, an order for sale. The provisions of the Act, inasmuch as section 69 does not apply to a simple mortgage, precluded him from any right to sell without such an order. Under section 85 the first mortgagee was bound to make the second mortgagee a party to his suit for sale, and as he did not do so, the second mortgagee was not bound by the order for sale, which could only have been operative subject to his title. Section 89 is important. Under this section where an order for sale under section 88 has been made, such as was made here in 1892, in favour of the first mortgagee, the mortgagor, or the second mortgagee, if he had been made a defendant, would have had the right to redeem if he had paid on the date fixed by the decree the amount due. If such payment is not made as happened here, an application may be made for an order absolute, and for payment of the amount realised into Court. The section then provides that "the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished." The construction which their Lordships put on the language so used is that on the making of the order absolute the security as well as the defendant's right to redeem are both extinguished, and that for the right of the mortgagee under his security there is substituted the right to a sale conferred by the decree.

As their Lordships have already indicated, the second mortgagee, not having been made a party, was not affected by the decree made in the suit of 1892, and in addition the decree itself became inoperative under the Limitation Act as the result of nothing having been done under it. It follows that the title of the second mortgagee, Shadi Ram, the first respondent, has remained in existence as the only encumbrance prior to the title of the appellant as owner of the equity of redemption.

They concur in the opinion of the learned Judges of the High Court that the decision of the Assistant Sessions Judge of Moradabad, who tried the case, was wrong.

They will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal, second—Finding of fact based on conjecture whether final—Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 59—Succession to occupancy holding.

In deciding the question of succession to an occupancy holding under section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act conjecture must not be allowed to take the place of legal proof [p. 802, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, in a suit in which the plaintiffs claim to succeed to an occupancy holding on the ground that they are the collaterals of the deceased tenant, the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court are based on conjectures, they are not judicial findings and cannot be accepted as final in second appeal. [p. 802, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 5th February 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 31st October 1916, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Zafarullah Khan and Mian Muhammad Sharif, for the Appellants.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are fully-stated in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and it is unnecessary to repeat them here. The pedigree-table appended to the judgment of the District Judge will help to explain the nature of the claim. Shib Ram, son of Jawahar, was an occupancy tenant of the land in dispute, which on his death devolved on his widow Musammatt Santi. The latter died recently and thereupon the proprietors took possession of the land. The plaintiffs, Pala and Gannun, grandsons of Amir Singh, have brought the present suit to recover possession of it on the ground that they, as collaterals of Shib Ram, are entitled to succeed to the occupancy holding in question under section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. The proprietors, who are defendants in the case, denied that the plaintiffs were the collaterals of the deceased occupancy tenant or that the alleged common ancestor Sher Singh ever held the land comprised in the tenancy; and upon these grounds they pleaded that the plaintiffs had no right to succeed to the land in dispute.

The lower Courts have concurred in holding that the plaintiffs are the collaterals of Shib Ram, deceased, and that their common ancestor Sher Singh occupied the land left by Shib Ram, and they have, therefore, decreed the plaintiffs' claim. The defendants have appealed to this Court, and the main question argued in this second appeal is whether the findings expressly or impliedly arrived at by the District Judge, Mr. H. A. Rose, regarding the agnatic relationship of the plaintiffs to Shib Ram and as to the common ancestor having occupied the land in dispute are judicial findings, which must be accepted as final in this second appeal.

It is urged by the appellants' Counsel that since the District Judge has come to the conclusion that the pedigree-table relied upon by the respondents is incorrect, he should have dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on that ground alone; and further that the District Judge has not come to any explicit finding on the point whether the land in dispute was ever occupied by the alleged common ancestor of the plaintiffs and Shib Ram, the deceased occupancy tenant. It is also urged that inasmuch as the respondents came into Court as plaintiffs to recover possession of the land in dispute by way of inheritance on the ground that they were the collaterals of Shib Ram, being descended from a common ancestor Sher Singh, and that Sher Singh had occupied the land, they were bound to establish their allegations affirmatively by satisfactory evidence; but that the judgment of the District Judge shows that he was not satisfied with the proof adduced by the respondents on these points and has passed his judgment in the respondents' favour largely upon conjectures.

In my opinion, there is considerable force in these contentions and they must be allowed. The District Judge begins his judgment by saying that the pedigree-table propounded by the respondents in this case is not proved to be correct, for whereas in a previous suit they themselves set up their descent from one Rattan Singh, in the present litigation they state that they and Shib Ram are descended from Sher Singh, and that Sher Singh's other name was Rattan Singh. The District Judge holds that the name of the father of Budh Singh was Sher Singh and that the respondents have failed to prove that he also bore the name of Rattan Singh. In the concluding portion of his judgment the learned Judge says that there can be no doubt that the respondents have made conflicting statements regarding the name of the common ancestor of themselves and Shib Ram; and he thinks that the truth of the matter is that the name of the common ancestor has been forgotten. In the former suit, to which a reference has been made by the District Judge in his judgment, the respondents stated not only that the common ancestor's name was Rattan Singh, but they also said that Budh Singh's name was Labh Singh, and the District Judge is hardly right when he says that this latter statement was due to a clerical error, the words budh and labh being somewhat similar when written in Urdu. The last assumption is clearly unwarranted; but granting that the District Judge is right on this point, the similarity of the two names when written in Urdu is insufficient to explain how the respondents themselves could be misled into stating that the name of the father of Hira and Jawahar was Labh Singh and not Budh Singh.

It seems to me, therefore, that the District Judge, while entertaining considerable doubt as to the correctness of the pedigree-table propounded by the respondents, was not justified in ultimately accepting that pedigree as sufficient to establish the claim of the plaintiffs as to their agnatic relationship to Shib Ram on the strength of certain entries in the

SULTAN AHMAD U. PALA.

Settlement Record of 1852 and in the naqsha tanqih huquq muzarian. After carefully examining the entries in the said Settlement Record and the naqsha tanqih huquq muzarian, I do not agree with the District Judge that those entries necessarily justify the conclusion either that at one time Sher Singh occupied the land in dispute or that after the death of Kahna in 1865 Hira, son of Budh Singh, and the two sons of Amir Singh (Mula and Sant Singh, fathers of the present plaintiffs) had inherited his holding. It is admitted that Jawahar Singh, brother of Hira, is nowhere shown in the revenue records as holding any portion of Kahna's land; and the District Judge admits that it has not been explained how Jawahar came to be excluded from Kahna's inheritance. The learned Judge, however, says that the entries in the tanqih huquq muzarian of 1865 show that by implication Hira claimed occupancy rights in the land of Kahna, and that he could only have claimed those rights as his heir. He then goes on to say: "no doubt all this is largely presumption or conjecture because the records do not clearly show what was claimed on either side, or what admissions the parties made, but I do not see what other presumption is possible under the circumstances." This extract from the judgment of the District Judge shows that he has disregarded the sound rule of law that in matters like the one under consideration "conjecture" must not be allowed to take the place of legal proof, and the appellants' Counsel is perfectly justified in urging that on his own showing the District Judge's main conclusion in support of the respondents' claim is based on conjectures and that this vitiates his whole judgment.

With reference to the proceedings of 1865 as contained in the naqsha tanqih huquq muzarian, the District Judge has relied on the opinion of Assessors as noted in that naqsha in support of the respondents' contention that Hira and the sons of Amir Singh were Kahna's nephews. But in another part of his judgment the District Judge says, by reference to the finding of Mr. Martineau, District Judge, Gardaspur, in Appeal No. 189 of 1914, to which the present respondents were parties, that Mr. Martineau's view that the opinion of the Assessors, as recorded in 1865, was no legal proof of the alleged relationship between Kahra and Hira and the sons of Amir Singh, was perfectly correct (see the 6th ground of appeal); and yet in the very next sentence Mr. Rose says that the opinion of the Assessors is affirmed by the fact that Hira and the two sons of Amir Singh acquired the occupancy rights held by Kahra after his death, and that this acquisition must have been based on rights of inheritance showing that Kahna, deceased, and Hira and the sons of Amir Singh must have been descended from the same common ancestor.

The alleged acquisition of Kahna's occupancy land by the above named persons by right of inheritance is not supported by anything in the Revenue Record of 1865, except indirectly by the extra-judicial opinion of the Assessors recorded in the naqsha tanqih huquq muzarian, to which reference has been made above, and it is clear to my mind that the District Judge was not justified in coming to his conclusion in support of the respondents' claim on the assumption that the Assessors' opinion is correct, which opinion, he himself admits, does not amount to legal proof of the alleged descent of the above-mentioned persons from one common ancestor.

It will be observed that the District Judge has recorded no distinct finding that Sher Singh, the alleged common ancestor of the respondents and Shib Ram, ever occupied the land in dispute, though there is an implication underlying his judgment in support of this view. For the reasons given I have no hesitation in holding that the District Judge's findings regarding the collateral relationship of the respondents to Shib Ram deceased and as to the alleged common ancestor having occupied the land left by Shib Ram are not judicial findings and cannot be accepted as final in this second appeal.

After giving my best consideration to the whole case by the light of the entries in the revenue records referred to by the lower Courts, I have come to the conclusion that the respondents, on whom the onus lay, have failed to prove that they are collaterals of Shib Ram, or that Sher Singh, the alleged common ancestor of themselves and Shib Ram, ever occupied the land in dispute. I accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the District Judge, and dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs with costs throughout.

Malicious prosecution—Proof—‘Reasonable and probable cause,’ meaning of—Innocence, proof of, by plaintiff, whether necessary.

In an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must prove four things, (1) that he was prosecuted, (2) that the prosecution ended favourably to him, (3) that the defendant acted without reasonable and probable cause, and (4) that the defendant was actuated by malice. Under the second and third heads, questions as to plaintiff's innocence generally arise. But they must be regarded only as incidental to the question whether the prosecution ended in the plaintiff's discharge or acquittal and whether the defendant acted without reasonable or probable cause. [p. 805, col. 2; p. 806, col. 1.]

The plaintiff is not charged with the onus of affirmatively proving his innocence. [p. 806, col. 2.]

Reasonable and probable cause means an honest belief in the guilt of the accused based on a full conviction, founded upon reasonable grounds of the existence of a state of circumstances, which, assuming them to be true, would reasonably lead any ordinarily prudent and cautious man, placed in the position of the accuser, to the conclusion that the person charged was probably guilty of the crime imputed. Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Sub-Judge, South Kanara, in Original Suit No. 8 of 1914.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit, which was brought to recover Rs. 3,500 as damages for malicious prosecution, was dismissed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Kanara and the plaintiff appeals. The plaintiff was the managing trustee of Shri Venkataramana temple of Mulki and the defendant complained to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Mangalore that the plaintiff had, as trustee, committed offences of criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust in respect of the temple properties. At the trial the plaintiff was discharged under section 253, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Magistrate on July the 15th, 1912.

For the purposes of this case we may leave out of consideration those allegations of the defendant which merely imputed breach of the rules framed under the award of arbitrators for the management of the temple, and we may at once proceed to those charges in which an element of criminal dishonesty was disclosed by the prosecutor's allegations. In the defendant's complaint, which was prepared by Counsel, were specified eight acts of the plaintiff as constituting offences of the above description under the Penal Code. Of these the most substantial were, (1) that the accused had constructed a golden palanquin and had misappropriated about 4 seers of gold of the value of Rs. 2,000 by charging the temple with the value of 30 seers of gold while utilising only 26 seers, (2) that the accused had debited the temple with Rs. 400 worth of fire works for use at festivals, although the amount really spent was only Rs. 200, and that he had misappropriated the difference, (3) that Rs. 4,843 had been paid into Court about six months previously but had not been brought into the temple accounts and that the accused was using the same for his own purposes, and (4) that the accused had misappropriated 50 Muras of rice and Rs. 10 collected as offerings to the temple. In his sworn statement to the Magistrate, the defendant further alleged that if the temple chest was examined, it would be found that there was a deficiency in the money in hand when compared with the amount stated in the accounts.

The first charge, namely, that of misappropriating Rs. 2,000 worth of gold is a very serious one and, in our opinion, was quite unwarranted by the information of which the defendant was at the time possessed or by what has since transpired. When the defendant was in the witness box and was asked upon what basis he made this allegation, his only explanation was that many people were saying that the plaintiff undertook the work of repairing the palanquin with a view to commit misappropriation and that he also believed that the plaintiff was going to misappropriate the gold. He admitted that he had not personally examined the goldsmith who made the palanquin before he complained to the Magistrate. The only information that he had was that which Vasudeva Shanbhogue and Hari Pai gave him. These persons have not been examined as witnesses and it is clear from the defendant's own statement that he had no information, that could justify him in making the statement that the accused had misappropriated this large amount of gold. The Magistrate's judgment shows that this charge was dropped at the trial as the prosecution found it to be groundless.

The second allegation of importance, which is the 4th charge in Exhibit C, namely, that the accused had misappropriated Rs. 4,843 belonging to the temple, was equally unjustifiable. This money had been recovered by a suit instituted on behalf of the temple and the money was in the hands of the Vakil who represented the temple. In the Vakil's hands, it was, presumably, quite safe. The defendant admitted in cross-examination that he knew that the amount had been with the Vakil. Yet he had the audacity, in his complaint, to declare that the accused was utilising the same for his own purposes. The fact that this money was not entered in the temple accounts as having been paid to the Vakil would not justify the defendant in making such an accusation when, as he admits, he had no information that the plaintiff had actually misappropriated the amount.

The next accusation, which is number 3 in serial order, is that the accused had misappropriated about Rs. 200 shown as spent on fire works by means of entries in the accounts showing payments to certain fictitious persons. When he was asked about this, the defendant stated that, before the institution of the criminal complaint, all he knew was that the plaintiff had made it appear in the accounts that fire works had been purchased from unlicensed vendors, but he did not know the names of the persons from whom the purchases had been made. He gathered from the fact that it was entered in the accounts of the plaintiff temple that fire works had been obtained from unlicensed persons, that the plaintiff must have misappropriated the money under this head of expenditure. That, again, seems to have been a reckless and unwarranted assumption. He stated that the payments had been shown in the accounts as having been made to several fictitious persons, but he took no trouble to ascertain whether the persons shown as having sold the fire works were really fictitious. As observed by Lord Atkinson in Corea v. Peiris (1) the pivot upon which all such actions turn is the state of the mind of the prosecutor at the time that he institutes or authorises the prosecution.

In Hicks v. Faulkner (2) Hawkins, J., defined reasonable and probable cause to be "an honest belief in the guilt of the accused based upon a full conviction, founded upon reasonable grounds of the existence of a state of circumstances, which, assuming them to be true, would reasonably lead any ordinarily prudent and cautious man, placed in the position of the accuser, to the conclusion that the person charged was probably guilty of the crime imputed."

Applying these tests, it can only be concluded on the evidence that the defendant must have acted without reasonable or probable cause when he accused the plaintiff of misappropriation and criminal breach of trust with respect to the above-mentioned three charges.

The fourth of the charges which we need consider relates to the misappropriation of 50 Muras of rice and Rs. 10. At the criminal trial, an entry of Rs. 256 in the accounts was shown as representing the value of these 50 Muras of rice and Rs. 10. The accused had not brought this item into the general accounts, but had kept it under the head of "Kadanathaya." The prosecution failed to prove that this entry of Rs. 256 related to any money received from any other source. The statement that the accused had misappropriated this amount was not justified, but as the defendant might have entertained some reasonable suspicion from the manner in which the entry was made in the accounts we do not think that in respect of this item there was entire absence of reasonable cause.

As regards the defendant's allegations that there was deficiency in the cash balance, the Magistrate found on examination Rs. 492 as the deficiency. But this was accounted for by a loan of Rs 510 granted upon the pledge of jewels as evidenced by an entry in the account book seized at the search. As the Magistrate observed, there was no reason to suppose that there had been any falsification of accounts or misappropriation of money in respect of these items. At the same time we do not consider that the defendant's statement in this respect was without reasonable cause, as there was an actual shortage of cash.

On the whole, we cannot agree with the Subordinate Judge in his finding that no case has been made out of malicious prosecution. Leaving aside the statements made in the complaint with regard to inaccuracies in the accounts or to irregularities in the plaintiff's conduct as trustee, there are at least 3 serious accusations of misappropriation which the defendant had no justification for making. We are of opinion on the first issue that the complaint in question was in these respects made without any reasonable and probable cause.

There is also no doubt from the evidence that the defendant's action was dictated by malice. Shortly before the accusation was made the plaintiff had excommunicated the defendant. The defendant retaliated by accusing the plaintiff of defamation. The defendant in his evidence admitted that there had been misunderstanding between him and the plaintiff in the year 1907, in consequence of dealings which they had with one another in respect of a mortgage transaction which resulted in civil litigation. The manner in which the defendant raked together every conceivable charge in his endeavour to procure the conviction of his enemy and to cause him the maximum amount of difficulty in defending himself spells vindictiveness. It was provided in the scheme sanctioned by the award of arbitrators for the conduct of the temple affairs that this defendant and others might inspect the accounts at any time for ascertaining whether they were properly kept and that the temple money was properly accounted for. Instead of proceeding accordingly and inspecting the accounts before launching the criminal prosecution the defendant rushed into Court and attempted to make criminal charges out of trifling irregularities, which might very well have served as grounds for applying for the removal of the trustee in proceedings properly instituted for that purpose in a Civil Court, but not for his prosecution.

As Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, in his arguments for the respondent, has raised the question whether the plaintiff in an action of this kind is bound to prove his innocence, and as the Sub-Judge's judgment containing a remark that the plaintiff had not proved his innocence by the mere fact that he was discharged in the Magistrate's Court, it is necessary to say a few words on this point. It is well settled that in actions for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must prove four things: (1) that he was prosecuted, (2) that the prosecution ended favourably to him, (3) that the defendant acted without reasonable and probable cause, and (4) that the defendant was actuated by malice. Under the second and third heads questions as to the plaintiff's innocence generally arise. But they must, we think, be regarded only as incidental to the questions whether the prosecution ended in the plaintiff's discharge or acquittal and whether the defendant acted without reasonable or probable cause. In Abrath v. North Eastern Railway Company (3), where the plaintiff had been acquitted of the criminal charge and the Jury had expressed the opinion that he left the Court without a stain upon his character and his innocence was not challenged by the defendants at the trial of his action for malicious prosecution, Bowen, L. J., as he then was, in discussing the onus of proof in such cases, observed that the plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution must prove, first, that he was innocent and that his innocence was pronounced by the Tribunal before which the accusation was made. As already observed, no question as to proof of innocence arose in the case, and we do not think that the learned Lord Justice intended to do more than lay down that the prosecution must be shown to have ended favourably to the accused. The substance of the judgment was that proof of innocence was not by itself prima facie proof of want of reasonable and probable cause. This would appear to be the view taken by Sir Frederick Pollock in his well-known work on Torts, as after citing Bower, L. J.'s observations in the text he observes in a note—"A plaintiff who being indicted on the prosecution complained of has been found not guilty on a defect in the indictment is sufficiently innocent for this purpose." It is in the same sense that the word "innocent" appears to have been used by Lord Macnaghten in Pestonji Muncherji Mody v. Queen Insurance Company (4) and by Lord Davey in Coz v. English, Scottish and Australian Bank, Ltd. (5) and by Maclean, C. J., in Harish Chunder Neogy v. Nishi Kanta Banerjee (6). In some cases the innocence of the plaintiff has been treated as an element of consideration that enters into the question whether the defendant acted without reasonable and probable cause. If in Nalliappa Goundan v. Kailappa Goundan (7) the learned Judges intended to lay down that something further must be proved in suits of this nature beyond proof that the prosecution ended favourably for the accused and that there was an absence of reasonable cause in the prosecution, then we think that they went too far and that Lord Bowen's observation above referred to does not support their dictum to that extent. Failure to prove more than this may be relevant to the question of damages. In our opinion the Subordinate Judge misdirected himself in observing that the fact of the plaintiff having been discharged by the Magistrate was no evidence of his innocence, and in assuming, apparently, that the plaintiff was prima facie guilty and that he was bound affirmatively to prove his innocence. In parts of his judgment, e.g., paragraphs 69, 104 and 107, the learned Subordinate Judge has applied to the plaintiff's conduct the test whether his motive was righteous or unrighteous, which is of course quite beside the point. We cannot accept the view of the Subordinate Judge in paragraph 108 of his judgment that the "plaintiff has failed to establish his innocence in respect of any one of the accusations."

As regards damages, the plaintiff states that he had to pay about Rs. 2,500 as Vakil's fees in defending himself at the criminal trial. Exhibit B series are receipts for Rs. 1,150 passed by certain Pleaders in his favour. In allowing this appeal and reversing the decision of the Subordinate Judge, we allow the plaintiff altogether Rs. 2,000 as damages, and we direct the defendant to pay the plaintiff's costs in this and in the lower Court.

Appeal allowed.

Consolidated appeals from decrees of the Calcutta High Court, dated June 2, 1913, reversing the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya.

FACTS are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The plaintiffs Radha Kant Lal and others sued to set aside two deeds of gift made by their ancestor Drigpal Lal, deceased, in favour of his mistress Nazma Begum, and his daughter by her Kuisam Bibi. The main question for determination was whether the properties comprised in the deeds of gift were the self-acquired properties of Drigpal or whether they were or had become the ancestral properties of the joint family of which Drigpal and plaintiffs were the co-parceners. The Trial Judge substantially allowed the plaintiffs' claim but on appeal the High Court (Chitty and Teunon, JJ.) reversed this decision and dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., (with him Sir W. Garth), for the Appellants, submitted that Drigpal and his brothers did not inherit Din Dayal's properties as collaterals (in which case they would be self-acquired), but obtained them for valuable consideration paid out of joint family funds, and that the properties were, therefore, joint family property. Even assuming that the properties were self-acquired when they first came to Drigpal's hands, yet he threw them into the common stock of the joint family and treated them as joint. That was clear from the way in which the accounts were kept and the subsequent partition proceedings between Drigpal and his brothers. They relied on Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (1) and Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya Lal (2).

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

SIR WALTER PHILLIMORE, BART.—The suits to which these consolidated appeals relate concern the validity and effect of two deeds of gift made by one Drigpal Lal, deceased, the father of the first plaintiff and appellant, and grandfather of the other plaintiffs and appellants, in favour of two concubines and the daughter of one of them.

The son asserts that he and his father were joint members of a Hindu family, and that the properties to which the gifts relate were part of the joint family estate. This is the question to be determined in the suit.

Some of the properties in question came to Drigpal from the estate of his brother, Din Dayal, and others were acquired by the use of the revenues of Din Dayal's estate; and the first matter to be enquired into is whether the property which came to Drigpal from Din Dayal's estate was self-acquired property or came to him as part of the joint family estate.

The circumstances in which it was acquired are as follows:—

Drigpal and Din Dayal were two of five brothers who were at one time all members of a joint Hindu family. Din Dayal was adopted by his uncle and went out of the family. Another brother died without male issue. This left Duli Chand, Drigpal, and Kanhaya.

RADHA KANTA LAL V. NAZMA BEGUM.

These three brothers separated in estate in the year 1876.

Din Dayal died on the 8th March 1878 leaving no issue, but leaving surviving him his widow, Rukmini, and two widows of his adoptive father.

The succession to his estate if he died intestate would, therefore, be as follows:—

The widow Rukmini would take for her life, giving maintenance to the other widows. These, if they survived her, would take for their lives (it matters not for this purpose in which order inter se), and then those who at the death of the survivors of the three widows would be the male heirs would take the property. At the moment of Din Dayal's death these would be the three brothers; but it could not be foreseen who would be the male heirs when the succession ultimately devolved upon them. Din Dayal, though he made no legal Will, expressed his last wishes as to the disposal of his estate, and they were, according to the recital in an ekrarnama, dated the 3rd April 1878, and executed by the widow, to the following effect:—

"That after my death, you" (that is, Duli Chand and Drigpal) "and Babu Kanhaya Lal shall, as proprietors, enter upon possession of all my properties, moveable and immoveable, all mortgage and simple bonds, all decretal moneys, zarpeshgi moneys and Bhurna moneys, houses and money at Ramna situated in Sahebgunge, Zillah Gaya, and over every other kind of properties belonging to me; that you shall allow my wife to remain during her lifetime in possession of my dwelling-house situated in Kasba Haswa . . . ; that you shall pay to her one lakh of rupees in cash to defray the expenses of performing religious rites and pilgrimage, from your own pocket; that you shall allow all money in cash and ornaments which are in the house at Haswa to remain in the possession of the Musammât during her life; that you shall pay her Rs. 10,000 in cash annually, besides clothing and grains sufficient for her use; that you shall pay to Musammât Jado Koer and Dhupa Koer, the widows of Babu Murali Ram, who are my mothers, Rs. 2,500 each annually in cash, besides clothing and grains sufficient for their use; that you shall make a hiba or gift to Musammât Ram Koer, daughter of Babu Girdhar Lal, my deceased brother, of 16 annas of Mouzah Lodipur Jafra and Shaikhpara appertaining to Lot Lodipur Jafra, 16 annas of Mouzah Korigawan appertaining to Lot Sandha Manjhigawan . . . and 15 annas of Mouzah Kumbharwa Girji Baudbanna appertaining to Lot Samandih, etc., being 12 *kalam*s known as Mahal Ratni . . . with all the dependencies and all the Chucks of the Mouzah aforesaid, situate in Zillah Gaya; that you shall pay Rs. 1,800 in cash annually, and clothing and grains sufficient to meet her requirements, to Musammât Annapurna, Tawaif, provided that she does not lose her chastity and character and continues in the Pardah; that you shall make gift to Babu Somar Ram of 16 annas of Mouzah Jatsari . . . ; and that you shall execute deeds in accordance with the above directions in favour of these persons."

All parties were desirous that these wishes should be carried into effect, and accordingly a series of documents were executed, the first being the ekrarnama already mentioned whereby the widow purported to dispose of all the property of her deceased husband in favour of the three brothers.

Then there was a bond given by the brothers to the widow with a mortgage, to secure the payment of the lakh of rupees; a covenant, with a charge on certain property, to pay to the father's widows the stipulated annuities and maintenance; a covenant with the concubine to pay her the agreed annuity and maintenance; a deed of gift in favour of the adopted nephew; and a similar deed of gift in favour of the niece.

The lakh of rupees was paid in two instalments within six months of the death, and the bond was discharged. The money found to pay Rukmini by the three brothers came out of ancestral family property.

The three brothers entered into possession of the estate, and paid the annuities and maintenance to the various ladies. The father's widows died first, and then

RADHA KANTA LAL v. NAZMA BEGUM.

Rukmini in the course of the year 1882.

The annual income of the property is said to have been rather more than half a lakh, so that the arrangement, as it turned out, was not such a bad bargain for Rukmini, and was advantageous to the father's widows. For the concubine, niece, and adopted nephew it was pure gain.

It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the ekrarnama of the 3rd April 1878 executed by Rukmini in favour of the three brothers was inoperative to pass more than her life-interest, and that the brothers who survived her must be deemed to have taken the property by inheritance, in which case, being an inheritance from a collateral, it would be self-acquired, and not to have taken it by purchase, in which latter case it would be ancestral family property.

That it was the intention of the deed to pass the whole property is obvious. If Rukmini was only conveying her life-interest, and if either of the father's widows had survived her, the survivor's estate would have been interposed before that of the brothers. Even if it be supposed that the father's widows were so far parties to the transaction that they could not have claimed their life-interest in the event of their surviving Rukmini, there was, as already observed, no certainty that the three brothers would have all survived Rukmini, so as to be the heirs at her death. Moreover, the gifts in favour of the adopted nephew and niece would have failed.

It may be, however, that though this was the intention of the deed, its only legal operation would be the restricted one for which the defendants contend.

A widow has only a limited power of disposition of the property. She can, however, alienate the estate in certain circumstances and under certain conditions. Whether in the circumstances of this case she could effect a valid alienation is a matter of some difficulty. The Subordinate Judge thought that she could; the High Court held that she could not.

Their Lordships are relieved from pronouncing upon this point of law, because they are of opinion that as regards the property which came from Drigpal the plaintiffs can succeed upon another ground. Assuming that the three brothers—and in particular Drigpal—acquired this property as collateral heirs, and took it, therefore, as self-acquired property, it is well established that a member of a Hindu family may convert his self-acquired property into ancestral family estate by throwing it into the common stock and this is, in their Lordships' opinion, that which happened in the present case.

As already stated, Drigpal and his two brothers had made a partition of their joint family estate in 1876. At the time of the death of Din Dayal and the accession of the three brothers to his property, Drigpal was acting as guardian of his younger brother Kanhaya. Accordingly one book was kept for their joint share of Din Dayal's estate; and this system of book-keeping, which started on the 2nd October 1878, was continued till the 11th February 1880, when Kanhaya came of age. Thereafter no separate book was kept by or for Drigpal in respect of the property which had come to him from Din Dayal; but there was one account for all Drigpal's receipts from all sources, whether it was income from joint family property, or from that which he had acquired from Din Dayal, or any other source of revenue, and similarly for all his expenditure of whatever kind.

Now his son, Radhakant Lal, the first plaintiff and appellant, had been born on the 31st May 1877, and from that time forward there had been a joint family estate for him and his father. And, if the accounts from 1880 onwards are such as to show a blending of the properties, the ordinary inference to be drawn is that Drigpal had thrown the property which he had acquired from Din Dayal into the common stock.

This matter has come more than once before this Board, and was the subject of decision in the cases of Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaiya Lal (2) and Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (1) decided on the 30th January 1917.

The Subordinate Judge held that Drigpal had amalgamated the two properties, and the two grounds upon which his decision to this effect is supported by the present appellants are;—

RADHA KANTA LAL v. NAZMA BEGUM.

First, the intermixture of and the blending of the receipts and payments in one account with those belonging to the ancestral family property; and secondly, that when Drigpal and his younger brother Kanhaya took the further step of effecting what is called "a Deorh partition," that is, not merely a separation of interest, but an actual partition of the several properties constituting their estates, mutual exchanges were made whereby Drigpal gave up his share in some ancestral family property for Kanhaya's share in property which came from Din Dayal, and vice versa.

The High Court took the opposite view. As to the argument drawn from the exchange, the judgment of the High Court is as follows :—

"The first point made was with regard to the Deorh partition which took place between Drigpal Lal and Kanhaya Lal on the 8th May 1881. It was argued that, on that partition, Din Dayal's properties were exchanged for joint properties and vice versa. When, however, this point came to be investigated it appeared that there was no such general interchange as the plaintiffs would have us believe. Only two possible instances were given us, and of these one is capable of an obvious explanation and the other is not fully proved. The first instance was with regard to Mouzahs Sikandarpur and Asarhi. It is doubtless the case that Mouzah Sikandarpur was ancestral while Mouzah Asarhi had come from Din Dayal. These Mouzahs are contiguous and of equal value so far as one can tell from the jama. They both form part of Mahal Asarhi Sikandarpur. At the partition it seems that Drigpal took 10 annas 8 pies of Sikandarpur, while Kanhaya Lal took 10 annas 8 pies of Asarhi, so that each brother got two-thirds of a separate village instead of a one-third share in the two. This clearly was a matter of convenience and cannot, we think, be regarded as evidence of amalgamation of properties ancestral and acquired from Din Dayal. Neither of these villages, it may be observed, forms part of the subject matter of the present suit.

"Then it was said that for Mouzah Pillich, Touzi No. 204, an ancestral Mouzah, two Mouzahs, Nanand and Sonchari, which came from Din Dayal, were exchanged. For this the evidence is Exhibits 45 and 47, applications made by Drigpal Lal, and Exhibit 64, an application made by Kanhaya Lal, for mutation of names. The exchange of these villages does not appear to have been very satisfactorily established from these two Exhibits. In the absence of any koras or other reliable evidence as to the precise details of this partition, it would be impossible to draw the conclusion which the plaintiffs wish us to draw from the very meagre evidence with regard to these two exchanges."

It should be observed that the High Court agrees with the Subordinate Judge in respect of the exchange of Sikandarpur and Asarhi; and their Lordships are of opinion that the exchange of Pillich for the two Mouzahs specified was satisfactorily proved by the documentary evidence. This evidence was further supplemented by the oral evidence of the witness Gajadhar Lal. Moreover, there was oral evidence uncontradicted from this witness and from Bhakhi Lal, proving the exchange of two more villages. A more striking proof of the throwing together of the two properties into a common stock there could hardly be.

Drigpal gives ancestral family property, and receives his brother's share in property coming from Din Dayal. He gives Din Dayal property and receives his brother's share of ancestral family property.

There is not only one case which standing by itself could with difficulty be explained away; but there are four instances.

Turning now to the accounts, the Judges of the High Court agree that, from and after the "Deorh partition" in 1881, Drigpal's accounts were undoubtedly more or less mixed up. But they observed that Drigpal had five Tehbils or tills. The judgment then proceeds as follows :—

"We have been taken through the accounts at great length by the learned Counsel for the respondents, and we do not think that it is possible to draw any very definite conclusion from these accounts; first, because a large number of the accounts which were kept by Drigpal or under his direction, relating to his estate, have not been produced; and secondly, because the plaintiff Radhakant, who alone could speak with authority as to these accounts, and their precise object and nature, has not ventured to go into the box. All the papers which were in the possession of Drigpal at the time of his death have passed to Radhakant, and the fact that he has not produced so many of them must weigh very strongly against him. There is no one general or central account which shows that the whole of Drigpal's estate was dealt with as a unit. In particular, we may mention that with the exception of Exhibits 16 and 18 no books of account of the mica mining business—either the Seha books at the mines or the stock books—are forthcoming. None of the 'khazana haveli' or of the Calcutta books have been produced, nor have any books after 1308. In 1304 certain Mouzabs acquired after the death of Din Dayal, and in 1310 certain of the Din Dayal villages, were set apart for the pocket expenses of Drigpal, and in 1309, it is said, a certain ancestral village was set apart for the pocket expenses of Radhakant. In respect of the village set apart for Drigpal, separate accounts were admittedly kept. None of these books have been produced. The Tamasuki Bahis dealing with bonds and money-lending business are not forthcoming, nor the books of the mail-cart business. The learned Counsel for the respondents attempted to minimise the effect of this non-production of books; but it is, in our opinion, a very serious matter. If all the books of Drigpal had been produced, it might have been possible to ascertain precisely how his accounts were kept and with what object."

The plaintiffs are said not to have produced the books of the general account already mentioned, which was begun on the 11th February 1880. The books of the general account were produced to about the end of the year 1892. The explanation offered of the non-production of the later books is that after 1892 they were thought to be of no importance, because all the properties which Drigpal bought had been acquired by this time, and the only object of producing the accounts after the first year or two was to show that these properties had been bought out of the common stock, and, therefore, formed part of it.

This is not strictly accurate, for one property at least was bought after 1892. But once given that the account shows that the properties had been blended, the later accounts are, for this purpose, immaterial. Properties once brought into a common stock cannot be taken out of it again.

Then, as to the statement that "there is no one general or central account which shows that the whole of Drigpal's estate was dealt with as a unit," their Lordships cannot accept this as accurate.

The account already so often mentioned purports to be a general account, into which all receipts and payments are brought. It might, perhaps, be said that it is only a cash book and not a ledger. But it appears to be a similar book to that which was produced to the Board in the case of Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (1), as to which their Lordships observed: "It is not strictly an account book at all, but a book in which is recorded from day to day various payments and receipts of money from different sources"; and from which their Lordships drew the inference in that case that the man who kept the account had "so blended his own property with the joint property as to make the whole joint property."

As to the non-production of the khazana haveli, their Lordships cannot see what assistance the production of these books, if, indeed, such are kept, would have been.

No doubt the plaintiff, Radhakant, did not give evidence; but the men of business of the family did. And it does not appear that any point was made in cross-examination or in the conduct of the trial, that any material books had been kept back; and no such idea seems to have occurred to the Subordinate Judge.

There remains one piece of evidence which makes in favour of the respondents, and that is furnished by the recitals in the two deeds which are attacked by the present suits. They are in similar terms and are as follows:—

"My income from ancestral properties was only Rs. 13,000 but subsequently I got the estates of Babu Girdhari Lal and Babu Dindyal Lal, yielding an income of Rs. 23,000. After my separation from Babus Dulichand and Kanhayalal, I acquired lots of properties by my own labour and exertions and from my own fund, by means of trade, and the 'ticca' (meaning a Ticca lease of Dourchanch, which by making improvement now yields an income of

RADHA KANTA LAL v. NAZMA BEGUM.

Rs. 38,000). In this way I am now possessed of four kinds of properties, viz.:—

- “(1st.) The ancestral properties ;
 - (2nd.) The estate of Babu Girdhari Lal ;
 - (3rd.) The estate of Babu Dindyal Lal ; and
 - (4th.) The self-acquired properties ;
- with regard to which I have full powers of transfer.”

The effect of these recitals, which were probably intended to make evidence, is somewhat weakened by the fact that, in a deposition made in another suit, Drigpal stated that a property which he gave to a son by one of these concubines, named Sultan Bahadur, had been given with the consent of his lawful son, the plaintiff Radhakant; and this property came from Din Dayal.

Their Lordships cannot attach sufficient countervailing weight to these recitals to displace the strong evidence from the exchanges and the accounts, and upon the whole, they come to the conclusion that, assuming that Drigpal acquired his share of the property of his brother Din Dayal as self-acquired property, he so dealt with it afterwards as to make it joint property with his ancestral family estate, of which family, the first plaintiff and, as they were born, the other plaintiffs were members.

Turning now to the deeds of gift which are attacked by the plaintiffs in the present suits, the four properties purported to be conveyed to Musammât Nasiban, which are the subject-matter of the second suit, were properties which form part of the estate of Din Dayal, and, therefore, could not be conveyed away from the joint family estate.

As to the properties purported to be conveyed to Musammât Nazma Begum and her daughter, the matter is more complicated. There are thirteen properties: two appear to have come from Din Dayal; the rest appear to have been bought by Drigpal at various times after Din Dayal's death.

Drigpal had a nucleus of joint family property, the income of which was nearly half a lakh. He carried on for some years a business of extracting and selling mica, as he says in the recitals in the deeds of gift; and he also claims to have carried on a profitable mailcart business.

It was suggested for the respondents and accepted by the High Court that the profits of these two businesses and the properties purchased with them might be considered self-acquired. But in one instance certainly the land from which the mica was extracted was ancestral family property. It appears also from some of the books which have been produced that the moneys paid for wages and other expenses of winning the mica were supplied out of the general income of Drigpal, and that the profits were—as the Subordinate Judge has found—devoted to the general maintenance of the family and the education of the son Radhakant. From whatever source some of the lands from which the mica was gotten may have been acquired, the mica business was dealt with as part of the joint family property.

As to the mail-cart business, it was doubtful whether there were any profits; and the receipts and payments in connection with it were all brought into the one general account.

The final result, therefore, is that all the properties purporting to be conveyed to the respondents were joint family property of which Drigpal could not so dispose, and that the plaintiffs and appellants are entitled to recover them from the respondents, that is, the two concubines, and the daughter of the one, and the mortgagees.

It is right to say that their Lordships were informed by Counsel at the Bar that so far as the deeds of gift purported to pass personal property, they are not to be deemed to be attacked in the present suits, and that the recovery is to be limited to the lands.

The Subordinate Judge only gave a judgment in respect of five-sixths of the property, taking it that, at the time of Drigpal's death, there were six members of the family, namely, Drigpal himself, Radhakant, and the latter's four sons, and being of opinion that Drigpal had, therefore, one-sixth share in the properties which he could pass by the deeds of gift.

This, however, is an error. Drigpal had no separate sixth share. The whole property belonged to the one Hindu family, and accrued upon his death to the surviving members.

AMIR BI BI V. AROKIAM.

The plaintiffs appealed in respect of this matter to the High Court, and their Lordships are of opinion that their appeal should have been allowed.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals should be allowed; that the judgment of the High Court should be reversed; that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge should be varied by declaring that the plaintiffs have right to the whole, and should get possession of the whole, of the landed properties covered by the two deeds of gift, instead of five-sixths only, and that it, so varied, should be restored; and that the plaintiffs should have their costs in the High Court, and on appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge decreeing that each party should bear his own costs of the proceedings before him should be allowed to stand.

Appeal allowed.

If there is a transfer of property which does not come within the special modes dealt with in the Act, the conditions as to writing and registration prescribed therein have no application. [p. 815, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Napier, J.—The only method by which an award can be made efficacious for process by the Court is by making the submission a rule of Court, and unless this is done, and enforcement can be had under the processual law, it cannot be said to operate as a judgment of Court. Even if it is equivalent to a judgment for some purposes, in the sense that it may have the same effect in barring suits, it is not a judgment in any real meaning of the word, far less is it a decree. An oral award can, however, pass title without any further action by the parties on any other footing, as, by the submission, the arbitrators are constituted the parties' agents for the purpose of doing such things as are specifically or by implication embodied in the terms of the submission. JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—This is a suit on a hypothecation bond. The plaintiff alleges that in a family settlement between herself, her mother-in-law and brother-in-law the arbitrators chosen by them are alleged to have given an oral award under which this bond and some other bonds were allotted to her share. The hypothecation bond was originally executed to her father-in-law. She now sues on it.

The only plea of the defendant with which we are concerned, relates to the unsustainability of the suit on the ground that even if the award was true, as it was not followed by an execution of a conveyance, plaintiff is not entitled to maintain a suit to recover the money due under the bond. The learned District Judge has accepted this plea and has dismissed the suit. I am unable to agree with him.

There are two aspects of the question; one is that the award itself operates to vest the property in the plaintiff, and the other, an award not being one of the instruments specially dealt with in the Transfer of Property Act no writing or registration is necessary to give validity to the award. Upon the first question it may now be taken as settled law that an award may be oral. Kula Nagabushanam v. Kula Seshachalam (1), Savappa v. Devchand Valchand (2) and Second Appeal No. 237 of 916 have held that an oral award is as binding upon the parties as a written award. The further question is whether the award of an arbitrator is only a contract between the parties who submitted their disputes to his decision or whether it has the attributes of a judgment as well. There are no doubt dicta in certain cases that an award of the arbitrators must be regarded as in the nature of a contract. These are cases in which it was held that the award can be varied like a consent judgment, in certain particulars. I do not think that these authorities lay down that an award has no greater effect than a contract of the parties. It is true that under the English Law as pointed out by Russell on Awards at page 311, "An award of the arbitrators must be followed up by execution of the necessary documents to give efficacy to it." As Mr. Krishnasami Ayyar pointed out, an examination of the cases cited as authorities for this proposition does not fully bear out this statement of the law. For example, the case of Johnson v. Wilson (3) was one in which a further act would have been required to give the validity to the decision even if it had been regarded as one passed by a Court of Law. But there are some cases which bear out the view enunciated. I do not think that these decisions should be followed in India. In this country, decisions by Panchayats have been accepted as binding long before the regular Courts were established by the British Government and there is nothing in the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure to suggest that the decisions of the arbitrators are not valid until they are followed by the execution of the documents. Of course, in cases relating to specific performance or where one of the parties sues another for the enforcement of a particular act, the decree of the Court would still leave the parties under an obligation to perform the directions given in the judgment of the Court. But where a complete adjudication of the rights of the parties is given by the judgment, the parties are concluded by it and it is not incumbent upon either of them to take further steps, unless they be the modes prescribed by processual law to give effect to the decree of the Court. This is undoubtedly the position so far as the judgments of the ordinary Tribunals of the country are concerned. Is the position of the arbitrators different? In my opinion, the fact that the parties have chosen to invoke the aid of the private Tribunal to settle their differences should not make any difference as regards the efficacy of the decision come to by such a Tribunal. So long as the resort to such a Tribunal is authorised by the law, I can find no justification for not giving the same finality to the pronouncement of such a Tribunal as is accorded to that of the ordinary Tribunals. The fact that in submitting reference to arbitration no Court-fee is paid does not in the least affect the question. There are authorities which support the conclusion at which I have arrived. In Muhammad Newaz Khan v. Alam Khan (4) the question related to the applicability of the principle of res judicata to awards of arbitrators. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee point out that the fact that no application was made to make the award a decree of Court did not render the award any the less valid. The logical result of this conclusion is to regard the award as binding in its nature as a judgment of Court. In Sornavalli Ammal v. Mutnayya Sastrigal (5) the learned Judges point out that the award is not simply a contract between the parties, but had the effect of conferring title upon them. In Jadunath Chowdhury v. Kailash Chandra Bhattacharya (6) it was held that the award can be pleaded in bar to a suit relating to the subject-matter covered by the award. Sheo Narain v. Beni Madho (7) is also to the same effect. See also Krishna Panda v. Balaram Panda (8) and Subbaraya Chetti v. Sadasiva Chetti (9). In Bhaurao Jivaji v. Radhabai (10) the learned Judges, relying upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Muhammad Newaz Khan v. Alam Khan (4), came to the conclusion that no further instrument need be executed to give validity to the award of the arbitrators. I am prepared to follow this decision. As regards Talewar Singh v. Bahori Singh (11), the learned Judges themselves point out that something had to be done in pursuance of the decision of the arbitrators. It is upon that ground they distinguish Sornavalli Ammal v. Muthayya Sastrigal (5). I am therefore of opinion that by virtue of the award of the arbitrators the right to recover upon the mortgage bond accrued to the plaintiff.

As I stated at the outset, there is also another aspect from which the award can be viewed. It has been held that oral partitions can be enforced notwithstanding the fact that there is no writing or registration to evidence such a partition. See Thiruvengadachariar v. Ranganatha Aiyangar (12), Alamelu Ammal v. Balu Ammal (13), Latchumammal v. Gengammal (14) and Gyannessa v. Mobarakannessa (15). It was also held that an oral dedication of property to an idol is valid. See Pallayya v. Ramavadhanulu (16). The principle of these decisions is that the Transfer of Property Act is not exhaustive of all modes of transfer and if there is a transfer of property which would not come within the special modes discussed in the Transfer of Property Act, the conditions as to writing and registration prescribed by the Act have no application. The mode of transfer by an award is not dealt with by the Transfer of Property Act. Consequently the decision of the arbitrators by which they are said to have given the mortgage bond to the present plaintiff is enforceable between the parties, if there is an oral award. In this view also plaintiff would have acquired a title to sue upon the hypothecation bond.

For both these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of the District Judge must be reversed and the appeal should be sent back to him for disposal on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

NAPIER, J.—This second appeal arises out of the refusal of the District Judge of Salem to recognise an award as passing title to the appellant in the suit and thus enabling her to sue a third party on the strength of it. The case before the Court was that there was an oral submission to arbitration by certain members of a family of their claim to various properties and that an oral award was given by the arbitrators by which, among other arrangements, the property in question in the suit was given to the appellant, although she was not a party to the submission, and that the value of the property is below Rs. 100. On these facts it is contended before us that the award operated to vest title in her and the contention was sought to be supported on two grounds, first, that the award operated as a judgment, secondly, that the property being under Rs. 100 in value, the arbitrator nominated by the parties had authority to transfer it orally and this award had had that effect.

It is undoubtedly settled law that an oral award is as binding between the parties as a written award, though the further question might arise whether even if a written award could operate as a judgment, an oral award would have the same effect. The contention that an award operates as a judgment and the further contention that qua judgment it can pass title, is one that would have such far-reaching results that I think it necessary to examine it carefully.

AMIR BI BI U. AROKIAM.

The first difficulty to be met is as to the effect of a judgment alone as passing title. The primary effect of a judgment is to give a right to have the adjudication of the Court embodied in a decree under section 33 of the Civil Procedure Code. 'Judgment' is defined in the Civil Procedure Code as "the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order," and I know of no process by which a judgment can be rendered effective without a decree or order having been passed. I must assume, therefore, that when the word 'judgment' is used it is intended to convey the idea of decree or order made by a person constituted by agreement of parties as a Court ad hoc. Assuming that this is so, I am unable to see how the matter is carried any further. Decrees and orders of a Court have to be executed by the Court and elaborate provisions are contained in the Civil Procedure Code regulating the procedure. It has not been contended before us that the provisions of Part II of the Code or Order XXI are applicable to awards by an arbitrator, and it would be a strange result that, whereas execution of a decree entitling a person to recover property has to be by delivery of the property specifically decreed under section 51, the award of an arbitrator should be a judgment and decree capable of passing property without delivery.

Another difficulty in the way of this contention is that no period of limitation would affect the efficacy of this judgment or decree. The only provisions in the Limitation Act which touch awards are Articles 45, 46 and 158. The first has a reference to a suit to contest an award, the second to a suit to recover any property comprised therein and the third to an application to set aside an award under the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. None of these Articles has any application.

The next difficulty is that the Code expressly provides a method by which an award made on a reference to arbitration without the intervention of the Court may become a judgment within the meaning of the Code. That is clause 21 of the second Schedule which provides for the Court pronouncing judgment and a decree following. On such a decree execution would follow and limitation would apply. This is, of course, the only method by which execution can be procured on an award, and that being so, I cannot see how an award on which a Court has not pronounced judgment and issued a decree can be a judgment capable of passing rights. In Krishna Punda v. Balaram Pandu (8) the learned Judges used the phrase "an award duly passed in accordance with a submission of the parties is equivalent to a final judgment," but that language is only used as introductory to the proposition that 'to give effect to it the subsequent consent or approval of neither party is required.' I do not think that this dictum helps the appellant on this point. I am unable to find any other case in this Court where language of this sort has been used. The case of Jadunath Chowdhury v. Kailash Chandra Bhattacharya (6) was also relied upon. In that case an award on a private reference was held to be sufficient answer to a suit to recover property. Their Lordships did not, however, put it on the ground that the award operated as a judgment, but on the ground that the value of the property being under Rs. 100, the provisions of the Registration Act of 1908 did not prevent title passing. The case reported as Sheo Narain v. Beni Madho (7) has also no bearing on this point and nothing was said in it to suggest that the award was a judgment.

Reference was made to the English Law on the subject and I agree that if authority could be found in England for the proposition that an award on a voluntary reference operated as a judgment, the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellant would receive great support, for it must be borne in mind that under the English procedure a judgment is not merely a statement given by the Judge but is the formal adjudication on which execution arises. The authority is, however, all the opposite way. It would be sufficient to refer to section 12 of the Arbitration Act which deals with reference by consent out of Court, and provides that an award on such submission may, by leave of a Court or a Judge, be enforced in the same manner as a judgment or order to the same effect, a provision analogous to that contained in clause 16 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. It is common knowledge that the Courts of Law in England have in times past strenuously opposed the idea that the parties could by an agreement between themselves oust the jurisdiction of the Court. The only method by which the arbitration proceedings could be made in any way efficacious for process by the Court was by making the submission a rule of Court. When that had been done, the Court would, in a proper case and on application made, enforce an award by attachment as proceedings in contempt. No formal execution for the recovery of the money or land would, however, issue even where a submission had been made a rule of Court, and of course far less so where there had been no rule. After the passing of the Judgments Act of 1838 the practice began, in cases where submission had been made a rule, of applying after the passing of the award to the Court for a rule calling upon the party to show cause why he should not pay the amount of the award (vide Russell on Arbitration, page 352) and on this rule execution would issue. An old case of Owen v. Hurd (17) is instructive on the difference between awards made without a rule of Court, and those with. In that case there had been a submission between A and B which had been made a rule of Court. The arbitrator had not, however, proceeded and C who was the person really interested agreed with B for a second arbitration and they appointed an arbitrator. This submission was, however, not made a rule of Court. On the arbitrator making the award, attachment was moved against one of the parties for not obeying the award. But the Court pointed out that the submission on which the award had been made had not been made a rule of Court and stated that the award was a mere nullity. This proposition may be too broad, but it is sufficient to dispose of any suggestion that such an award could operate as a judgment, while a modern case is indicative of the same idea even after the passing of the Arbitration Act. The case is Bankruptcy Notice, In re (18). A party to an arbitration procured an order under section 12 of the Arbitration Act that the award could be enforced in the same manner as a judgment, and then applied to the Registrar in Bankruptcy to issue a bankruptcy notice, he having served on the debtor a notice requiring him to pay the judgment-debt in accordance with the terms of the judgment as required by section 4 clause (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The Court of Appeal upheld the Registrar's refusal to do so and Vaughan Williams, L. J., states the law as follows: "All that is done by section 12 of the Arbitration Act is to give the successful party under the award the right to enforce it as if it were a judgment. I have grave doubts whether there was any jurisdiction to enter judgment in this case," while Fletcher Moulton, L. J., says as follows: "The arbitration was one outside the Court altogether. The powers of the Court in such a case are defined by section 12 of the Act which provides that an award on a submission may by leave of the Court be enforced in the same manner. But it gives no power to turn such an award into a judgment". This expression of opinion as to the present state of the law even after the passing of the Arbitration Act is conclusive as to the view which the English Courts take as to the character of an award made on a voluntary submission. For the above reasons I am satisfied that even if an award is equivalent to a judgment for some purposes in the sense that it may have the same effect as a judgment has in barring suits, it is not a judgment in any real meaning of the word, far less is it a decree.

The next question is whether the award could pass title without any further action by the parties on any other footing. In my opinion, the appellant is entitled to succeed on this point, both on principle and on authority. The parties by their submission agreed to be bound by the decision of the arbitrator and constituted him their agent for the purpose of doing such things as are specifically or by implication embodied in the terms of the submission. This doctrine is laid down by Lord Ellenborough in Hunter v. Rice (19). In that case an arbitrator as on a voluntary submission had awarded that the tenant should deliver to the landlord certain hay stacked on the premises. The landlord, assuming that title has passed to him, brought a suit against the tenant for conversion. The Court held that on the terms of the award no title passed and his remedy was on the award. Lord Ellenborough in delivering the judgment said as follows:—"There is a difference between property awarded to be transferred by the owner and property which is actually transferred by the contract of the owner through the medium of his agent". We have here, apart from the distinction, the foundation of an arbitrator's powers, namely, contract and agency. There are limitations to the exercise of these powers due to the formal requirements of the law, such as, in England, requirements of a conveyance by deed for land and, in India, the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and the Registration Act, but outside these limitations it must be held that an arbitrator legally authorised can carry out the directions of the parties as their agent.

Apart from principle, there is abundant authority, vide Subbaraya Chetti v. Sadasiva Chetti (9) and Sornavalli Ammal v. Muthayya Sastrigal (5). In this latter case the Court pointed out the same distinction as was the basis of the judgment in Hunter v. Rice (19). The language is: "The award does not provide for the execution of any instruments between the parties or the performance of any conditions precedent to the plaintiff's enjoyment of the land. In other words, the plaintiffs acquired under the award a complete title to the land on the date of the award and were entitled to take possession thereof from that date," and the same view was taken in Sheo Narain v. Beni Madho (7). For the above reason I think the appeal must succeed. It is to be noted that it was only ascertained in this Court that the property was under the value of Rs. 100; for the District Judge bases his refusal to accept the award as conferring title on the absence of a fully registered instrument, which have only reference to the requirements of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Mahant JUGALKISHWAR DAS AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Religious endowments—Debutter—Asthali, nature of—Purchases out of asthal income, nature of—Alienation by guardian of minor mahant with leave of Court, whether binding on asthal property.

The mahant of a Hindu asthal or math holds the property of the math in trust for the institution itself. He can only alienate it in case of necessity. [p. 821, col. 2.]

Acquisitions with the income of an asthal are subject to the same trust as the original property. [p. 821, col. 2.]

In the absence of such necessity as would render the debts contracted by him binding on the institution, a mahant has no power to alienate its properties for the purpose of discharging those debts and if the asthal is not liable for such debts, the successor of the mahant is entitled to have the alienations set aside. [p. 822, col. 1.]

J., a mahant, appointed the first respondent, a minor, his successor and left a Will whereby he appointed C. guardian of the first respondent J. had mortgaged the asthal property. The mortgagees after his death brought or threatened proceedings on the mortgages. To pay off these liabilities C. obtained from the District Judge leave to sell certain of the asthal properties.

Held, that C.'s powers could not be larger than those of the actual mahant and that in the absence of proof that the original debts were binding on the asthal, the sales must be set aside [p. 822, col. 1.]

Consolidated appeals from two decrees of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 22nd July 1913, reversing those of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The present Mahant of an asthal sued to set aside certain alienations of asthal property made during his minority by his guardian appointed by the Will of the former Mahant. The Trial Judge dismissed the suits, holding that necessity for the alienations was proved; the High Court (Chitty and Teunon, JJ.) reversed this decision and decreed the suits. Hence this appeal.

EASUDEO ROY v. JUGALKISHWAR DAS.

Sir W. Garth, for the Appellants—These are suits to set aside alienations made by an executor with the leave of the Court. They are founded on allegations of fraud: plaintiff knew he could not succeed without such allegations; but no fraud is proved. The property alleged to be debutter was not really such; on the proper construction of the sanads and on the other evidence the truth is that it was held in beneficial ownership by the successive Mahants, subject only to a trust to devote a part only of the income to feeding mendicants. The powers of the guardian of an infant heir are set out in Hunoomanpersaud Pandey v. Muszmmat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1). The authority of the sebit of an idol or of a Mahant are similar: Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (2). The Mahant is estopped by what the executor has done if it was done bona fide.

[VISCOUNT HILDANE referred to Attenborough v. Solomon (3).]

Reference was also made to Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (4).

As to how far the compromise with the mortgagees is binding on the present Mahant, see Hossein Ali Khan v. Mahanta Bhagaban Das (5).

The property here is not really debutter. There is no suggestion that it was dedicated to an idol or idols, there is no mention of idols in the sanads.

[MR. AMEER ALI.—It will be difficult to show that in all such cases there must be an idol to which Bairagi come.]

The District Judge held himself bound by Sheo Shankar Gir v. Rim Shewak Chowdhri (6), but that case is distinguishable: the grant there was to a Mahant, while here the grantee was only a Gossain, though he was called a Mahant later:

further, the grant here is not entirely for maintenance.

Even assuming that the property is debutter, still if a Mahant sells bona fide his successor is bound. If the executor acts without fraud or collusion, he is in exactly the same position as the Mahant.

Reference was also made to Nanda Lal Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Achariya (7) and Murugesam Pillai v. Gnana Sambanda Pandara Sannadhi (8).

MR. DeGruyther, K.C. (with him Mr. Dube), for the Respondents.—If the mortgagees' decrees were not binding on the present Mahant, no amount of pressure under them would justify the sales. We say neither the decrees nor the mortgages on which they were based were binding. A person in charge of asthal property who desires to mortgage, whether as manager or guardian, must show necessity; and in the case of a math the necessity must be the necessity of the institution itself, not of the incumbent. The onus is on the person dealing with a qualified owner to show one of two things:—

1. Actual necessity, or
2. that he made a proper enquiry, which led him to believe there was necessity.

There is no proof of either in the present case, and the High Court were right, therefore, in setting aside the sales.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—These two consolidated appeals from a judgment and two decrees of the High Court of Calcutta, bearing date the 22nd July 1913, arise out of two suits brought by the plaintiff-respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga on the 8th July, 1907. The object of both suits was to recover possession of certain landed property alleged to have been improperly alienated during the plaintiff's minority by one Chatter Pandey, purporting to act as his guardian.

The facts on which the two actions are based are fully set forth in the judgment of the High Court. It is not necessary, therefore, to give more than a bare outline.

The plaintiff-respondent is admittedly the present Mahant of the Bairagi Asthal of Lowthwa, in the district of Darbhanga. His predecessor, Janki Das, died in 1894. Before his death he appears to have appointed the plaintiff (his nephew by blood relationship) his successor to the office of Mahant, and it is alleged, and not controverted, that his nomination was confirmed, in accordance with the custom governing the succession to the Mahantship, by the Mahants of the neighbouring asthals. It is not disputed that at the time of Janki Das's death the plaintiff was a minor and that in consequence thereof Janki Das had, by a testamentary document executed shortly before, appointed Chattar Pandey as his guardian. Chattar obtained probate of Janki's Will on the 6th February 1894; and from that time purported to act as the guardian of the minor and manager of the asthal property.

It is quite clear that for some years before his death Janki Das was heavily involved in debt. On the 29th January 1885 he had executed a mortgage in favour of one Tej Narain Roy in respect of six annas of the village of Majhowra for Rs. 5,500. On the 31st May 1889 he had created a mortgage in favour of one Ram Narayan Roy, in respect of four annas of Majhowra for a sum of Rs. 3,500; and a third also in favour of Ram Narayan for Rs. 2,605 on the 17th May 1892, in respect of another share of the same village. All three mortgages were outstanding at the time of his death, though on the first a sum of Rs. 9,000 is said to have been repaid, leaving a balance of something like Rs. 6,000. For the realisation of this amount, the defendants to the first action, who are representatives of Tej Narain Roy, the mortgagee under the first deed, brought a suit on the 20th February 1899, against the present plaintiff as the legal representative of Janki Das. The plaintiff (defendant to that action), being a minor at the time, was sued as such under the guardianship of Chattar Pandey. Before, however, any defence was entered, Chattar entered into a compromise with the mortgagees by which, in consideration of the remission by them of Rs. 600, he consented on behalf of the minor to a mortgage decree against the six-annas share of the village of Majhowra that had been mortgaged to Tej Narain Roy. The decree of the Subordinate Judge embodying the terms of the compromise bears date the 27th April 1899.

Three years later, on the 16th June 1902, Ram Narayan Roy brought a suit on the second mortgage for the realisation of this debt, which ended similarly in a decree based on a compromise entered into by Chattar Pandey. This decree bears date the 21st July 1902. Subsequently Ram Narayan Roy obtained a decree absolute for sale, and in fact initiated proceedings to have the mortgaged property sold under process of the Court.

It is stated that, although no proceedings had actually been taken to enforce the third mortgage, an action was threatened, and in consequence thereof an agreement was arrived at between the creditors and Chattar Pandey.

In order to pay off these liabilities Chattar Pandey, on the 19th July 1905, applied to the District Judge of Tirhoot for leave to sell an eight-anna share of the village of Majhowra to the two sets of purchasers whose sales are impugned in the present suits, one of whom was in fact the representative of the original mortgagee; and on the 12th August 1915 obtained the sanction prayed for. On the 19th of the same month Chattar executed in favour of the appellant Basudeo Roy and his brothers a deed of sale in respect of six annas; and in favour of the appellants in the second appeal a deed in respect of two annas of the village.

The plaintiff sues to have these sales set aside on the allegation that the property forming the subject-matter of the present actions was debutter, or endowed property, and that neither Janki Das nor Chattar Pandey had any right or power to encumber or alienate it. He further charges that there was no valid necessity for the alienation, nor were the debts of Janki Das binding on the property of the asthal. The defendants controverted both allegations, and the parties went to trial on two simple issues: firstly, whether the property was debutter, and consequently subject to rules governing religious or charitable endowments, and, secondly, whether there was any such justifying necessity as would render its alienation valid under the Hindu Law.

Both the Courts in India found that the property was acquired with the funds of the institution, and was debutter, but they have differed on the question of necessity. The Trial Judge was of opinion that the defendants—the purchasers under the two deeds of sale which the plaintiff seeks to set aside—had sufficiently established a legal necessity of a pressing kind “to justify the alienations made by him,” and he accordingly dismissed both suits. On appeal, the learned Judges of the High Court of Calcutta, on the issue of valid and justifying necessity, came to an opposite conclusion, and in that view decreed the plaintiff's claim.

Before this Board Counsel for the defendants assailed the findings of the High Court on both points. He contended that under the grant to which reference will be made presently the Mahant for the time being is absolutely entitled to the income of the property attached to the asthal, and that any property bought out of such income became the personal property of the Mahant. And he argued in the alternative that, even if the property were to be regarded as part of the asthal property, the facts proved in the case amply established pressing legal necessity as found by the Trial Judge.

Their Lordships have, therefore, to examine, in the first place, the character and scope of the original grant to the founder of Lowthwa Asthal. The nature of these institutions and the circumstances under which they come into existence are described in the judgment of this Board in Rim Parkash Das v. Anand Das (9). “An asthal, commonly known in Northern India as a math,” says Lord Shaw, who delivered the judgment of the Board—“is an institution of a monastic nature. It is established for the service of a particular cult, the instruction in its tenets, and the observance of its rites ... The Mahant is the head of the institution. He sits upon the gaddi; he initiates candidates into the mysteries of the cult; he superintends the worship of the idol and the accustomed spiritual rites: he manages the property of the institution; he administers its affairs: and the whole assets are vested in him as the owner thereof in trust for the institution itself.”

And Lord Shaw went on to add:—

“The nature of the ownership is, as has been said, an ownership ... for the math, or institution itself, and it must not be forgotten that, although large administrative powers are undoubtedly vested in the reigning Mahant, this trust does exist and... must be respected.”

The grant in the present case is set out in extenso in the judgment of the High Court. It is an ordinary birt, or charitable and religious grant, by a pious Hindu Raja to a Hindu gossain (Batra Das). The following words clearly show that, though the property was granted to an individual, it was burdened with an explicit and unambiguous trust:—

“Mouzah, with boundaries, you will, at ease of mind, make cultivation and settlement of, and making distribution out of the proceeds that may arise among sadhus and sants (holy and religious men), you with your disciples and companions will enjoy (the remainder) without any anxiety. Knowing this to be a grant made for the love of the deity named above, no one will offer any opposition.”

The subsequent confirmation of this grant in 1786 by one of the successors of the original grantor removes all doubts and ambiguity as to the meaning of the grant. By that time the present asthal had sprung up, and the guru or preceptor had become the head of an institution with a seat of honour (the gaddi). The asthal was henceforth an institution devoted to the cult of the worshippers who congregated there. Their Lordships concur with the learned Judges of the High Court and the Trial Judge that the village of Lowthwa attached to the asthal is endowed property subject to the trust set out in the grant, and that all acquisitions with the income thereof are subject to the same trust. This being their Lordships' view regarding the character of the village in suit, the next question is: Have the defendants discharged the onus which rests on them to establish justifying necessity? Chattar Pandey, whether acting as executor to the Will of Janki Das or as guardian of the minor Mahant, cannot be said to have possessed larger powers than the actual Mahant, and the validity of his transaction in relation to the asthal property must be judged by the same rules as apply to the acts of the de jure head of the institution. In the absence of a necessity which would make the debts contracted by him binding on the institution, the Mahant has no power to alienate its properties for the purpose of discharging those debts, and if the asthal was not liable for such debts, his successor would be clearly entitled to have the sales set aside. A fortiori, the same considerations apply to the dealings of Chatter Pandey.

Although the defendants throughout appear to have contended that Majhowra was the personal property of Janki Das, upon the facts proved there can be no doubt they must have known that it was part of the asthal property. It is contended that the mortgages, for the discharge of which the sales now impugned were effected, were executed by Janki Das for the satisfaction of some older debts. There is no evidence that the defendants made any enquiry as to the character of those debts, whether they were incurred for the benefit of the asthal, or for the benefit of Janki Das, in his capacity as Mahant. It is in evidence that Janki Das was a man who did not live up to the standard of the community to which he belonged, and of which he was the head. There is nothing to show that any portion of the monies borrowed in the first instance went for purposes which would make them binding on the asthal. On the whole, their Lordships concur with the reasons given by the learned Judges of the High Court in holding that the defendants in these suits have wholly failed to establish any justifying necessity for the sales by Chatter Pandey; and they are of opinion that these appeals should be dismissed with costs. They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, C. J.—These appeals which were heard together arise out of two suits in which the plaintiffs-respondents (1) Messrs. Walker and Whyte, Ltd., and (2) Mr. and Mrs. Bruce claimed damages from the defendant-respondent Mg. Kyaw Zin on account of a collision between Kyaw Zin's motor launch "Handy" and Walker and Whyte's "Triad" on the evening of the 7th January 1915 in the Kynoungto Creek. The Triad's bows were smashed and she sunk and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce who were crossing in the Triad to the Rangoon side had to swim for their lives. The collision was admittedly caused by the negligence of Haidayut Ali, the Serang of the Handy. His certificate was afterwards suspended and he was also prosecuted and punished under the Indian Penal Code. Kyaw Zin, the owner of the Handy, lives at Kya In, a village in the delta about 7 hours' journey from Pyapon. The launch was used by him to ply with goods and passengers in the delta. He sent it in July 1914 to

BRUCE, D. M. v. KYAW ZIN.

Messrs. G. Nichols and Co., Marine Contractors, Rangoon, to have a new engine put in. In November Nichols wrote that the new engine was ready and asked Kyaw Zin to send Rs. 4,000, the amount agreed upon. Kyaw Zin sent his young cousin Klai Po to Rangoon to pay the money and bring the launch to Pyapon. She was not brought back at once. She was hired out with a crew of a Serang and engine driver, first to the Arracan Co. for 18 days at Rs. 500 a month and subsequently to Messrs. Steel Bros., Ltd., at Rs. 15 a day. She had been only for 2½ days with Steel Bros. when the accident occurred. The plaintiffs' case in both suits is that Klai Po was Kyaw Zin's agent, that the crew were engaged by Klai Po, that the launch was hired out by Nichols as broker for Klai Po to Steel Bros. and that Kyaw Zin is responsible as owner of the launch and as Klai Po's principal for the results of the Serang's negligence. The defendant-respondent Kyaw Zin has not been consistent in his defence. In a letter, Exhibit 5, written by his legal adviser Mr. Broadbent two months after the accident, it is said that Klai Po without authority from Kyaw Zin hired out the launch to Nichols and that it was Nichols who engaged the crew and that he let out the launch on his own account to the Arracan Co. and afterwards to Steel Bros. In his written statement Kyaw Zin takes up a different position, viz., that Nichols having possession of the launch hired it out without any authority. The written statement does not refer to Klai Po at all. When examined at the hearing Kyaw Zin at first said that Klai Po came back to Kya In in December for a few days and left word that he had hired out the launch to Nichols, but when the evidence was read over to Kyaw Zin he altered this statement and said Klai Po left word merely that "Nichols had hired out the launch." Klai Po in his evidence said that Nichols asked him to hire the launch to him but that they did not agree about the rate of hiring. He denied that the Serang and engine driver were engaged by him and denied also that the launch was hired by his authority to Steel Bros.

The learned Judge found that it was Klai Po who engaged the crew and also that Klai Po hired out the launch to Steel Bros. through Nichols as broker. But the Judge held that Klai Po was employed by Kyaw Zin merely as a clerk and that he had no authority to hire out the launch and that in hiring it out he acted beyond the scope of his employment. The Judge added: "To hold otherwise means to hold that he had powers of management and was in fact the agent of defendant for which there was no justification." The plaintiffs' suits were, therefore, both dismissed.

It is urged for the defendant that this decision is right if it be assumed that the crew was engaged and the launch hired out by Klai Po, but we are asked to go further and hold on the evidence produced that Klai Po did not engage the crew and that if he did hire out the launch he hired it only to Nichols, who thereupon engaged the crew and sublet the launch on his own account. Klai Po is clearly not a truthful witness and Nichols has a strong motive for supporting the view that he himself acted merely as a broker. The documentary evidence is very much against the defendant. Nichols' salary book Exhibit R, which appears to be kept regularly, does not show that Haidayut Ali and Tha Maung the Serang and engine driver were employed by Nichols during the material period November 1914 to January 1915. If these men were engaged by Nichols for the period in December when the launch was hired out to the Arracan Co. and the period in January when she was hired out to Steels, their names, salary and acquittances would probably appear in this book in the ordinary course of business. It is true that Chinasawmy Pillay, who was at that time a clerk of Nichols, refers at the end of his evidence to another book, an "engagement book", as showing for what periods Nichols' men were employed. But in an earlier part of his evidence this witness says there is no other establishment book except Exhibit R and that this is the only book by which he could say who the employees were. This witness says that receipts for salary were sometimes taken on slips of paper and not in the book. He supports the defendant's case that it was Nichols who engaged the crew and says that so far as he knows, Nichols had no authority from Klai Po to hire out the launch. But Chinasawmy is unfriendly to

BRUCE, D. M. V. MG KYAW ZIN.

Nichols. He is now a rival in the stevedoring business. He admits that he left Nichols partly "because he could not put up with his ways and manners" and that he afterwards wrote to a Liverpool firm with which Nichols had business a letter, Exhibit Q, in which he tried to injure Nichols and get the English firm's business in Rangoon away from Nichols. It seems to me, Exhibit R must be regarded as strong negative evidence against the defendant. Tha Maung (P. W. No. 8) himself said that he was engaged by the clerk Klai Po and worked for him as engine driver on the Handy for over two months and was paid by him altogether Rs. 75 or Rs. 80. But Tha Maung's evidence must be accepted with considerable reserve as he is a nephew of Mrs. Nichols. Klai Po admits that he paid Tha Maung Rs. 30 but says he took him on only after the collision. He admits, however, giving Tha Maung a certificate Exhibit B on 1st February, in which he says that Tha Maung worked for him for three months. Then we have Exhibit 5 in which there is a clear admission that Klai Po paid off the crew, though it is said that Nichols induced him to do so "taking full advantage of his simplicity and ignorance of business." Kyaw Zin gives Klai Po's age as 20; but Klai Po himself owns to nearly 24, and he has a fair knowledge of English as he passed the 8th standard. After the collision he signed the receipts Exhibits D and E for the hire of the launch by the Arracan Co. and Steels and in each of these receipts the transaction appears as a hiring out by Nichols as broker on behalf of Maung Kyaw Zin. These are both signed "E. T. Klai Po, for Mg. Kyaw Zin." We are asked to believe that this is only another instance of Nichols' superior cunning and Kali Po's ignorance and simplicity, but it is hardly likely that Klai Po signed the receipts without reading them and without noticing that Nichols figured in them merely as a broker. On the evidence there can be no reasonable doubt that it was Klai Po who engaged the crew and that Nichols was authorized by him to hire out the launch to the Arracan Co. and to Steels.

It remains to consider whether the Judge was right in absolving the defendant on the ground that Klai Po acted beyond the scope of his employment in hiring out the launch through Nichols. The owner of a vessel is not liable qua owner for damage caused by the negligence of the crew. He is liable only as employer of the wrong-doer. The wrong-doer in this case, i. e., Serang was employed by Klai Po. The Judge considered that there was no justification for holding that Klai Po was an agent of the defendant. In this Court Mr. Vakharra for the defendant does not go so far as this. He only urges that Klai Po in his capacity of clerk was an agent with strictly limited authority. I think it is for the owner to show clearly the character of Klai Po's agency and to prove that Klai Po exceeded his authority by hiring out the launch at Rangoon. The burden of proof on this point lay on the defendant according to the principle of section 106, Evidence Act, for the character of Klai Po's authority was a matter specially within the principal's knowledge. We cannot rely on the evidence of either Kyaw or Klai Po. They have contradicted themselves and one another and their evidence conflicts in material particulars with the statements made on Kyaw Zin's instructions in Exhibit 5. It is clear on Exhibit 5 that Klai Po was sent to Rangoon to take delivery of the launch and bring her to Pyapon, and Klai Po admits that he did bring her to Pyapon after the collision, having hired a Serang under Kyaw Zin's express instructions. Kyaw Zin has a brother Kya Zin also called Mg. Di, and Klai lives with the two brothers who are related to him as second cousins once removed, but he calls them both his "uncles". Kya Zin as well as Kyaw Zin had a launch. It was called the Admire. Klai Po admittedly looked after it. It was Klai Po who started negotiations with Nichols for the purchase of the Admire. He went to Pegu with Nichols and saw the launch there and liking the look of her took her to Kya Zin, who then bought her. After the collision Klai Po had the Handy repaired at Rangoon, meeting the costs of the repairs out of the money received from the Arracan Co. and Steels. During this time he also applied to the Port Commissioners on behalf of his principal Kyaw Zin for license to ply the launch for hire. The engine-driver Tha Maung says that before returning to Pyapon after the collision the launch was again hired by a broker and taken to a village beyond Kyauntan and that Klai Po directed him, Tha Maung, to go there with the launch, but Klai Po denies this hiring also. After returning to Pyapon the launch was plied for about 6 months in the delta and Klai Po was on the launch during the greater part of this time. According to Kyaw Zin he was on her for about 5 months out of the 6. Kyaw Zin says that Klai Po was on the launch to look after the money and that he was only acting as a clerk. Klai Po himself says that he did not act as a clerk and he does not say in what capacity he was on the launch, except that he washed the launch when it was dirty. He got no pay. It is a legitimate inference that at this time at any rate, i. e., after the collision, he was looking after the Handy for Kyaw Zin as he had previously looked after the Admire for Kya Zin. He was evidently regarded by the Police as the person in charge of the launch, for he was arrested and kept in custody for a week or more when the Handy collided with a Sampan in the delta. As a matter of fact it seems likely that Kya Zin and Kyaw Zin were in partnership in the launch business, though Klai Po says that they were only planning to work together. Klai Po wrote and signed several letters about the launches for both the brothers. Several letters are produced written by Klai Po and signed by him for Kyaw Zin. Exhibits L, M, N, O are signed "Kyaw Zin Bros." while one letter, Exhibit P, is signed "Mg. Kyaw Zin Sagun" Mg. Sagun being the father of the two brothers.

Kyaw Zin and Klai Po would have us believe that Klai Po's principal object in going to Rangoon was to get employment for himself and that Kyaw Zin seized the opportunity of his going to Rangoon to send the Rs. 400 to Nichols. It is clear, however, that Klai Po remained at Rangoon only as long as the launch was plying there and then returned with her to his village after carrying out the repairs rendered necessary by the collision and obtaining a plying license from the Port Commissioners. The admissions of the defendant and Klai Po and the circumstances are, in my opinion, entirely inconsistent with the view taken by the learned Judge as to the nature of Klai Po's employment. The facts appear to me to show that Klai Po, being the best educated member of the family, was entrusted with a wide degree of control at Rangoon in the absence of Kyaw Zin. The very fact that he was paid no salary is significant. Kyaw Zin deputed him to bring the launch from Rangoon, which would necessarily involve hiring a crew. When Nichols proposed that the launch should be hired out in Rangoon, it seems probable that Klai Po readily agreed to the proposal. The launch had admittedly been plying at a loss in Pyapon--vide Kyaw Zin's evidence—and the opportunity of lucrative employment at Rangoon would no doubt be acceptable to Kyaw Zin. Klai Po admits that he did not communicate Nichols' proposal to Kyaw Zin at all. He probably thought that there could be no doubt as to his principal's approval. When he went back to Kya In for a few days in December, he left word for Kyaw Zin who was absent that the launch was being hired out at Rangoon. Kyaw Zin says that after receiving this message he wrote to Klai Po to tell Nichols to send the launch back to Pyapon at once. But he admits that he did not write until two weeks after Klai Po's return to Rangoon and a week after his own return to Kya In. Klai Po, on the other hand, denies that he received any letter from Kyaw Zin, but says he did receive a verbal message from him on the day of the collision to the effect that the launch should be sent back. It is clear at any rate that Kyaw Zin expressed no disapproval of the hiring out at Rangoon. When the plaintiffs demanded compensation through their lawyers, Kyaw Zin visited Mr. Bruce and asked him to let him off. So far from disclaiming responsibility for the accident he offered to give up his own launch the Handy and his brother's launch "Admire" by way of compensation. The inclusion of the Admire in this offer lends colour to the suggestion that the two brothers were really in partnership, though it may have been that Kyaw Zin only counted on obtaining the consent of Kya Zin to sacrifice the Admire.

BRUCE, D. M. V. KYAW ZIN.

I would hold that the defendant failed entirely to prove that Klai Po was a mere clerk with no powers of management and that on the contrary the evidence is sufficient to show that Klai Po had considerable powers of control at Rangoon. He was sent there to bring the launch to Pyapon. He had to get a license from the Port Trust, to hire a crew, and to buy petrol for the launch. While at Rangoon he saw that it would be to his employer's benefit to hire out the launch there and that he did so apparently without consulting the owner or thinking it necessary to do so. But he was acting for the owner's benefit and he evidently considered it so much a matter of course that he did not inform Kyaw Zin of what he was doing until he went back to the village some weeks later, and even then he only left a casual message that the launch had been hired out at Rangoon. It is unlikely that Klai Po would have acted in this manner if his authority from Kyaw Zin was not wide enough to let out the launch at all. Kyaw Zin's inaction on hearing of the letting out, his apparent acquiescence in what Klai Po had done, suggests that Klai Po had in fact the necessary authority. The relations between Klai Po and his two uncles and the admissions of Klai Po as to his connection with the Admire and the Handy strongly support this inference. It is instructive to remember that an interval of about three weeks elapsed between the time that Klai Po went to Rangoon for the launch and the time in December when he returned to the village for a few days. If he had no authority from Kyaw Zin except to go and fetch the launch, Kyaw Zin would probably have written or sent a message enquiring the reason of delay in bringing the launch to Pyapon. His inaction leads to the inference that he had constituted Klai Po his representative and agent for the purpose of dealing with the launch and that it was left to Klai Po either to bring the launch back at once or to deal otherwise with it as might seem profitable. The case falls within the general rule laid down by Lord Justice Willes in Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (1): "The genera rule is, that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved. That principle is acted upon every day in running down cases. It has been applied also to direct trespass to goods, as in the case of holding the owners of ships liable for the act of masters abroad improperly selling the cargo. It has been held applicable to actions of false imprisonment, in cases where officers of Railway Companies, intrusted with the execution of bye-laws relating to imprisonment, and intending to act in the course of their duty, improperly imprisoned persons who are supposed to come within the terms of the bye-laws. It has been acted upon where persons employed by the owners of boats to navigate them and to take fares have committed an infringement of a ferry, or such like wrong. In all these cases it may be said, as it was said here, that the master has not authorised the act. It is true, he has not authorised the particular act, but he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he must be answerable for the manner in which the agent has conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of his master to place him in."

I would set aside the decrees of the Original Side in both cases and would record a finding in favour of the plaintiffs on the 1st issue and remand the suits for further enquiry as to the amount of damages in each case and for final disposal. The costs of the appellants in this Court should be borne in both cases by the defendant.

Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation (VIII of 1819), s. 14, proceedings under—Money paid to stop sale, whether recoverable—Collector, powers of—Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876), applicability of, to immoveable property outside Chota Nagpur.

In proceedings under section 14 of the Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation, 1819, the Collector acts not in a judicial but in a ministerial capacity. Those who pay money under such proceedings are not in the same position as persons who pay a claim brought against them in an ordinary suit which they have a full opportunity of resisting and who, not having availed themselves of such opportunity then, are debarred from doing so hereafter. Whether or not he contests the claim, a talukdar to stop a sale under section 14 has to deposit the full amount claimed and such deposit does not preclude him from thereafter raising the question of title in an ordinary suit. The Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876, has no application to immoveable property outside the limits of Chota Nagpur. [p. 830, col. 2.]

Bhicha Ram v. Bishambar Nath, 17 Ind. Cas 957; 16 C. L. J. 527; 17 C. W. N. 754, approved.

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated July 23, 1914, and reported in 27 Ind. Cas. 526, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently set out in their Lordships' judgment.

Respondents sued to recover sums paid by them to appellant in proceedings taken by the latter under the Patni Taluks Regulation to realise arrears of Patni rent; they alleged that no such arrears were due. Appellant contended that the mortgage bond executed by his predecessor, under which the Patni rents were set off against the interest due to the plaintiffs under the mortgage, had been paid off by the manager appointed under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876, and also that plaintiffs could not recover the sums paid, as even if not legally due, those sums were paid voluntarily, or if not voluntarily, under stress of legal proceedings in which the plaintiff had not chosen to defend himself. The Subordinate Judge overruled these contentions and decreed the suit and his decree was affirmed by the High Court. Defendant appealed.

Messrs. Upjohn, K.C., De Greyther, K.C., and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellant, submitted that this was a case for money had and received, and that money having been paid under stress of legal proceedings, plaintiffs could not recover. The Raja issued notice under section 8 of the Regulation: respondents had it in their power to take summary proceedings under section 14, and in such proceedings the validity of the Raja's claim would have been decided. They failed to raise in any such proceedings the question whether the mortgage was discharged, and they cannot raise it now.

Marriott v. Hampton (1), Moore v. Fulham Vestry (2).

[The Board referred to Cooper v. Phibbs (3) and Beauchamp (Earl) v. Winn (4) and observed that the question was whether the respondents knew their rights when they paid. It seemed they did not discover their rights till afterwards. Could they not then sue?]]

We submit, not. There is no evidence of any mistake at all; if they made any mistake, it was as to the construction of a General Act (the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act) and that is a mistake of law, not of fact; it is a mistake as to lex, not as to jus privatum.

The lands concerned are outside Chota Nagpur, but the application of Act VI of 1876 is not limited to lands in Chota Nagpur. Section 2 vests in the manager appointed under the Act all the immoveables of the landholder wherever situate and all immoveables which may be acquired by or devolve on him or his heirs. The acquisition or devolution of the property is not confined to property situated in Chota Nagpur. Under section 3 the bar as to process in respect of debts and liabilities extends to all Courts in British India. Debts must include secured debts: there is nothing in the context to limit the generality of the provision. The disability as to contract is extended to the landholder's heirs. Appellant's contention is borne out by a review of the whole Act, and a consideration of the purpose which the Act was intended to effect. If unsecured creditors are barred all over British India, why should secured creditors outside Chota Nagpur escape? We admit the contrary view has been taken in Bhicha Ram v. Bishambar Nath (7), but that case was wrongly decided.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C., and Ramsay, for the Respondents, were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court, Fort William in Bengal, affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan. The respondents as plaintiffs brought a suit to recover Rs. 6,848-8-0, being the amount of Patni rents for the years 1902—1910 paid by them, as they alleged, although not due, in order to save their lands from sale under the powers conferred on Zemindars by section 14 of Regulation VIII of 1819.

The appellant, on whose behalf as having rights conferred on a Zemindar, it had been proposed to put the power of sale in force, contended, in the first place, that the money could not now be recovered, on the ground that even if not legally due it was paid voluntarily, or, if otherwise than voluntarily, as the result of proceedings in which the respondents had not chosen to defend themselves, and which consequently could not be reviewed. In the second place, he contended that the amount paid was due under the provisions of "The Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act" (VI of 1876).

The facts do not appear to be obscure, and if the appellant's contentions are right on either of the points stated he may be entitled to succeed. As, however, their Lordships are of opinion that the argument addressed to them from the Bar fails on both points, they have not found it necessary to call on the respondents to support the judgments in the Courts below, either on the two questions referred to, or on certain minor points which their Lordships did not consider to be tenable.

The appellant is Raja of Pachete, in Chota Nagpur. He succeeded to the title and estates on the death of his grandfather, the late Maharajah Nilmoni Singh Deo. The late Maharajah, in 1887, borrowed from one Mahesh Chandra Chatterji, a resident of Madanapur, in Burdwan, Rs. 22,435, giving the latter security in the form of a usufructuary mortgage of lands constituting four lots, three in the district of Bankura, and one in the district of Burdwan. Of these four lots the Maharajah had previously granted Patni leases to Mahesh Chandra Chatterji. The respondents are the successors-in-title of the latter in respect both of the leases and of the mortgage security. All of the four lots, the subjects of the leases and the mortgages, lie outside the boundaries of Chota Nagpur.

The mortgage was effected by a Sudbandhaki mortgage bond under which it was stipulated that interest at the rate of 14 annas per 100 rupees, equivalent to 10½ per cent. per annum, should be payable and that this interest, which was substantially equivalent to the amount of the annual rents payable under the Patni leases, should be set off as against the interest until re-payment of the principal sum due under the mortgage.

In 1835 the affairs of the late Maharajah having become embarrassed, the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Act were applied to his case. The language and scope of this Act their Lordships will refer to later. For the present it is sufficient to state that the management of the Maharajah's estate was vested in a manager appointed under section 2 of the Act and that a vesting order appears to have been published in the "Calcutta Gazette," in terms wide enough to apply, if the Act enabled it to do so, to all his immoveable property both within and outside the boundaries of Chota Nagpur. In response to a notice issued by the manager, the respondents, among other creditors, put in a claim. They submitted their mortgage bond with a petition praying for a settlement. The manager dealt with the claim under section 8 of the Act, and purported to settle the amount of principal due, and, what was in the circumstances still more important, to reduce the future interest to 6 per cent. per annum. He also determined that in every half year the difference between the interest as thus reduced and the amount of the Patni rents should be applied in satisfaction of the principal. The Commissioner, on whom jurisdiction to do so was claimed to have been entrusted by the Act, sanctioned the arrangement.

In 1907 the debts due by the estate were considered to have been provided for, and the possession and management were made over to the appellant, who had succeeded to the title. Thereafter he collected from the respondents the amounts of surplus Patni rents in question in the suit, on each occasion applying to the Collector of the district where the lots were situated for authority to put in force the summary provisions for sale for recovery of Patni rents enacted by the Regulations of 1819 hereinafter referred to. The respondents, on receiving the successive notices to this effect authorised by the Collector, paid the amounts for the recovery of which they have brought the present suit. They appear to have made no formal protest, but the learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case has found that the circumstances were such that they cannot be taken to have made the payments gratuitously, a conclusion of act from which the High Court did not dissent on appeal, and from which their Lordships do not dissent.

It is important to see what were the terms of section 14 of the Regulation of 1819, under which these payments were insisted on. Section 8 had enacted that Zemindars in the position of the present appellant should be entitled in certain cases to apply for sales of Patni tenures for arrears of rent. Section 14 defines in its first branch the procedure in case the Talukdar objects. He may stop the sale by lodging the amount demanded. He may also bring a suit and obtain a reversal of the sale and damages. By its second branch the section provides that if the Talukdar desires to contest the Zemindar's demand he may apply for a summary investigation. If this takes place and an award results in time the effect of the award is to prevail. But if the proceedings be still pending the sale is nonetheless to take place unless the amount claimed be deposited, and if such deposit is not made the Talukdar is to have no remedy excepting by a regular action for damages and reversal of the sale. Under an amendment of the Regulation passed in 1832 the conduct of the proceedings in regard to such sales is given to the Collector, Deputy Collector or Head Assistant.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the procedure provided for by section 14 is such as not to put those submitting to pay money under it in the position in which they would have found themselves had they paid a claim brought against them in an ordinary suit in which they could have set up a full defence but had failed to do so. In such a case those who pay lose their right to resist, however good, because, having had the full opportunity of doing so which the law allows them once for all, they have not availed themselves of the opportunity so given. But section 14 expressly recognises the right to bring a separate suit in an ordinary Court, the proceedings before the Collector notwithstanding. If the purchaser at the sale impeached is made a party, the sale may even be set aside. All the Talukdar gets by demanding a summary investigation before the Collector is an award the application for which will not stop the sale. The only step by which the sale can be stopped is by a deposit of the full amount claimed, and when this is done the question of title remains capable of being raised in an ordinary suit. Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the rule which prevents a person from recovering back money which he has paid on a claim in legal proceedings to which he might have set up a defence but has failed to do so, has no application here. This conclusion is, under the circumstances already referred to, fatal to the first branch of the case presented by the appellant. On the argument addressed to them on this part of the case they have only to add the observation that the proceedings before the Collector are of an administrative rather than a properly judicial character. The Zemindar who has a power of compelling a sale is to exercise this power through the instrumentality of the Collector himself, who acts, not magisterially, but ministerially, and who has, in the true view of his functions, no capacity to give effect to any enquiry he may make into title comparable to the capacity possessed by an ordinary judicial tribunal.

Their Lordships now turn to the second argument by which the learned Counsel for the appellant supported the case made. This argument turned on the question whether the powers conferred by the Chota Nagpur Act extend to land outside the limits of Chota Nagpur. The language of the Act is obscure and their Lordships have found it necessary to look at the whole of its provisions somewhat closely in order to arrive at a conclusion on the point. The preamble is material, for it defines the purpose of the measure as the provision of "relief of holders of land in Chota Nagpur who may be in debt, and whose immoveable property may be subject to mortgages, charges, and liens." Prima facie the immoveable property would, therefore, mean such property in Chota Nagpur and this is borne out by the title of the Act, which is: "The Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act." Section 2 enacts that where "any holder of immoveable property" (which plainly means here immoveable property in Chota Nagpur, and there only) applies to the Commissioner stating that the holder of the "said property" is subject to, or that "his said property" is subject to, debts or liabilities, the Commissioner may, with the consent of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, by Order published in the "Calcutta Gazette," appoint an officer called a manager, and vest in him the management of the whole or any portion of the immoveable property of the holder. The application must state the particulars of the debts or liabilities to which the holder is subject, or with which his immoveable property is charged, and also the particulars of the immoveable property to which he is entitled. Section 3 provides that on the publication of the Order "all proceedings which may then be pending in any Civil Court in British India in respect to such debts or liabilities shall be barred and all processes, executions and attachments for or in respect of such debts and liabilities shall become null and void." Among other things, the section further provides that the holder and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease, or alienate their immoveable property, or to grant receipts for rents or profits, and shall be incompetent to enter into any contract which may involve them in pecuniary liability. Section 4 confers on the manager during his management "of the said immoveable property" large powers of management and of settling debts. Section 5 provides that, on the publication of the Order vesting the management in him, the manager is to publish a notice in English, Urdu, and Hindi (not, their Lordships observe, in the remaining languages vernacular in other parts of India), calling for the presentation of claims, and all claims not duly presented are to be barred. Section 8 enables the manager to determine the amounts of principal justly due to the creditors of the holders of the property and to the mortgagees on it. By section 9 the manager may enquire into the consideration given for leases and, if it appears insufficient, cancel them. Section 10 gives an appeal against proceedings of the Collector to the "Deputy Commissioner within whose jurisdiction the property is situate," if not himself the manager. Sections 17 and 18 confer on the manager power to lease and to mortgage and sell (in the latter cases with the assent of the Commissioner). Section 19 enables the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal (within which Chota Nagpur is situate) to make rules for the administration of the Act. Section 23 saves the jurisdiction of the Courts in Chota Nagpur in certain kinds of suits relating to immoveable property brought under the operation of the Act.

Their Lordships have not had before them the Order published in the "Calcutta Gazette," by which the Commissioner appointed the manager in the present case, and vested in him the management of some or all of the immoveable property of the late Maharajah; but, however wide the terms of this Order may have been, the scope of its operation depended on the scope of the Act itself. After considering the Act as a whole, their Lordships have arrived at the conclusion that the primary intention to be collected from its language is that of providing, by a measure of local application, for the relief of the burdens affecting the land within Chota Nagpur owned by a class of landholders there. The governing purpose related to a particular locality. It is not a Statute analogous to a Bankruptcy Act, the controlling purpose of which is provision for creditors in a liquidation. To this end section 16 confers the jurisdiction requisite to enable the manager to recover immoveable property in the possession of a mortgagee or vendee in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner within whose jurisdiction the property is situate. But in Regulation Districts, where there is no Deputy Commissioner, these words would be inapt, and the inference is that they were intended to apply only to immoveable property in Chota Nagpur, where a Deputy Commissioner has jurisdiction. This conclusion is borne out by section 23, which saves, as already observed, the jurisdiction of the Courts of Chota Nagpur over certain questions and not the corresponding jurisdictions of Courts outside it.

Their Lordships agree with the views of the scope of the Act expressed by the learned Judges who decided the case of Bhicha Ram v. Bishambhar Nath (7). They think that the Act has no application to immoveable property outside Chota Nagpur. The main purpose is, as they have already observed, the protection of Zemindars within that district: and any provisions which affect rights to enforce in jurisdictions outside it personal debts or liabilities are merely ancillary to the main purpose of the Act, which is directed to improving the position of persons owning land within it. If this be so, no claims in rem of land outside it ought to be construed as affected by the merely general and ambiguous expressions which the Act contains.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Marriage of minor girl.—Consent of father, whether necessary.

There cannot be a valid marriage of a minor Burmese Buddhist girl without her father's express consent.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Hanthawaddy, in Civil Regular No. 56 of 1915.

Mr. Broadbent, for the Appellant.

Mr. Connel (with him Mr. Maung Thin), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff and defendant are Burmese Buddhists. The plaintiff is a young man of 23 years of age and sues for restitution of conjugal rights. The defendant Ma Tin is 16 or 17 years of age and is admittedly a minor. She eloped with the plaintiff and lived with him for four days in Mg. Gyi's house in the same village in which she lived with her father. Luggy intervened on behalf of the plaintiff to persuade the defendant's father to allow them to marry. When the Luggy first intervened, they were under the impression that the father would consent to a marriage. On the fourth day the Luggy and the young couple returned to the defendant's father's house and there was an interview which lasted some hours. The father asked his daughter if she had gone willingly with the plaintiff and she said that she had done so because she loved him. The father told the two young people to go up into the house and the Luggy also went into the house. Shortly afterwards the girl said she did not want to remain in her father's house because she thought her father wished to separate her from the plaintiff. Some of the witnesses say that the father said: "as you love him, I will not interfere," but others who were present do not give evidence to this effect. The Luggy were present in order to be witnesses of a consent to the marriage, but no express consent was given. We are asked to find that there was an implied consent in view of the fact that the father told the plaintiff and defendant to go into the house, and in view of the evidence of certain witnesses that the father said he would not interfere, but as against that there was the conduct of the girl and the fact that the plaintiff did not stay in the house that night; there is the further fact that when he came next morning he was refused admission and that he has not been allowed to see the girl since. The only question in this appeal is:—Did the father give his consent? The facts are fully dealt with by the learned Judge and we agree with him in the view he has taken, namely, that no real consent was given.

Mr. Connel, for the respondent, contends that even if the father did give his consent, that would not convert the elopement into a marriage with retrospective effect, but that further co-habitation would be necessary after such consent in order to constitute a marriage and he quotes the Upper Burma case of King-Emperor v. Nga Ni Ta (1). But it is unnecessary to go into that question in this appeal, because we find that the father did not in fact give his consent to a marriage between the parties, and Mr. Broadbent for the appellant admits that without such consent there could be no valid marriage and that the plaintiff's suit would have to be dismissed. The appeal, therefore, is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where an Appellate Court considers that certain evidence refused to be recorded by the lower Court ought to have been recorded, it has no power to remand the suit for re-hearing ab initio under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, but can direct any additional evidence to be recorded, under Order XLI, rule 27.

Chaudhri Ram Bharose Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. A. Khan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the learned Subordinate Judge has remanded the suit for re-hearing ab initio under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23. Those provisions have no application. This was not a case in which the Court from whose decree the appeal has been preferred has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point and the decree has been reversed in appeal. The Court from whose decree the appeal has been preferred has refused to record certain evidence which the learned Subordinate Judge considered ought to have been recorded. The learned Subordinate Judge could have directed any additional evidence to have been recorded under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 27.

I, therefore, allow this appeal. I set aside the order remanding the case under Order XLI, rule 23, and direct that the learned Subordinate Judge take the appeal on his file again and proceed to decide it. He will be at liberty to utilize the provisions of Order XLI, rule 27, in any manner which may appear good to him. As the difficulty has arisen not through the action of the parties but through the action of the Court, I direct that the costs of the present appeal abide the result.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 186—Obstructing public servant in discharge of public function—Written order, whether must be shown to accused.

In order to constitute an offence under section 186 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary to prove that the written order under which the public servant was acting was actually shown to the accused. It is enough if it is found that the public servant had the order with him and could show it to anybody who wanted to see the same or question his authority.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Gonda, dated the 9th January 1917, modifying that of the Deputy Magistrate, 2nd Class, Gonda, dated the 22nd November 1916.

Mr. F. G. D. Lincoln, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In a suit brought by Tribhawan against Raghu for damages for malicious prosecution, Raghu was awarded Rs. 25-9-0 about his costs. Raghu applied for the execution of his decree for costs, and got two bullocks, belonging either to Tribhawan or his father or to both, attached. When the process-servers were preparing the list of attachment, Tribhawan and the other accused appeared, and assaulted the decree-holder who was holding the ropes of the bullocks and took the bullocks away. They have accordingly been convicted of offences under sections 183 and 186 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to different terms of imprisonment.

On behalf of the accused it is urged that they have been improperly convicted, as no warrant of attachment was shown to them and that the convictions under both sections were in any case illegal. Both the peons, however, say that they had gone with the warrant of attachment, and the cattle were rescued after they were attached. There is nothing to show that they were asked to show the warrant or that they refused to show them. It was sufficient that they had the warrant which they could show to anybody who wanted to see the same or question their authority.

As the attachment had already taken place, and the cattle were rescued before the process-servers could make any arrangements for their custody, the accused were rightly convicted under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code for obstructing public servants in the discharge of their duty. Section 183 of the Indian Penal Code only applies when the seizure of the cattle is obstructed. No force was used to the public servants and even the decree-holder hardly received anything more than a knocking. Tribhawan is a well-to-do Zemindar and the amount of the decree was small. The rescue was probably due to some misunderstanding and a sentence of fine would have been sufficient. The applicants have, however, undergone a good portion of the sentence.

The conviction under section 183 of the Indian Penal Code is set aside and that under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code is maintained. The sentence under the latter section will be reduced to the period of imprisonment they have already undergone.

Mr. G. R. Doo, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Non-Applicant Accused.

ORDER.—The only point involved in this application for revision is whether a certain statement made by a party in a civil proceeding was privileged or not under the law applicable to the law of defamation. The non-applicants Babu and Sonya were prosecuted in the Court of the First Class Bench Magistrates, Nagpur, in respect of part of a written statement given in by them in a rent suit in which they were defendants. The statement being to the effect that Babu and applicant had had criminal intimacy and that later the applicant had had a paramour one Baburao. The Honorary Magistrate held that the statement had been made without any malicious intent and discharged the non-applicants. An application on revision to the Sessions Judge was similarly unsuccessful, the learned Judge after a brief review of the conflicting case-law on the matter of the extent of the privilege accorded to witnesses and parties in respect of their statements in civil proceedings holding that it was not a case where he should interfere.

I find it unnecessary, however, in the present case to decide the point as to whether on this subject the view of the Madras High Court which accords absolute privilege to such statements or the more modified view of other High Courts should be followed, for it seems to me that the alleged defamatory pleading was clearly relevant to the rent suit in question, as was held by the District Judge in his judgment dated 11th April 1917. I fully concur in this connection with the decision of Sale and Stanley, JJ., in Woolfun Bibi v. Jesarat Sheikh (1); it must be remembered that the Calcutta High Court has declined to follow the English rule of absolute privilege in this connection but even so in the case quoted, which is absolutely analogous to the present one, the decision was as stated. To take the opposite view would obviously lead to most untoward results in the administration of justice and in the present case the alleged defamatory statement was clearly covered by the ninth exception to section 499, Indian Penal Code. The statement was clearly made in good faith for the protection of the interests of the defendants in the suit and as such under any view of the law taken by the High Courts in this country was privileged. Express malice would have to be proved for applicant to succeed and this has not been done. The application is accordingly dismissed.

held by the Subordinate Judge, who tried the case, to be a "childish forgery" by his judgment dated the 8th of September 1914. On appeal by the petitioner the District Judge agreed with the view taken by the Subordinate Judge as to the forgery of the entry in question in the Bahi. The judgment of the Appellate Court was passed on the 22nd of December 1915. There was a second appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court, but the said appeal was summarily dismissed. The exact date of the dismissal of the appeal is not known, but the appeal must have been filed within three months from the date of the decree of the first Appellate Court, that is, before the 22nd of March 1915.

The present application for sanction to prosecute the petitioner was filed by the opposite party, who was a defendant in the original suit on the 22nd June 1916. The application was disposed of by the Subordinate Judge on the 16th June 1917. The Subordinate Judge granted the sanction, whereupon the petitioner moved the District Judge under clause 6 of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The appeal before the District Judge was disposed of on the 7th November 1917. It may be mentioned here that after the dismissal of the appeal in the civil suit by the District Judge and apparently after the application for sanction was made before the Subordinate Judge, an application on behalf of one Rash Behari Lal was made to the District Judge for the return of the document. This application is not dated but the seal of the Court bears the date 1st July. The document was taken back from the Judge's record room, but when and by what order of the Court is not at all clear from the papers on the record. In the list of exhibits there is a note against the Bahi in question as having been received under a signature which purports to be that of a Rash Behari Lal. It is not at all shown who this Rash Bihari Lal is, on whose behalf the application for return of the Bahi was made and who eventually succeeded in taking back the document during the pendency of the application for sanction. Rash Bihari does not appear to be one of the parties concerned in the case. The receipt given on the document is also not dated.

The order of the Court of the 16th June 1917 calling upon the opposite party to produce the document does not appear to have been complied with, nor was there any insistence by the opposite party to have the document produced in Court. Nor did the Court itself consider it desirable or necessary to have the document produced before it. The result was that the document was not produced and sanction was granted merely upon the finding of the predecessor of the Subordinate Judge, recorded in the judgment of the original suit. Likewise the District Judge also did not take any steps to have the document produced and based his conclusions on the finding of his predecessor-in-office, who had heard the appeal in the original case.

In a case of entries in the Bahi held by one Court to be a "childish forgery" and by the other Court to be "clumsy," I think it was important for the Court below, as it would be for the trying Court, if the sanction is not revoked, to inspect the document and to determine by inspection of the entries as to whether they were tampered with or forged. It is conceded that the sanction granted will become infructuous and the prosecution cannot at all proceed without the production of the document in the trying Court. There is to my mind absolutely no chance of getting the document at all. The document has been taken away by some one whose identity before me has not been disclosed. If that person is under the influence of the petitioner, it is certain that the document will not be produced at all whatever may be the result of the disobedience of the order of the Court. The petitioner himself has refused to produce it when called upon to do so by the Subordinate Judge and is not likely to obey the order of the trying Court when called upon to do so.

The petitioner showed cause by a petition, which also is not dated but from the seal of the Court it appears to be 21st December 1916. I cannot refrain from remarking that it appears to be the practice of the Purnea Court not to insist upon accepting petitions and documents and papers etc., in Courts duly signed and dated by the parties filing them. Of course this does not affect the merits of the case but has an important bearing as regards the conduct of the cases in the District of Purnea. The petition does not disclose where the document is and who took it away from the Court.

There is, therefore, as I have said before, not the faintest chance of having the document before the Court. The prosecution, therefore, cannot at all proceed.

It is strange that such an important document, in respect of which the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge had given their decisive opinion that it was a forgery, should have been allowed to be taken back from the record room. This again discloses the state of affairs that prevails in the Purnea Court. The sanction should, therefore, be withheld on that ground alone.

Apart from this there is another important ground which by itself was sufficient to refuse the sanction. The application in this case was made about 21 months after the order of the Subordinate Judge and six months after the order of the District Judge in appeal. It is contended that the opposite party awaited the result of the appeal in the High Court, if any. References have been made to certain cases to show that it is desirable to await the result of the appeal and that an application made after the disposal of the appeal should not be considered to have been unduly delayed. But in all those cases, if I remember rightly the application was made soon after the disposal of the case, but the order of the Court, was suspended till after the disposal of the appeal.

There may be some cases where the application might also be allowed to be made after the disposal of the appeal, but it has to be judged from the circumstances of each case whether the delay was undue or was unreasonable. In the present case the delay after the disposal of the appeal by the District Judge is unexplained. The decree was passed on the 23rd December 1915 and there was no reason why the opposite party should have waited three months from the date of the decree of the District Judge. The delay is, therefore, in this particular case unexplained and is inordinate, considering that the delay has enabled the document to be taken away from Court. I do not see any reason also why there was delay in the disposal of the application by the Subordinate Judge. It took one year to dispose of a miscellaneous appeal in which no evidence was taken and in which the judgment itself was a short one. The appeal was disposed on the 16th June 1917. The opposite party may not be responsible for this delay, but still whoever may be responsible, there has been a delay in the disposal of a charge pending against the petitioner and hanging over his head.

It is now about 4 years from the time that this document was filed in Court and the case disposed of by the Subordinate Judge. It is not, therefore, desirable on this ground also to allow the sanction to be used by the opposite party in order to harass the petitioner.

The third ground is equally important and is in favour of the petitioner. The Court that decided that the entry in the Bahi was a forgery did not at all consider the evidence to be of such a character as to justify his prosecution under section 467 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There were two documents filed in support of the claim of the plaintiff, the mortgage bond which was the basis of the suit, and the Bahi, to prove that consideration money was paid to the executant of the bond. The first Court held that the bond was genuine and was admitted by the Musamm before the Registrar, but that the Bahi was concocted and forged for the purpose of affording evidence to prove the passing of the consideration. I mean the District Judge in appeal suspected that the bond also was not executed by the Musamm, but did not clearly find that it was a forgery. The Court which tried the case or the appeal, would have been in a better position to judge whether the ends of justice required that the petitioner should be prosecuted for using the forged document. We do not know what would have been the opinion of those Courts if the application for sanction was heard by them. The delay has, therefore, deprived the petitioner of the opinion of the Courts which tried the case on the merits. It is clear that the opposite party, in order to serve its own ends and out of grudge and malice, wants to take this vindictive action against the petitioner. Under all these circumstances no sanction should be allowed to serve such a purpose and the order is liable to be set aside on this ground also.

The learned Vakil for the opposite party contested the jurisdiction of this Court to interfere with the order made by the District Judge or the Subordinate Judge. True, the order in question was made in connection with the civil suit decided by the Subordinate Judge and as such the application in respect of the sanction would be heard by the civil side of this Court and not by the criminal side. But this Court is hearing this application on its civil side. The learned Vakil further urged that this Court can only deal with the order of the District Judge under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and that the order should only be set aside if it was without any jurisdiction or was exercised with illegality or material irregularity in terms of that sanction. I do not at all feel inclined to agree with this view. The power is exercised by this Court under clause (6) of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to grant or revoke sanction refused or granted by inferior Courts. The High Court is the Appellate Court from their decision in civil suits and as such is the superior Court under clause 7 of section 195, and is, therefore, competent to deal with their order granting or revoking sanction under clause 6 of the sanction. The Madras and the Calcutta High Courts have taken the above views, vide Muthuswami Mudali v. Veeni Chetti (1), Girija Sankar Roy v. Binode Sheikh (2) and Habibur Rahman v. Munshi Khodabus (3). The view taken in Hamiyuddi Mondel v. Damodar Ghose (4) quoted by the learned Vakil for the opposite party was not followed in the later rulings referred to above of the same Court. Personally I have no doubt in my mind that this Court has jurisdiction to deal with the order of the inferior Courts on merits under clause 6 of section 195 and not only under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and that the view taken in the case by the learned Judge who decided the case of Hamiyuddi Mondel v. Damodar Ghose (4) was not the correct view, and in fact did not recommend itself to the very learned Judge who subsequently in Girija Sankar Roy v. Binode Sheikh (2) distinguished that ruling.

The order of the District Judge in this case confirmed the sanction given by the Subordinate Judge and comes well within the aforesaid order.

The result is that the sanction granted by the Subordinate Judge and confirmed by the District Judge is set aside. The proceedings that may have been instituted on the basis of this sanction are hereby revoked and quashed.

Sanction set aside.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 366—Kidnapping from lawful guardianship—Offence, essentials of.

A girl, under 16 years of age, was sent by her father to take food to the bullocks, when on her way she was persuaded by the accused to accompany him. The latter cut off her hair and dressed her up in boy's clothes and lived with her for some time.

Held, that the accused was guilty of the offence of abduction under section 366 of the Penal Code with the intent that the girl might be compelled to marry against her will or forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. [p. 839, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Meerut.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Harkesh and Bhullan have been convicted of offences under sections 366 and 368 of the Indian Penal Code. The charge-sheet, to which they were called upon to plead, as regards Harkesh is:—"That you about the month of April forcibly took Musammatt Hardai, a minor girl of about 15 years, from the lawful guardianship of her parents, with intent that she may be seduced to illicit intercourse and be sold in marriage to some one." As regards Bhullan the charge runs:—"That you about the month of June, July, and a part of August kept Musammatt Hardai, hiding her identity that she was a girl, with the intention of giving her in marriage and raising money from the transaction, knowing that she was a minor girl kidnapped by Harkesh." The case was tried with two assessors. Both assessors gave it as their opinion that Harkesh and Bhullan were guilty of the offence specified in the charge. The learned Judge agreed with the assessors. Harkesh and Bhullan are described as Jats, the girl, respecting whom they have been charged, is also a Jat girl. Both the accused have been represented in this Court by learned Counsel. Great stress has been laid on the improbability of the story given by the girl. The medical evidence shows that she is a girl under 16 years of age and in considering whether the offence charged has been committed by the accused or not, the evidence to which we should first turn is not the evidence of the girl but the evidence of her father, Niadar. The offence is primarily an offence against him. I have carefully considered his evidence and I see no reason to doubt it. He tells us that at the time when the girl Hardai disappeared he was ill with fever. The girl was sent one evening to take food to the bullocks. The husband and wife returned shortly after and found the girl had not gone home and had not fed the bullocks. He made inquiries from his neighbours but no one had seen the girl. He was laid up with fever for several days but as soon as he could, he went and searched in the neighbouring villages but could find no trace of his daughter. He tells us that this was not the only occasion upon which he searched for his daughter. He admits that he made no report at the thana. Stress is laid upon this as being improbable conduct and not in harmony with the rest of his deposition. But he gives his explanation. He was afraid that if inquiry was made the girl might be spirited off further, and he adds that he did fear that the chances of marrying would be spoiled if the news got about. Any one who is aware of a Jat's difficulties and prejudices can easily understand this and I see nothing at all improbable in it. The medical evidence places beyond doubt that the girl at the time the occurrence took place was under 16 years of age. Niadar is supported in his statement by the witness Bija. I have examined his evidence also with much care and it fully supports what Niadar has said. If their statements can be believed—I see no reason why they should not be believed and they have been believed by both the Judge and the assessors who heard the evidence, there is no room for supposing that Niadar was in any way privy to the removal of the girl or that he took no interest in her welfare.

When the girl was found first to the knowledge of Niadar, she had been discovered in a village not far distant from the village in which Niadar resides. There is not one word in the cross-examination which supports that either Niadar or Bija or any of the Jats of Kutta had any cause for quarrel or grudge against either of the accused.

It is admitted by both the accused that the girl Hardai was in their company at about the time when she disappeared and it undoubtedly rests with Harkesh and Bhullan to explain how the girl under these circumstances came into their company. The girl was a female under 16 years of age her lawful guardian had not consented to her being removed out of his guardianship. As regards the matter of time the story is here taken up by the girl. I agree that what she says cannot be believed. Her account is that she met Harkesh, was assaulted by him, dressed in male clothes, taken and shut up and her hair cut. This is only one of the stories told by her and it entirely disagrees in important points with the second story which she told. I discard her evidence and put it out of consideration. What I have to see is how the girl passed from the guardianship of Niadar to the keeping of Harkesh. It is quite possible that Harkesh came upon her as she was on her way home to do her father's bidding and that she was persuaded by him to accompany him and afterwards to put on male clothes and to work for him. There is evidence put forward for the defence that the girl came wandering dressed in boy's clothes, that she asked for work and was engaged by Harkesh.

HAR KESH V. EMPEROR.

I agree with the learned Judge and assessors in not believing this story. It is in the first place improbable and in the second place the evidence given is so vague, just when it ought to be definite.

Bearing all this in mind I am satisfied that an offence under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code has been fully proved against Harkesh and I dismiss his appeal.

With reference to Bhullan there is the evidence of his witness Shera, which is of great importance. No reason has been shown why Shera's evidence should not be believed. He tells us that he had seen this girl living at Bhora first with Harkesh and then with Bhullan. She was dressed as a boy. People began to suspect she was not a boy but a girl. On his making enquiry as to her sex Hardai said she was a girl. Next morning both the accused and the girl had disappeared. Lohari who is Chaukidar says that as he was going to his field, about the time mentioned, with other people, he saw the girl dressed in boy's clothes and crying. Bhullan and Harkesh were quarrelling close by. Each was saying that he would take away the girl; he asked the girl, thinking it was a boy, but the reply was, "I am not a boy but a girl." She also said they were taking her about and she feared they would kill her. Upon this Bhullan began to make off but the witness ran after him and arrested him. There is nothing in the cross-examination to show that this witness has any malice against Bhullan. I hold this evidence is enough to show that at that time the girl was being by force compelled to go about with these two accused and that their act amounted to abduction. On behalf of the accused I was referred to the case of Ewaz Ali v. Emperor (1). That, however, was a different case. The girl in that case was one who was found to have left the guardianship of her husband with intention to remain out of that keeping. It so far differs from the present case and I am not prepared to follow it. I was also referred to the case of Empress of India v. Sri Lal (2). That was an absolutely different case and in no way a guide in the present case. The case of Emperor v. Ramchander (3) is also quite different, but I need only refer to the concluding words of that judgment to show that the circumstances of that case and of this case do not agree. The learned Judges say, "We need hardly point out that the case would be very different if the girl had been going on a visit or message or any such like occasion." The evidence in the present case satisfies me that the girl was going on a message when she disappeared. The case of Emperor v. Jetha Nathoo (4) is, in my opinion, a case exactly in point. As the learned Judges there point out, what have to be considered are the broad features of the case. I hold that a case of abduction with intent that the girl might be compelled to marry against her will or forced or seduced to illicit intercourse has been abundantly proved against Bhullan and I dismiss his appeal.

My attention has been called to the case of Abdur Rahman v. Emperor (5). With great respect to the learned Judge who decided that case I hold that in that case the evidence showed that Abdur Rahman, if he did any act at all, did an act subsequent to the alleged offence of kidnapping. The Indian Penal Code does not recognize abetment after the main act, and the arguments, therefore, really amount to an obiter dictum.

There remains the question of sentence. Looking at all the features of the case I think the sentences have been unnecessarily severe.

I allow the appeal, so far that I reduce the sentences passed to a sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment, both in the case of Harkesh and Bhullan; the sentences served by them will be considered part of this sentence. So far and no further I allow their appeals.

Sentences reduced.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 947 of 1917.

CHIT THA—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Murder—Sentence—Youth of offender, consideration of.

Ordinarily youth is in itself an extenuating circumstance in murder cases as in other criminal cases. Cases of extreme depravity do occur in which the youth of the accused may not be a sufficient reason for imposing the lesser sentence. But the youth of the criminal is a circumstance which should always be taken into account by Sessions Courts in exercising the discretion vested in them by section 302 of the Indian Penal Code [p. 840, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Nga Chit Tha has been sentenced to death for murder. The case is clear and the appeal was admitted only for the purpose of considering the propriety of the sentence. The appellant who is an agricultural labourer had been working with a wood-cutting dhama in his hand and returned to his employer's house to get a light for his cheroot. There he suddenly encountered the deceased Maung San Mya with whom he had a quarrel some months before. He fell upon the deceased with the da and inflicted fatal wounds on his head. The appellant at first stated that he had been threatened with death in an anonymous letter which he attributed to San Mya and when he suddenly met San Mya, he was terrorstruck and attacked him so as to prevent San Mya from attacking him. The Sessions Judge was inclined to believe this story, though the appellant modified it considerably when he was examined in Court. He then alleged that the deceased abused him and assaulted him when he entered the cooking place of the house.

There can be no doubt that the appellant was rightly convicted of murder. His age according to the medical subordinate who gave evidence at the trial is between 17 and 19. The Superintendent and Medical Officer of the Jail where Chit Tha is now confined was asked to give his opinion on this point, and he reports that in his opinion Chit Tha is 16 years of age.

The Sessions Judge thought that he would not be justified in remitting the extreme penalty on the ground of youth only. The learned Judge was perhaps influenced by the ruling in Nga Pyan v. Crown (1). The following is an extract from Mr. Justice Fox's judgment in that case:—

"The present case is one in which a youth must have silently brooded for a considerable time over chidings and abuse addressed to him by the man he subsequently murdered, but in the end his act was deliberate, previously meditated, done in cold blood, and was accompanied by great ferocity.

"To refrain from confirming a sentence of death in such a case on account of the criminal's youth would, in my opinion, be an act of pure mercy. The exercise of mercy is the prerogative of the Crown to be exercised in this country by the very highest authorities, and, if mercy is exercised towards a criminal, he and the public should understand that the mitigation of the sentence passed upon him by the Court of Justice is due to the exercise of the power of clemency, which is an attribute of the King-Emperor alone."

In the murder case now under consideration there appears to have been no deliberation; it is probable that the appellant acted on a sudden impulse. The case is, therefore, distinguishable from that of Nga Pyan.

As to the general principle we are of opinion that ordinarily youth is in itself an extenuating circumstance in murder cases as in other criminal cases. We refrain from laying down that the lesser penalty should be awarded in every murder case where the accused is below a certain age. Cases of extreme depravity do occur in which the youth of the accused may not be a sufficient reason for imposing the lesser sentence. But the youth of the criminal is a circumstance which should always be taken into account by Sessions Courts in exercising the discretion vested in them by section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. We respectfully dissent from the view suggested in Nga Pyan's case that a Sessions Court, which on the ground of the criminal's youth imposes on him the lesser sentence provided in section 302, is thereby encroaching on the prerogative of the Crown.

Having regard to the youth of the present appellant and the circumstances of the case we consider that the sentence passed on him may properly be reduced to one of transportation for life and it is reduced accordingly.

Sentence reduced.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE NO. 40 OF 1917.

January 9, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chitty and Mr. Justice Smither.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

ASIMODDI AND OTHERS—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 297, 298, 299—Misdirection to Jury, whether ground for setting aside verdict—Functions of Judge and Jury—Forgery—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 193, 465, 467.

The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge and a Jury on charges under sections 465, 467 and 193, Indian Penal Code, on the allegations that by personating one Mir Bakhsa, the husband of a certain woman, before the Muhammadan Marriage Registrar, they had induced the Registrar to make an entry of the divorce of the woman by her husband, to which entry they had affixed their thumb impressions, and thereby made a false document within the meaning of sections 463 and 464, Indian Penal Code.

In his charge to the Jury, the Sessions Judge said: "If the person who put his thumb impression in the register as Mir Bakhsa was not really Mir Bakhsa, it is clear that he made a false document within the meaning of section 464 and that his intention was that fraud should be committed and also that injury should be caused to Mir Bakhsa. He, therefore, committed forgery."

Held, that there was a misdirection on the part of the Judge as he did not leave it to the Jury, as he should have done, to say whether on the evidence they found that the intention of the accused was dishonest and fraudulent; but that although the misdirection might have been under certain circumstances, a reason for setting aside the verdict of the Jury, yet as the verdict was not erroneous and was perfectly correct on the evidence, it should not be set aside. [p. 842, col. 2.]

Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Dacca, dated the 3rd October 1917.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is a somewhat peculiar case. Three persons Naimoddi, Asimoddi and Musti were placed upon their trial before the Sessions Judge of Dacca and a Jury on charges under sections 465, 467 and 193, Indian Penal Code. The offense alleged against the accused was that, by personating Mir Bakhsa, the husband of one Sabjan and brother-in-law of the accused Naimuddi before the Muhammadan Marriage Registrar in Dacca, they had induced the Registrar to make an entry of the divorce of Sabjan by her husband Mir Bakhsa, to which entry they had affixed their thumb impressions and thereby made a false document within the meaning of sections 463 and 464, Indian Penal Code. At the trial it appeared that the accused Musti, who was said to have been present in the Registrar's office, had taken no active part in the proceeding, and he was accordingly acquitted by the Jury. Nothing more turns upon his share in the case. As to the other accused, in the case of Asimoddi, the Jury, by a majority of 3 to 2, found him not guilty. The Judge, disagreeing with that verdict, has referred the case to this Court under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code. In the case of Naimoddi, the Jury, by a majority of 3 to 2, found him guilty of an offence under section 465, Indian Penal Code. The Judge accepted the verdict of the majority in his case and sentenced him to five years' rigorous imprisonment. We may state in passing that this sentence was illegal, inasmuch as the maximum sentence under section 465, Indian Penal Code, is imprisonment for two years. Naimoddi appealed to this Court from jail. We directed that his appeal should be put up before us at the time the reference in the matter of Asimoddi was taken up. This was done, and Naimoddi has also instructed the same Pleader as Asimoddi. The case made for Naimoddi was that there had been misdirection on the part of the Judge and that the sentence was illegal. We accordingly admitted his appeal and the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer waiving service of notice of this appeal on behalf of the Crown, Naimoddi's appeal has been argued along with the reference in the matter of Asimoddi. We can, therefore, dispose of the two cases in one judgment.

EMPEROR v. ASIMODDI.

It will be convenient to take the case of Naimoddi first. The trial being by Jury, he could only appeal on a question of law and that in this case would be misdirection by the Judge. In his grounds of appeal he gives two instances of misdirection which, in our opinion, do not amount to any misdirection at all; but a perusal of the heads of charges shows that there was a misdirection on the part of the Judge on another point. The Judge says: "If the person who put his thumb impression in the register as Mir Baksha was not really Mir Baksha, it is clear that he made a false document within the meaning of section 464 and that his intention was that fraud should be committed, also that injury should be caused to Mir Baksha. He, therefore, committed 'forgery.' There are two questions: (1) Is the page of the register, Exhibit 8, a forgery? (2) Did accused Naimoddi and Asimoddi forge it." Throughout the rest of the charge we find nothing stated by the learned Judge on the question of fraud or dishonest intention on the part of the two accused. He states (in the words which we have quoted) an apparently self-evident fact, and has not left it to the Jury, as he should have done, to say whether on the evidence they found that the intention of the accused or either of them was dishonest or fraudulent. This might under certain circumstances have been a reason for setting aside the verdict of the Jury. But section 423 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code says: "Nothing herein contained shall authorize the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a Jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the Jury of the law as laid down by him." Here we are asked to set aside the verdict of the Jury, and to order a retrial. The question is whether we should do that in a case where we are of opinion that the verdict is not erroneous and has not been made erroneous owing to the misdirection by the Judge, but which, on the evidence which we have perused in the course of the hearing of these two cases, is perfectly correct. Though the Judge may have been wrong in not directing the Jury more explicitly with regard to the fraudulent or dishonest intention of the accused, it cannot be said that owing to that the Jury have arrived at an erroneous verdict. It appears to us that, so far as the facts of the case and the conviction of Naimoddi on these facts are concerned, it would be idle to send the case back, because it appears to be a perfectly clear case on the evidence against both the accused. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal of Naimoddi so far as it relates to the misdirection by the Judge. But the sentence upon him of five years' rigorous imprisonment was clearly illegal. We think that the circumstances of the case will be met by a sentence upon Naimoddi of one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Turning to the case of Asimoddi, that is before us on a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, and we are not only entitled but bound to go into the facts, and giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the Jury, to decide the case upon the evidence. The case, as we have already intimated in speaking of Naimoddi, is perfectly clear against both the accused and it is impossible to understand why one member of the Jury should have pronounced in favour of Asimoddi when convicting Naimoddi. It is clearly proved that these two men went to the office of the Muhammadan Registrar of Marriages in Dacca on 12th September 1917. That they had been there came to the notice of Mir Baksha, the complainant. He knew (as he has sworn) that Naimoddi had his sister Sabjan (the wife of Mir Baksha) in his house at that time and was reluctant to let her return to her husband. Mir Baksha also had reason to suppose that Naimoddi wanted a divorce to be brought about between the two in order that he might marry his sister to somebody else. Mir Baksha accordingly went to the Registrar's office and found that an entry had been made attested by the thumb impressions of two persons, one personating himself and one posing as Sk. Nimai to identify the husband. Nimai was found not to have been there and has given evidence to say that he never went. A complaint was lodged, and then attempts were made to bring about a compromise between the parties. A baitrak was held at the house of the witness Nogendra but, as apparently Naimoddi did not carry out the terms of the arrangement then arrived at, these proceedings were instituted. It was clear in the trial that the offence was one under section 465 and not under section 467, as the document was not in any sense "a valuable security." But that Naimoddi and Asimoddi both made a false document by putting their thumb impressions to the entry, Exhibit 8, admits of no doubt. The proof of it rests mainly, it is true, on the evidence of the expert who has been examined in this case, but there seems to be no reason whatever to discredit the expert's statements, or the conclusion which he drew. It is quite plain that the thumb impressions in Exhibit 8 are those of the two accused and not of Mir Baksha or Sk. Nimai. There can be no question whatever as to the intention of these two men in getting that document drawn up and signing it as they did. It was undoubtedly dishonest and a fraud upon Mir Baksha. That it was a false document under section 464, Indian Penal Code, cannot be disputed for a moment. If Naimoddi and Asimoddi put their thumb impressions on that document intending, as they did intend, that it should be taken as a signature by Mir Baksha and Sk. Nimais, their action would come directly within the first definition in section 464. We do not think that there is any distinction to be drawn in the guilt of the two men. We accordingly convict Asimoddi under section 465, Indian Penal Code, and sentence him also to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Asimoddi, if on bail, must surrender to his bail and serve out his sentence.

Accused convicted.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 21, 24, 25, 26—Confession—Oral confession made to a Magistrate, whether admissible—Proof.

In order to make a confession admissible in evidence it is not necessary that it must be recorded. [p. 844, col. 2.]

An oral confession by an accused person not being open to exception under sections 24, 25 or 26 of the Evidence Act, is, as an admission by an accused person, a relevant fact and may be proved at his trial under section 21. Such a confession made to a Magistrate is relevant and may be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate. [p. 844, col. 2.]

Shere Singh v. Empress, 21 P. R. 1881 Cr., followed.

Where, therefore, the accused made a verbal confession of his guilt before an Honorary Magistrate:

Held, that the confession was admissible in evidence and could be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate. [p. 844, col. 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 8th October 1917, convicting the appellants.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellant.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Feroz, a Jat, and Gulab, a Tarkhan, have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Jhelum of the murder of Nur Din, Pathal, at Dhok Kund Dakhli Padri, on the night between the 3rd and 4th July 1917 and have each been sentenced to death. They have filed a joint appeal to this Court through Mr. Kureshi, Advocate, and the case is also before us for confirmation of the capital sentences under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code.

That Feroz and his uncle Nur Din were not on good terms is clear from a perusal of the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge. In the days when the murder was committed Nur Din was grazing the flock of goats of Nawab (P. W. No. 3) and was living at Dhok Kund, which is about one kos from Padri where he and the appellant lived. On the morning of 4th July 1917 Nur Din was found to be missing from the Dhok though his clothes were lying there. This naturally aroused suspicion, and reports were made the same evening at Domeli Police station both by Feroz and by Nawab. Feroz in his report stated that Nur Din was suspected of having illicit intimacy with the wife of Niaz Ali. Nawab, on the other hand, said that if Nur Din had been murdered his murderer was Feroz, and that Feroz's two maternal uncles and Gulab were his accomplices. Upon this the Sub Inspector took both

FEROZ V. EMPEROR.

Feroz and Nawab to Raja Momara Khan, (P. W. No. 6), Honorary Magistrate, Domeli, who had shortly before heard a case between Nur Din and Feroz. Raja Momara Khan expressed his desire to make enquiries from Feroz and took him aside privately and talked to him. Feroz then admitted that he and Gulab had murdered Nur Din the night before whilst he was sleeping on a charpoy, and that subsequently they had tied up the corpse in a blanket and buried it in a band which was under Feroz's cultivation.

Mr. Kureshi argues that this oral confession to the Honorary Magistrate is not admissible in evidence because it was not reduced into writing. In the first place he contends that Feroz was at that time in Police custody, and that the confession was not made to Raja Momara Khan in his capacity of Magistrate. It appears to us, however, clear that Nawab and Feroz were taken to Raja Momara Khan because he was a Magistrate and he questioned Feroz because he previously knew him, having heard a case to which Nur Din and Feroz were parties. Section 26 of the Evidence Act lays down that "no confession made by any person whilst he is in the custody of a Police Officer, unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, shall be proved as against the person."

Now, in the first place we see no reason to consider that Feroz was at the time when he made the confession in the custody of a Police Officer. He and Nawab had shortly before made inconsistent reports at the Police station, and the Police Officer accordingly took them to the Honorary Magistrate in order that the truth might be ascertained. Secondly, even if Feroz was in Police custody the confession was made to a Magistrate and is, therefore, not excluded from being given in evidence by anything contained in section 26 of the Evidence Act.

In regard to the contention that the confession should have been recorded in accordance with the provisions of section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, Mr. Kureshi is quoted, inter alia, Queen-Empress v. Viran (1) and Empress v. Manoo T. moolee (2).

(1) 9 M. 224; 2 Weir 125; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 553.
(2) 4 C. 696; 4 C. L. R. 137; 2 Shome L. R. Cr. 19; Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 442.

Those, however, were cases in which the Magistrate had purported to act under section 164, Criminal Procedure Code, but had not followed the procedure laid down therein. There is nothing in those rulings in support of the proposition that in order to make the confession admissible in evidence it must be recorded.

In Shere Singh v. Empress (3) it was expressly held that an oral confession by an accused person not being open to exception under sections 24, 25 or 26 of the Evidence Act, is, as an admission by an accused person, a relevant fact, and may be proved at his trial under section 21, and, therefore, such a confession made to a Magistrate is relevant, and may be proved by the evidence of the Magistrate. Similarly, at page 141 of the Punjab Record (Criminal judgments) of 1887 [Bata v. Empress (4)], it is said that an extra-judicial confession to a Magistrate is not a matter required by law to be reduced to writing within the meaning of section 91 of the Evidence Act; it is merely a matter which the Magistrate is authorised to reduce to writing.

We agree with the view expressed in these rulings of this Court, and we, therefore, hold that the confession of Feroz, which has been proved by the evidence of Raja Momara Khan, is admissible in evidence.

Now, this confession, though retracted before the Committing Magistrate, has been corroborated as regards Feroz by the fact that he pointed out the spot where the body of Nur Din was buried and from which it was recovered. Moreover, Feroz stated that the body was carried from Dhok Kund to the place where it was buried slung on the side pole of a charpoy. Feroz himself produced such a pole from his own house. It was sent to the Imperial Serologist, who detected on it human blood. Mr. Kureshi argues that it is extremely improbable that Feroz after murdering Nur Din at the Dhok would have carried the body and buried it in the field which he himself cultivated. The fact that the deceased's clothes were found in the Dhok and that his body was buried in a field at a distance of more than a mile from the Dhok make it prima facie probable that he was murdered at the Dhok and that his body was subsequently removed for purposes of burial. It may seem curious that Feroz should have buried the body in his own field, but murderers often do things which it is difficult to explain and after all Feroz probably thought that it would be easier for him to conceal the body in his own field than elsewhere. It appears that after the body was buried the ground was levelled and harrowed and Feroz could more easily do this in his own field without exciting suspicion than in some one else's.

(3) 21 P. R. 1881 Cr.
(4) 52 P. R. 1887 Cr.

RADHAMOHAN RAI v. NAIMUDDI MOLLA

In our opinion there is no reason to disbelieve the evidence of Raja Momara Khan, who is a gentleman of position. There is no reason also to suppose that the Police put any pressure upon Feroz to induce him to confess, as immediately after making his report he was taken to the Honorary Magistrate. The confession rings true and is corroborated in the manner we have already stated. We agree with the Sessions Judge that the evidence against Feroz is overwhelming, and there can be no doubt of his guilt.

As to Gulab an attempt was made to prove that he absconded from the village on the evening of the 4th of July. There is no doubt that he did leave the village and went to a neighbouring one. But he was found by Zaman Mehdi (P. W. No. 10) two days later near Jabli apparently returning to his home. He did not, it seems, make any real effort to abscond, and the explanation given by him of his movements may be true. The main point relied upon as corroborating the confession of Feroz as against him is that when he was found, he had some scratches on his neck and shoulder which were supposed to have been caused by carrying the pole on which the body was slung. No such marks were found on the person of Feroz, but he is a taller man than Gulab and might easily have escaped getting any bruises or scratches. A more important fact, however, is that marks were only found upon the right shoulder of Gulab. It is argued by Mr. Kureshi that a man carrying a weight slung on a pole for a distance of over a mile would certainly have shifted the pole from one shoulder to the other and if either shoulder had been injured both would have been. There is certainly a good deal of force in this argument. The explanation given by Gulab as to how he received these scratches was disbelieved by the assessors, but a perusal of the Police diaries shows that he gave this explanation from the very beginning and that he was supported by Ilam Din and Ismail, who also gave evidence at the trial. It is not shown that Feroz had any motive for naming Gulab falsely; but at the same time it would not be safe to rely upon his retracted oral confession without some material corroboration as regards Gulab. The condition of Gulab's neck and shoulder is not, in our opinion, a sufficient corroboration in a case of this sort.

We, therefore, accept Gulab's appeal and setting aside the conviction and sentence acquit him direct that he be forthwith released from custody. The appeal of Feroz is dismissed and the sentence of death passed upon him is confirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, cls. (5), (6)—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to deal with lands not subject-matter of dispute—Order under cl. 6 in favour of persons who are not parties but who are directed to come in under cl. 5, validity of.

In a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to deal with land which is not in dispute between the parties and to declare the same to be in the possession of persons who are not parties to the proceedings. [p. 846, col. 2.]

In such a proceeding the Magistrate exceeds his jurisdiction if he makes an order under section 145, clause (6), in favour of persons who are not parties to the proceeding and who have not filed any written statement or taken any part in the proceedings except to address the Court through their Pleader, and who were directed by the Magistrate to come in for a limited purpose, viz., under section 145 clause 5. Mr. Norton (with him Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Frobooth Chandra Chatterji), for the Petitioners.

Babus Atulya Charan Bose, Satish Chandra Chowdhury and Rupendra Kumar Mitra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued at the instance of some of the 1st party to a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The leader of this branch of the 1st party appears to be Baikuntha Chandra Roy. The Rule was issued on two grounds (1): that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to declare plots I and J to be in possession of Sadar Ali's tenants, they being no parties to the proceeding and having made no application to be made parties, and (2) that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to declare plots E and F to be in the possession of Baser Pramanik and his tenants, those persons being parties to the proceedings only for the purpose of section 145 (5). The proceedings were commenced on 1st September 1917 owing to a dispute between, and a likelihood of a breach of the peace by, the present petitioners (part of the 1st party) and Naimuddi Molla, the 2nd party. It appears from the order-sheet that on 8th October 1917 two sets of persons, one claiming to be tenants of Naimuddi Molla and the other to be tenants of one Bhola Molla, applied to be made parties. The order was: "They may proceed as under section 145 (5), Criminal Procedure Code." It does not appear that these persons ever came in any capacity. On 17th October 1917 Baser Pramanik and others, who have been described as the 3rd party, put in a petition claiming to be in possession of the disputed land, denying any likelihood of a breach of the peace and applying to be added as the 3rd party under section 145 (5). They conclude, "the case can be decided by accepting written statements and evidence from us." The order on that petition was: "They are to proceed under section 145 (5), Criminal Procedure Code." At the hearing the contest was entirely between the present petitioners and Naimuddi Molla. Kauchan Mondal and other members of the 1st party took no part in it. Baser Pramanik and his tenants (3rd party) filed no written statements, nor did they adduce any evidence, either in support of their alleged possession or under section 145 (5), to show that no dispute existed. The Amin, however, in his local investigation found the houses and homesteads of the 3rd party on plots E and F. Plots E, F, I and J are all within the boundaries of the disputed land, the subject of these proceedings. As regards I and J which the Magistrate finds to be in the possession of Sadar Ali's tenants, no orders have been passed under section 145 (6), but the Magistrate has apparently released them from attachment. As to these two plots the effect of his order seems to be to exclude them from the present proceedings. The petitioners cannot in any way be prejudiced, so far as these proceedings are concerned, by the Magistrate's finding that these plots I and J are in the possession of persons who are not parties; at the same time the more correct mode of expression would be to say that he finds these plots not to be in the possession of any or either of the parties, and that in these circumstances they should be excluded from the present proceedings. He certainly had no jurisdiction to deal with these plots as if they were in dispute between the parties.

The case as to E and F is rather different, since with regard to them the Magistrate has passed an order under section 145 (6) in favour of the 3rd party. It is not disputed that the Magistrate might have added these persons, Baser Pramanik and others, as parties, but he does not appear to have done so. From the order-sheet it appears that he let them come in for a limited purpose, namely, under section 145 (5). It does not appear that they availed themselves even of that permission. They took no part in the proceedings except to address the Court through their Pleader. Though they alleged possession in their petition of 17th October 1917 they filed no written statement, and adduced no evidence in support of it. We are not prepared to say that it was absolutely necessary for them to do either of these things. Their object might be gained by the admission of or the evidence adduced by another party. But in the circumstances of this particular case we are of opinion that they cannot be regarded as parties in whose favour an order could be passed under section 145 (6).

In this view of the case we must hold that the Magistrate exceeded his jurisdiction in passing such an order. We make the Rule absolute and set aside so much of the Magistrate's order as finds the possession of plots E and F and I and J in Baser Pramanik's tenants and Sadar Ali's tenants respectively, and also so much of his order as declares the 3rd party entitled to retain their possession until evicted in due course of law, and forbidding all disturbance of such possession until eviction. The result will be that these 4 plots E, F, I and J are excluded from the purview of the present proceedings.

Rule made absolute.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 75, 379—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 221—Boat theft—Sentence—Previous convict—Enhanced punishment, principles governing.

There is no hard and fast rule that a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment must be passed in all cattle and boat theft cases, without regard to the value and utility of the stolen property, the youth of the accused, his previous character, or any other circumstances that may justly be taken into consideration in passing sentence. Each case should be considered on its merits, and, if extenuating circumstances appear to exist, the sentence should be modified accordingly. A sentence should never be heavier than is necessary to deter the criminal from committing the offence again. [p. 847, col. 2; p. 848, col. 1.]

In the case of men with previous convictions, regard should be had to their career and to the time that has elapsed between the convictions passed upon them. Sections 75, Indian Penal Code, and 221, Criminal Procedure Code, were not intended for the purpose of automatically enhancing by a kind of geometrical progression the sentence to be passed after a previous conviction. The reason for passing a more severe sentence in the case of a criminal with a previous conviction is primarily to protect society from the predations and offences committed by an habitual rogue, who has shown no signs of repentance. A Magistrate or Judge should make some enquiry into the repute and antecedent behaviour of a man whom he proposes to sentence severely. [p. 848, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The appellants have been rightly convicted of the theft of a bauktu boat, worth Rs. 8, on the 2nd August, and another similar boat, worth Rs. 15, on the 12th August.

Nga Po Gyein, who had a previous conviction proved against him, was sentenced to two consecutive terms of three and a half years' rigorous imprisonment or to seven years in all, whilst Po Tin who has no previous convictions was sentenced to consecutive sentences of two years' rigorous imprisonment, or to four years in all. The sentence passed on Po Tin for the theft of two boats of little value is an example of that want of discrimination and thought that is shown in some of the sentences passed in these cases. The Magistrate probably had in mind the ruling of Queen-Empress v. Nga San (1) in which Aston, J. C., said: "The reason why boat thefts and cattle thefts call ordinarily for a sentence of two years' imprisonment is two-fold. They for the most part are committed by professional thieves, or by persons ready to join the ranks of professional thieves, and the injury inflicted on the owner is not measured by the intrinsic value of the property stolen, but is usually far beyond that value when the owners are deprived of their means of livelihood by the loss of their cattle or boats."

The proper sentence to be passed in cattle theft cases was again considered in Queen-Empress v. Nga Ni and Nga Shwe Pi (2) in which Birks, J. C., said that where there are no extenuating circumstances, a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment is not unsuitable. These pronouncements have unfortunately been sometimes interpreted as laying down a hard and fast rule that a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment must be passed in all cattle and boat theft cases, without regard to the value and utility of the stolen property, the youth of the accused, his previous character, or any other circumstances that may justly be taken into consideration in passing sentence. When Mr. Aston spoke of cattle thefts being committed for the most part by professional thieves, he was probably thinking of the type prevalent in India, whereas in Burma many of the thefts are committed by young men who are tempted to steal either by the careless way in which cattle are tended, or by motives of bravado. It is undesirable to send young men to jail if they can be suitably punished otherwise, and in many cases I think that a whipping would be a more appropriate sentence than imprisonment. Each case should be considered on its merits, and, if extenuating circumstances appear to exist, the sentence should be modified accordingly. A sentence should never be heavier than is necessary to deter the criminal from committing the offence again. In the case of men with previous convictions regard should be had to their career and to the time that has elapsed between the convictions passed upon them. Sections 75, Indian Penal Code, and 221, Criminal Procedure Code, were not intended for the purpose of automatically enhancing by a kind of geometrical progression the sentence to be passed after a previous conviction. The reason for passing a more severe sentence in the case of a criminal with a previous conviction is primarily to protect society from the predations and offences committed by an habitual rogue, who has shown no signs of repentance. But there is a large number of men who commit offences more than once, but do not seek to live by crime. These seem to me to stand on a different footing from the professional criminal. On the other hand, a man may have few if any previous convictions and may yet be a dangerous criminal whose powers of mischief need curtailment by a long sentence. I think that a Magistrate or Judge should make some enquiry into the repute and antecedent behaviour of a man whom he proposes to sentence severely. This could be done after the evidence has been heard and the Court has come to a decision about his guilt. The Police Officer in charge of the station within the jurisdiction of which the prisoner resides, or the headman of the village would be able to supply the necessary information.

(1) P. J. L. B. 198.

(2) P. J. L. B. 563.

JIBLAL MAHTO v. EMPEROR.

Po Nyein must have had previous convictions before the one now set out against him, as he was sentenced to four years under section 379. He was released from jail in 1915, and has again committed two thefts in August 1917. His appeal is dismissed. The boats stolen by Po Tin were not of much value, but as it is in evidence that the countryside near the landing place from which they were removed, is one vast sheet of water, the thefts probably caused great inconvenience, if not loss to the owners. His sentence is reduced to one of six months' rigorous imprisonment on each charge to run consecutively.

Sentence reduced.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Dispute regarding right to tap tree—Jurisdiction.

The right to tap a tree is a question which may be the subject of proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

Where on a Police report that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace regarding the right to tap a tree, the Magistrate initiated proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code and directed that a passage may be left in a wall which was being built by the second party to enable the first party to tap the tree, the only way to cut the tree lying over the wall.

Held, that the order of the Magistrate was entirely without jurisdiction.

Criminal Revision against an order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Bihar, dated the 18th December 1917.

Mr. Khurshed Hasnain, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Indu Bhusin Biswas, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We have no doubt at all that the right to tap a tree is a question which may be the subject of proceedings under section 145. That part of the Magistrate's order which directs that a passage should be left for the purpose of such tapping seems to us to be entirely without jurisdiction. There is no evidence on the record, so far as we can see, that the only way to cut this tree lies over the wall which is being built. But even if this were so, we should doubt whether the matter could be settled otherwise than by an injunction from the Civil Court. We, therefore, set aside the latter portion of the order of the learned Magistrate. The order declaring the tree to be in the possession of the first party should not be disturbed.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 24th February 1917, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 18th October 1916.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by two plaintiffs Musammat Abbas Bandi and Musammat Kasim Bandi, who are the owners of a taluqa named Samanpur. The defendants, who are the appellants here, were Khunnu Singh and Musammat Phulpati, widow of one Atbal Singh. The plaintiffs came into Court asking for a declaration that the defendants had no Zemindari rights, superior or inferior, in certain lands which were specified in the plaint and the area of which is described as being 14 bighas odd. The cause of action upon which the suit was based was that in ejectment proceedings taken by the plaintiffs in a Rent Court in respect of the plots in suit the defendants had set up their case that they were under-proprietors.

The defendants' case was that they were under-proprietors of the lands in suit. They alleged that they were old Zemindars of the village of Bahadurpur in which the property in dispute is situated, and they claimed that grants of "sir and saer" had been made to them by the previous taluqdars. The written statement filed by the defendants contained a history of certain claims and litigation between the taluqdars and the defendants with respect to these lands and it was claimed that even if a grant of under-proprietary rights in the lands in suit had not been established, the defendants had, by adverse possession, acquired a good title.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, being of opinion that the defendants had established an under-proprietary title by prescription. The lower Appellate Court has reversed the decree of the first Court and decreed the plaintiffs' claim.

Now the defendants come in second appeal and it has been argued on their behalf that their claim to under-proprietary rights in the lands in question was established. The first question which has been argued here is the question of adverse possession. The learned Counsel for the appellants contends that the decision of the Court below in this matter was erroneous. It may be as well to state here that it is now conceded that the defendants have not been able to establish any proof of a grant of under-proprietary rights in the lands in suit. Two documents were produced in the Court below, Exhibits A 15 and A 16, which were relied upon for the purpose of establishing a grant of these rights. As the learned Judge has correctly observed, even if these documents were proved to be genuine documents and even if it could be supposed that they purport to confer under-proprietary rights, nevertheless there is nothing in them to show that the lands to which they refer are the lands with which we are now concerned in this litigation. I may observe that there is evidence on the record that these documents were produced before a Settlement Court in the year 1878 and that on the strength of them under-proprietary rights were decreed with regard to certain lands situated in the village of Abbaspur. But Mr. Sen has had to admit that in those proceedings no claim was made in respect of the lands with which we are now concerned, and consequently there is no reason to suppose that this decree passed in the year 1878 conferred any under-proprietary rights regarding the lands now in question.

To come to the point of adverse possession, it appears that in the year 1873 one Malik Hidayet Khan who was the taluqdar at that time issued notices of ejectment to Gopal Singh and others. Gopal Singh, it is said, was the brother of the present defendant-appellant Khunnu Singh. The persons to whom these notices were issued brought a suit in the Rent Court to contest the notices and it is admitted that the notices were set aside. Unfortunately all the record relating to this litigation in the Rent Court in the year 1873 has been destroyed and consequently we are not in a position at the present day to say on what grounds the notices were contested. All we have is that the notices were set aside by the Tahsildar in whose Court the suit was brought. In the year 1878 the taluqdar mortgaged his estate with possession to two persons, Lachman Prasad and Narotam Das, and these two mortgagees in the year 1886 issued notices of ejectment against the present defendant Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh, who is now represented by the second defendant Musammat Phulpati who is his widow. Those notices were cancelled on a suit being brought to contest them by Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh. Following on this there was a litigation in the Civil Court between these mortgagees and Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh in the year 1888. We have it that a suit was filed by the mortgagees in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad in which a decree for ejectment of Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh was asked for.

Pausing here, I may say that I am unable to understand how a suit of this kind was entertained by a Civil Court. The allegations in the plaint, a copy of which is Exhibit A8, indicate that the mortgagees asked for the ejectment of Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh, alleging them to be mere tenants. I have always understood that a suit for the ejectment of a tenant lay only in the Rent Court.

However that may be, a defence was put forward by Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh and the suit of the mortgagees was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. A copy of his judgment is Exhibit A11. The mortgagees went in appeal to the District Judge, who affirmed the decree of the Court below. This litigation in the Civil Court has been strongly relied upon by the defendants-appellants here in two ways. In the first place, certain statements contained in the judgments are appealed to for the purpose of showing that long before 1888, and in fact since the year 1873, the persons who were in possession of the lands now in question were setting up a claim to under-proprietary rights. Further it has been argued here, as it was in the Court below, that the decision of the Subordinate Judge, which was affirmed in appeal by the District Judge, operates as res judicata and prevents the present plaintiffs from asking the Court to declare that these defendants have no proprietary or under-proprietary rights. There was some discussion in the Court below, and there has been some discussion here, regarding the admissibility of the judgments of the Subordinate Judge, and the learned District Judge for the purpose of showing what sort of case had been set up in the Rent Court in the year 1873 by Gopal Singh. Even, however, if I assume in favour of the appellants that resort can be had to these judgments for the purpose of showing what were the pleas raised in the ejectment proceedings in 1873, it seems to me that they throw no light on the subject. It is well understood that a person to whom a notice of ejectment has been issued may contest the notice on a variety of grounds. He may, for example, plead that he is not an ordinary tenant and cannot, therefore, be ejected by notice. He may urge irregularities in the frame of, or in the manner of issuing, the notice and other grounds, any of which being established would lead to the notice being set aside.

Turning to the written statement which was filed in the civil suit in the year 1888 and reading it along with the plaint, a copy of which is Exhibit A8, it seems that it was alleged in this suit brought by the mortgagees that in the year 1878 Gopal Singh had got the ejectment notice set aside on a plea that the land was his sir land. This allegation was admitted in the written statement, Exhibit A9, filed by Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh. They alleged in the second paragraph of their further pleas that they were old Zemindars of Bahadurpur and that the lands in question were their sir lands ever since the time of native rule. At the most, therefore, all that we can say is that if we accept these statements as indicating the ground upon which the notice of ejectment was contested in the year 1873, a plea was raised that the lands in respect of which the notices were issued were sir lands. Now a man who sets up sir rights does not necessarily claim under-proprietary rights, for under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act the person who is in possession of sir land under certain circumstances is deemed to be not an under-proprietor but an occupancy tenant; and it is also clear from the provisions of the Rent Act that an occupancy tenant cannot be ejected by an issue of notice. It seems to me, therefore, to be impossible to say definitely on this evidence, if it is admissible, that in the year 1873 the ejectment notice was contested by Gopal Singh on the ground that he was an under-proprietor.

Coming to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, it appears to me that it does not help the case of the appellants very much. The first issue which the Subordinate Judge framed was whether the suit for possession brought by the mortgagees was or was not barred by limitation. The second issue was whether the lands in suit were the defendants' sir lands.

With regard to the first issue the Subordinate Judge referred to the fact that a notice of ejectment had been issued against Gopal Singh in respect of these lands and that the notice was cancelled on the 5th of June 1873 by order of the Tahsildar. The Subordinate Judge proceeds to observe that it was clear to him that the defendants' adverse possession commenced from the date of the cancellation of the notice. What is meant by this observation is not at all clear to me. I do not know what case of adverse possession in the ordinary sense could have been set up in the Rent Court. There is certainly nothing in the judgment to show that the Subordinate Judge had before him any evidence which would indicate that under-proprietary rights were claimed in the ejectment proceedings in the year 1873.

As regards the second issue the Subordinate Judge held that the lands were the defendants' sir and that they had been in possession of them as such for a long time. That finding, however, does not amount to a decision that Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh were under-proprietors of the plots in question. The lands may have been their sir lands and yet under section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act they may have been nothing more than occupancy tenants.

Turning now to Exhibit All, which is a copy of the judgment in appeal, here again we are left in the dark regarding what pleas were taken in the Rent Court litigation of the year 1873. The learned Judge observes that it is quite clear that in those proceedings the defendants' predecessor Gopal Singh set up an adverse title. The Judge, however, does not indicate what the nature of this adverse title was. He proceeds to remark that the defendants "had been in possession ever since and not as tenants." This remark too does not convey much. It may mean that they were not in possession as mere tenants as was the case alleged in the plaint, but were in possession as tenants with occupancy rights. As for the statement in the judgment, that the defendants had gained title by adverse possession, all that need be observed is that the nature of the title is not revealed by anything contained in this judgment. It may, for all I know, have been the opinion of the Court that the lessees were not entitled to eject these defendants, if it could be shown that they had any higher rights than those of ordinary tenants. Altogether it appears to me that the lower Appellate Court was quite right in holding that these proceedings in the year 1888 and the following years do not indicate with any certainty that a claim for under-proprietary rights in respect of these lands had been put forward in the year 1873.

It is admitted that after this litigation, which was determined by the appellate judgment of the District Judge of Fyzabad on the 23rd of September 1890, Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh got their names recorded in the register of under-proprietors and it seems that their names have been recorded there ever since.

KHUNNU SINGH v. ABHAS BANDI.

To turn now to the plaintiffs: they deemed the mortgage executed in favour of Lashhman Prasad and Narotam Das in the year 1908, and great stress has been laid by the learned Counsel for the appellants on the fact that since this time the plaintiffs have been taking rents from the defendants and giving them receipts in which they are described as sirdars. This evidence is, of course, available to the defendants as against the plaintiffs, but I cannot agree with the value which has been put upon it by the lower Appellate Court. The learned Judge observes that at the best they are records of admissions made—admissions which are not conclusive and which, as the Judge says, have not been proved to be in accordance with fact. I would hardly go so far as to say this, because it may be that these lands now in dispute are the sir lands of the defendants, that is to say, lands in which they hold a right of occupancy under the provisions of section 5 of the Oudh Rent Act. I am not, however, prepared to hold in the appellants' favour that a description of them as "sirdars" necessarily means that it was admitted that they were under-proprietors; and in any case it cannot be pleaded, as it was pleaded in the Courts below, that by granting these receipts the plaintiffs were estopped in the present proceedings from denying that the defendants are under-proprietors. While there can be no doubt that under-proprietary rights may be acquired by long adverse possession extending over the necessary period, it is at the same time to be observed that a person who claims to have acquired a title in this way must give definite evidence to show that he asserted an under-proprietary title; and I agree with the learned Judge of the Court below in thinking that no definite proof of this fact is forthcoming in the present case. This, I think, is all that is necessary to say with reference to the question of adverse possession. While it may be that Gopal Singh and after him Khunnu Singh and Atbal Singh managed to escape ejection by notice, it has not been established that they achieved that end by putting forward a definite plea that they were under-proprietors and not tenants.

The next question is with regard to the legal effect of the judgments which were delivered in the litigation which took place in the years 1888 and 1890. It has been argued before me that the judgments of the Courts, that is to say of the Subordinate Judge and of the District Judge, operate as res judicata against the present plaintiffs. The case for the appellants is put in this way. It is said that when the mortgage with possession was given to Lashhman Prasad and Narotam Das the mortgagor assigned to them all powers of ejecting tenants, and consequently it is claimed that to this extent at least the mortgagees in the suit which was brought in the year 1888 were fully representing the estate of the mortgagor and consequently the mortgagor is bound by the decision. A plea of a nature similar to this was put forward in a case which is reported as Soshi Bhusun Guha v. Gogan Chunder Shaha (1). There the argument was that a judgment obtained against a mortgagor bound the mortgagee on the ground that the interest of the mortgagee was sufficiently represented by the mortgagor, so that a judgment which bound the latter ought to be binding on the former. It was contended that this view of the law was based upon principles of justice and expediency. Dealing with this argument, their Lordships make certain observations at page 371 of the report to which I now refer. They mentioned several cases in which it had been held expressly that the mortgagee was not bound by a decree passed against the mortgagor after the date of the mortgage. They then go on to say that the reasons urged on behalf of the appellants were not sufficient to induce the Court to dissent from the view which had been taken in the cases referred to. Their Lordships observe that the general rule is that a judgment inter partes binds only the parties and persons deriving title from them subsequent to the date of the judgment. There were, it was observed, many exceptions to this rule which were based upon grounds of justice and expediency, as for example, the cases in which judgments against a "Hindu widow or Shebait" were held to be binding on the reversioner or the succeeding Shebait; or again cases in which by reason of express legislation decrees for rent against registered tenants were held to be binding on unregistered transferees of tenures; but their Lordships observe that the case before them did not fall under any of these descriptions. "A Hindu widow or a Shebait must be held to represent the estate completely, as otherwise there can be no one to represent such an estate. But the same thing cannot be said of the proprietor of an estate after he has mortgaged it. The mortgagee can always be ascertained; very often his interest in the estate may be much greater than that left in the mortgagor, and sometimes, as in the present case, where after a decree it was no part of the mortgagor's interest to protect the encumbrance, the interests of the two are not identical. While on the one hand to one who is anxious to acquire a safe title by res judicata the inconvenience in including the mortgagee as a party defendant is not very great, on the other hand the injustice of binding the mortgagee by a decree to which he was not party must be very considerable. The balance of justice and expediency is, in our opinion, decidedly in favour of the view taken by the Court below."

(1) 22 C. 364; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 244.

KHUNNU SINGH v. ABRAS BANDI.

In the same way it appears to me that it is not possible to argue that a decree which binds a mortgagee is binding upon the mortgagor who is no party to the suit. The general principle is that a judgment inter partes binds only the parties and persons deriving title from them subsequent to the date of the judgment. I am not prepared to accept the view that a mortgagor who, after a decree has been passed in proceedings to which the mortgagee was a party, redeems the mortgagee is a person who derives title from the mortgagee subsequent to the date of the judgment. In other words, to use the language of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the mortgagor is not a person who claims under the mortgagee. It is well established, I think, and I need hardly cite any authority for the proposition, that while a lessee claims under his lessor and his successors in-interest, the lessor cannot be said to claim under the lessee;

and consequently he cannot be estopped by any decision obtained against the lessee. I need only refer for authority on this point to a Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court reported as Brojo Behari Mitter v. Kedar Nath Mozumdar (2). Further it is to be observed that the mortgagor, although he makes a mortgage even with possession, does not cease to be the proprietor of his property and consequently in a case like this, where the claim put forward on behalf of the defendants is of a proprietary nature and constitutes an attack upon the proprietary right of the taluqdar who was the mortgagor, it could not, I think, be held that any decision given in a suit between the present defendants and the mortgagees would be binding on the mortgagor, the reason being that in the earlier suit the mortgagees did not represent the proprietary right of the mortgagor. The learned Counsel for the appellants has drawn my attention to an observation to be found in the case reported as Sheikh Muhammad Alam v. Raghubir Singh (3). At page 34 of the report Mr. Chamier is quoted as having observed that a mortgagee may represent his mortgagor in suits fairly conducted for the ejectment of trespassers but the mortgagor cannot be bound by the dismissal of such a suit in consequence of the mortgagee's failure to prosecute the suit. The case before Mr. Chamier was one in which the mortgagee of a village had let some waste land to A to have it reclaimed and brought under cultivation. The defendants interfered with A and the mortgagee brought a suit for possession in which the mortgagor was impleaded as a defendant. The suit was dismissed because the mortgagee failed to put in an appearance. Subsequently the mortgagor brought a suit for possession of the waste land against the defendants. It was held that the decision in the former suit did not render the question res judicata. The remarks of Mr. Chamier at page 34 of the report appear to me to be obiter, and I can hardly think that his remarks amount to the enunciation of any general principle of law that a decision against the mortgagee binds the mortgagor. It is possible that there may be cases in which it could be held, consistently with the principle of the doctrine of res judicata, that the mortgagor was bound. But for the reasons which I have given I am satisfied that in the case now before me it cannot be maintained that the decisions of the Civil Courts in the year 1888 and again in 1890 are binding upon the present plaintiffs. I hold, therefore, that it is not possible for the defendants-appellants to plead that the matter now in question between themselves and the plaintiffs has been decided finally so as to estop the plaintiffs from putting up their present claim.

(3) 9 O. C. 33.

FAKIRA C. TULSIRAM.

I may refer here to another point which was argued in connection with this litigation of the years 1888 and 1890. The learned District Judge has observed in connection with the argument relating to the question of adverse possession that there was no evidence on the record to show that any adverse title, which was set up in this civil litigation, was ever brought to the notice of the present plaintiffs and consequently he was of opinion, and I think rightly, that nothing in these proceedings could help the defendants for the purpose of proving that they had established an adverse title by prescription against the present plaintiffs.

I have further to remark upon one point upon which some considerable stress was laid by the learned District Judge. It has been made clear that in the present suit Khunnu Singh has been relying upon assertions of adverse title made in the year 1873 by his brother Gopal Singh. When Khunnu Singh was being cross-examined in the Court of first instance, he stated as follows:—"Except myself and Musammal Phulpati no other person has a share in it (the land). Gopal's sons have no share in it. Gopal had also relinquished it in my favour in his lifetime, whether by his own will or through force of me (zabardasti se). I would say that it was my zabardasti that he gave up possession. I took possession after he obtained a sir decree in 1878." The learned Judge points out that in the face of this statement it was not open to Khunnu Singh to take advantage of Gopal Singh's success in the litigation in the Rent Court of 1873, because on his own showing he is not the representative in interest of Gopal Singh whom he says he ousted from possession. It has been argued here that this statement was made by Khunnu Singh mistakenly or by reason of some confusion. That, however, is not a matter which I can consider here in second appeal. It was certainly open to the learned Judge to make use of any statement of this kind made by Khunnu Singh when he was being examined as a witness and to use it as evidence in support of his conclusion that Khunnu Singh is not the legal representative of Gopal Singh and that he has not acquired title by continuous adverse possession.

I have now dealt with all the points which were raised in the memorandum of appeal and which were argued before me. Ground No. 5 of the memorandum was not pressed. With reference to what is stated in ground No. 6 of the memorandum of appeal, in which it is said that a judgment of the first Additional Judicial Commissioner in Second Civil Appeal No. 224 of 1913 lays down too broad a rule of law, it is necessary to say that that was a case in which Mr. Stuart held that a decree obtained against a mortgagee would not bind the mortgagor. It is true, as has been argued, that Mr. Stuart gives no reasons for his decision, but I have dealt sufficiently with this point in an earlier portion of the judgment and I think that the general principle laid down by Mr. Stuart is a correct one.

The result, therefore, is that the defendants-appellants failed in my opinion to adduce satisfactory proof that they are under-proprietors of the plots in suit. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated the 19th August 1904.

Mr. J. C. Mitra, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. B. Dadabhoy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court seems in this case to have taken an entirely wrong view as to the nature of the document Exhibit D 1. It was in terms merely a receipt for possession of certain sir and khudkasht land, which had first been allotted by Panchas to an 8-annas share of which Fakira, Gadi and Tukaram, the present appellants, are owners. The plaintiffs never alleged in the first Court that the document represented anything more than a receipt. It is certainly not a gift; for the executants do not in terms transfer anything to anybody, while an arrangement by way of partition can never be regarded as to any extent without consideration: each party gives up something and relinquishes something, and these things form the consideration for each other. Nor is there any exchange, the reason being that no transfer purports to be effected. The partition between the parties had already been effected by Panchas invited for the purpose and the law does not require writing to complete such a transaction. See Gyannessa v. Mobaraknessa (1). I would distinguish the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in the Stamp Reference reported as Reference under Stamp Act, section 46 (2), on the ground that there the co-sharers effected a partition themselves by lottery and that each co-sharer executed a document setting out his share. In the present case it was unmistakably the action of the Panchas which effected a partition. That the instrument, though in terms a receipt, was not intended to be more than a memorandum for the benefit of the executants themselves seems clear from the fact that they retained possession of it. For this reason I hold that section 17 (c) of the Registration Act has no application.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court allowing the first appeal by Jharis and dismissing that of Fakira are set aside, and the case is remanded to that Court with directions to re-admit both appeals under their original numbers on the register and to determine them afresh on the merits. The usual certificate for refund of Court-fees is granted: other costs incurred in this Court will follow the event.

HUKUMCHAND v. BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY CO.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent is the present proprietor of the Mallanpur Estate. The defendant-appellant represents one of the junior branches of the family of the former proprietors of that estate. It appears that six villages were granted by the ancestor of the plaintiff to the ancestor of the defendant for his maintenance, subject to the condition that he paid the revenue assessed on the same and 15 per cent. malikana and 7 per cent. sawai to the Taluqdar. The terms of the grant are embodied in the wajib-ul-arz of the villages granted, wherein it is stated that the grant shall be resumable, if the grantee fails to maintain the members of his family, and that while the grant will be hereditary, the grantee shall have no power to sell or mortgage the villages granted. The present suit was filed by the plaintiff for the recovery of the arrears of rent for 1322 and 1323 Fasli in respect of some of those villages with interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem. The learned Collector decreed the claim. The only question for determination in this appeal is whether the plaintiff was entitled to claim interest on the arrears and whether the defendant was entitled to a set-off of Rs. 1,124-4-6, which he claims to have paid in excess to the plaintiff in 1321 Fasli. It is clear from the terms of the grant that the defendant is not a transferee of a proprietary interest in the villages in question, for the right conferred was not transferable and the grant was resumable on the happening of a certain contingency. It is also clear that the defendant is not an under-proprietor within the meaning of section 3, clause 8, of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), because the rights conferred by the grant were non-transferable. The items specified in the wajib-ul-arz as being payable by the grantee represent the measure of the malikana or rent payable by him on account of the right he holds in the land, and in the absence of anything to show a limited proprietary grant, he must be deemed to be a tenant, holding under a special agreement within the meaning of section 52 of the Oudh Rent Act, and, therefore, liable to pay interest under section 141 of the said Act. In regard to the set off claimed by the defendant, it appears that a decree was obtained by the plaintiff for arrears for 1319 and 1320

Fasli against the defendant, in execution of which Rs. 1,124-4-6, which had actually been paid by the defendant in excess in 1321 Fasli, were credited and an execution was taken out for the balance. This fact was not disputed in the Court below. The question of set-off, therefore, does not arise. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

HUKUMCHAND v. BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY. CO.

Appeal against the judgment of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, dated the 23rd April 1917.

Messrs. M. Gupta and V. Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the District Court, Jubbulpore, dismissing the plaintiff's claim against the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company while allowing it against the other defendants.

The plaintiff works as a commission agent at Sangor and used to do business with the defendant Matru Lal, who dealt in grain in Burhar in the Rewah State. The defendant Kesho Vinayak was the Station Master at Rupond near Burhar on the Katni Bilaspur branch of the Bengal Nagpur Railway. It has been found that in pursuance of a fraudulent conspiracy Kesho Vinayak delivered to Matru Lal two railway receipts which together purported to show that 1,100 bags of rice had been received at Rupond on the 16th February 1916 for consignment to Sangor. By means of these receipts Matru Lal obtained Rs. 8,873 from the plaintiff who eventually suffered a loss of Rs. 8,287, the rice never having been delivered at Rupond much less conveyed to Sangor. Matru Lal and Kesho Vinayak are both in jail having been convicted of cheating and abetment of cheating respectively.

It is common ground that as far back as 1913 instructions were issued by the Railway Company to all Station Masters in the following terms:—

"1. It has been brought to notice that certain stations are in the habit of issuing railway receipts to consignors before the whole of a consignment has been received for despatch and also before waggons are available for loading.

2. This practice is objectionable and can on no account be allowed.

Station Masters and staff concerned must note that in future any cases of this nature brought to notice will be very severely taken up."

Under the rules of the Railway Company when goods are brought to a station for despatch, they must be accompanied by a consignment note from which a receipt eventually given to the consignor to enable him to obtain delivery at destination is prepared.

The claim as against the Company was dismissed on two grounds, first, because the master was considered to be not liable for the result of his servant's criminal act committed in contravention of orders and, secondly, because the plaintiff was regarded merely as Matru Lal's agent and, therefore, unable to recover the sacks through him.

In this Court the principal point pressed on behalf of the plaintiff is that the Station Master must be regarded as having acted in the course of his employment as the Company's agent for the general purpose of issuing railway receipts and that the Company is, therefore, liable to make good the loss suffered by the plaintiff. Special reliance is placed upon the decision of the House of Lords in Lloyd v. Grace, Smith and Co. (1) and on Sher Jan Khan v. Alimuddi (2). The former case settles the doctrine that a principal is liable for the fraud of his agent acting within the scope of his authority, whether the fraud is committed for the benefit of the principal or for the benefit of the agent. It also overruled the dictum of Lord Davey in Ruber v. Great Fingall Consolidated Ltd. (3) to the effect that where an agent acts fraudulently for his own illegal purposes, no representation by him relating to the matter will bind his employers, but did not in any way dissent from the general decision in that case.

In the Calcutta case numerous authorities are quoted which support the proposition that the rule laid down by the House of Lords is based upon grounds of public policy, it being reasonable that where one of the two innocent persons must suffer from the wrongful act of a third person, the principal who has employed and retained a dishonest agent and has placed him in a position of trust and confidence should suffer for his misdeed rather than a stranger.

HUKUMCHAND V. BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY CO.

Great Western Railway v. Bunch (4), Pickering v. Busk (5), Limpus v. London General Omnibus Company (6) and Betts v. De Vitre (7). In the first case a railway porter took charge of a passenger's luggage in contravention of orders to the contrary and the Company was held liable for the porter's negligence which led to part of the luggage being lost. The view taken seems to have been that so far as the passenger was concerned, the porter could not be regarded as having acted beyond the apparent scope of his authority.

In Pickering v. Busk (5) it was held that the sale impeached could not be rescinded inasmuch as it was effected under an implied authority in that behalf. There the real purchaser of hemp lying at a wharf had put the goods into the custody of a broker whose common business it was to sell for others concealing their names; the real purchaser not having limited the broker's authority had conferred on him an implied authority to sell the hemp.

In Limpus v. London General Omnibus Company (6) the driver of the defendants' omnibus drove it across the road in front of a rival omnibus belonging to the plaintiffs, which was thereby overturned. The defendants had given instructions to their driver not to obstruct any omnibus, but they were held liable for the damage done on the finding that their driver acted in the course of his service and in a manner which he considered advantageous to his employers. At the same time it was laid down that if the driver's act had been one of his own done to effect a purpose of his own the defendants would not have been responsible.

In Betts v. De Vitre (7) the Directors of the Company were held liable for the infringement of a patent in spite of the fact that the acts complained of were done by workmen employed by them but contrary to their orders. Chelmsford, L. C., said:—

"Now, I will assume that the orders not to work in a particular manner were given, and that the disobedience to those orders was secret, although the evidence hardly warrants this conclusion. But granting all this to be the case, I should still hold that the Directors would be liable. A master is responsible for all the acts of his servant which are done in the execution of his duty. If a coachman drives his master's carriage where he is ordered to go, and by negligent driving does an injury, the master is responsible; but if he takes a carriage without permission, and employs it for his own purpose, he alone is answerable for any injurious consequences which arise during his use of it. The alleged infringement of the plaintiff's patent took place in the Company's works, and in the course of the performance of the proper duties in which the workmen were engaged. Those who have the control of the working are responsible for the act of their subordinates, and it is not sufficient for them to order that the work shall be so done that no injury shall be occasioned to any third person. That, of course, must be avoided whether orders to that effect are given or not; but the Directors were bound to take care that their orders were obeyed: and if there was a violation of them, whether openly or secretly, they are liable for the consequences."

In none of these cases am I able to find any authority for the proposition that the employer should be held liable in a case like the present. A Railway Company is no doubt concerned to deal with goods brought to its stations for despatch, but I am clearly of opinion that no employee can be said to act within the scope of his authority or in the course of his employment who treats as brought for despatch that which is non-existent. Direct authority for this view is forthcoming in Grant v. Norway (8), where the master of a ship signing a bill of lading for goods which have never been shipped was considered not to be the agent of the owner in that behalf, so as to make the latter responsible to one who has made advances upon the faith of bills of lading so signed. Jervis, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court said:—

NARINDRA BAHADUR SINGH V. RAM SINGH.

"It is not contended that the Captain had any real authority to sign bills of lading, unless the goods had been shipped, nor can we discover any ground upon which a party taking a bill of lading by endorsement would be justified in assuming that he had authority to sign such bills, whether the goods were on board or not.

If, then, from the usage of trade, and the general practice of ship-masters, it is generally known that the master derives no such authority from his position as master, the case may be considered as if the party taking the bill of lading had notice of an express limitation of the authority; and, in that case, undoubtedly, he could not claim to bind the owner by a bill of lading signed, when the goods therein mentioned were never shipped. It would resemble the case of goods or money taken up by the master under pretence that they were wanted for the ship, when in fact they were not."

Similarly in Coleman v. Riches (9), in which both Pickering v. Busk (5) and Grant v. Norway (8) were cited with approval, it was held that where the servant of a wharfinger fraudulently signed a receipt purporting to acknowledge receipt of goods delivered at its employer's wharf to be shipped to the order of a third party, no such wheat having in fact been delivered, and thereby wilfully induced the third party to pay the price to the pretended vendor, the wharfinger was not liable.

In Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co. (1) above cited, Lord Macnaghten at page 736 recognized the difficulty of defining with exactitude the expressions "acting within his authority," "acting in the course of his employment" and "acting within the scope of his agency," and went on to say that whichever expression is used it must be construed liberally and that probably the explanation given by Willes, J., in Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (10) is the best that can be given. The words of Willes J., were :—

"In all these cases it may be said, as it was said here, that the master has not authorized the act. It is true, he has not authorized the particular act, but he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he must be answerable for the manner in which the agent has conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of his master to place him in."

These words are relied upon for the appellant, but, in my opinion, it cannot be said that to issue a receipt in respect of non-existent goods is an act of the same class as issuing one for goods actually delivered for consignment.

This is no doubt a hard case, but it must be borne in mind that if the Company employed a rogue as its servant, the plaintiff dealt for his own advantage with another rogue. As between the plaintiff and the Company therefore the case is not really comparable with Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co., (1), where the plaintiff doing business with the defendant firm was cheated by the latter's clerk who conducted the conveyancing business of the firm without supervision.

This finding suffices for the decision of the case. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Costs in the lower Court will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

Where the sons of a Hindu father sued merely for a declaration that their share in the family property was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a money-decree obtained against their father, and it was found that the decree-holder defendant was in possession of the property under a mortgage effected by the plaintiff's father:

Held, that the suit was not barred by the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, inasmuch as it arose quite independently of the mortgage.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 2nd February 1916.

Mr. St. George Jackson, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mirza Sami Ullah Beg, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the sons of Ram Singh and sue for a declaration that they are the owners of a two-thirds share in the disputed property, and that the said two-thirds share was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decrees obtained by defendant No. 2 against their father. Defendant No. 2 pleaded inter alia that he was in possession of the disputed property under a usufructuary mortgage, executed in his favour by Ram Singh on the 20th October 1913, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a mere declaratory decree.

The learned Subordinate Judge accepted that contention and dismissed the suit. It is admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs that they are not in physical possession of the disputed property. They state that they were not aware of the existence of the usufructuary mortgage set up by defendant No. 2, and that they cannot be compelled in this suit either to impugn or to redeem that mortgage, which was an independent transaction. The right to seek a declaratory relief, asserted by the plaintiffs, arises out of a threatened sale of their share in the disputed property in execution of certain decrees for money directed against that property. It does not arise out of the usufructuary mortgage under which defendant No. 2 claims to be in possession. The equity of redemption is still in the possession of the family, and Ram Singh continues to be in constructive possession through his mortgagee. The mortgage operates as a bar to a suit for possession, till it can be either displaced or redeemed in a suit properly framed for the purpose. To require the plaintiffs to sue for possession is to ask them to invite the operation of that bar, and to deny to them the relief, if any, to which they might be entitled in connection with the decrees now under execution, in case they fail to displace that bar. The proviso appended to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877) refers to the legal character or right to property, which is set up in the plaint, and as pointed out in Mohabir Pershad Narain Singh v. Gungadhar Pershad Narain Singh (1) and Kannan v. Krishnan (2), the further relief, referred to in that proviso, is a relief appropriate to and consequent on the right asserted. We do not consider that the plaintiffs were bound in this case to impugn the usufructuary mortgage under which defendant No. 2 claims to be in possession, or qua the decrees under execution to join a claim for possession in the present suit.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit remanded to the Court below, under Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure, with a direction to re-admit it under its original number and to dispose of it in the manner provided by law. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

the passing of the ownership of the purchased property from the vendor to the purchaser and the purchaser can notwithstanding such non-payment maintain a suit for possession of the property, and the only remedy of the vendor is a suit for the recovery of the purchase-money. [p. 861, col. 2; p. 862, col. 1.],

Oral evidence is not admissible to show that a transaction which is ex facie a sale is really a mortgage, except to prove fraud on the part of the party taking benefit under the deed [p. 861, col. 1.]

Mr. Anklesaria, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sin Hla Aung, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant sued for a declaration that a deed, which on the face of it is one of sale, is really one of mortgage. The appellant was made a party to the suit as 2nd defendant, as he has executed a decree against the 1st defendant Mg. Po Saing by attaching the property in suit. The deed in question purports to be between Mg. Po Saing as the vendee and the plaintiff as vendor.

The plaint is in effect one for the redemption of the property in suit. The question which arises is whether oral evidence is admissible to prove that the transaction which was ex facie a sale was really a mortgage. It is clear that such evidence is not admissible, except to prove fraud on the part of the party taking benefit under the deed. Both the lower Courts have found that the charge of fraud which the plaintiff made against the defendant was not maintainable. It, therefore, follows that the transaction must be treated as a sale. It has, however, been contended that oral evidence to show that it is really a mortgage is admissible, between plaintiff and the 2nd defendant, the present appellant. The contention is raised on the ground that the admissibility of oral evidence under section 92 applies only between parties to the transaction of their representatives-in-interest and that the appellant is not a representative-in-interest. I cannot accede to this view, because the only way he can claim the property is through the 1st defendant.

It is clear on the facts that the plaintiff after the execution of the conveyance continued in possession of the land and was still in possession when it was attached by the appellant. The learned Divisional Judge takes hold of this fact and deals with it in the following way: "If this is so, then the sale-deed has never become operative. There can be no valid transfer unless possession is given. Mere execution of the deed of sale and payment of consideration does not complete the transaction. The vendor has a lien on the land and may be entitled to obtain possession, but until possession is given the transfer is incomplete", and he then proceeded to frame the following issue: Has there been a valid transfer of the land in suit by Mg. Tun E to Mg. Po Saing? and remanded the issue to the lower Court for trial, and upon receipt of the lower Court's finding upon the issue proceeded to hold that as the conveyance had never been carried into effect by delivery of possession, there had been no valid transfer of the land and that the document under the circumstances clearly gave the plaintiff a lien on the land to the extent of the consideration paid with interest, and that the 2nd defendant, i. e., the appellant, was not entitled to a re-conveyance of the property until the lien had been discharged, while on the other hand as there had been no valid transfer of the land, the appellant as decree-holder was not entitled to attach more than his judgment-debtor's interest in the land. The learned Judge gave a decree declaring that at the time of the filing of the suit the plaintiff had a charge on the land to the extent of Rs. 700 and that the charge would be extinguished upon payment of Rs. 700 together with such further interest as might accrue between the dates of the suit and payment. No authorities were cited for these views of the learned Judge, nor can I find any support for it either in any ruling or in any part of the Transfer of Property Act. But I have found authorities expressing a contrary view. In Bajjnath Singh v. Paltu (1) it was held, following Shib Lal v. Bhagwan Das (2), Umedmal Motiram v. Davu (3) and Sagaji v. Namder (4) that in a sale of immovable property even non-payment of the purchase-money does not prevent the passing of the ownership of the purchased property from the vendor to the purchaser and the purchaser can, notwithstanding such non-payment, maintain a suit for possession of the property, and that the only remedy of the vendor was a suit for the recovery of the purchase-money. The learned Divisional Judge was, therefore, in error in considering that there can be no valid transfer of immoveable property unless possession is given.

I do not think there is any way out of the difficulty for the plaintiff. The decree of the Divisional Court is set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

Section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act defines the relation of joint mortgagors inter se, and there is nothing in the language of the section which compels the conclusion that the mortgagee must distribute his debt in a certain manner or is unable to enforce it against each and every part of the property made security for the mortgage. Each of several mortgaged properties is, so far as the mortgagee is concerned, liable for the entirety of the mortgage-debt. [p. 862, col. 2; p. 863, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, A.C. J.—(September 25, 1917.)

—The facts out of which this appeal arises are these. In 1871 one Koneri affected to mortgage to the plaintiff No. 1 three pieces of property, namely, Survey No. 1088, one-third of Survey No. 1058 and a house. It was afterwards discovered, and is now admitted, that in fact Koneri had no title whatever to Survey No. 1088. In 1877 the mortgagor Koneri sold the equity of redemption in the two mortgaged properties to one Britto, who was the father of the 3rd defendant, and Britto in his turn sold the equity of redemption in the house to the defendant No. 2's father. This last sale was in 1880. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover their money by the sale of the mortgaged property. The 1st defendant was sued as the heir of Koneri, but he took no part in the proceedings, and admittedly has no interest in the litigation.

It was contended in the lower Courts on behalf of the 2nd defendant that he was entitled to the application of the principle of contribution, and the lower Court accepting that argument has awarded to the plaintiffs a portion only of their claim against the 2nd defendant. Moreover, in awarding that portion the lower Court has taken into its consideration the value of Survey No. 1088 which, as I have said, Koneri had no right to mortgage.

It appears to me that the lower Court was wrong in allowing the argument on behalf of the 2nd defendant upon this point. The property, the subject of the mortgage, remains to-day what it was when the mortgage was made, namely, one-third of No. 1058 and a house. Survey No. 1088, in spite of Koneri's pretence to mortgage it, was never validly mortgaged, that is, there was never any transfer of interest in this property from Koneri to the mortgagee. This being so, it cannot be said that there has ever been any severance of the security by the act of the mortgagee. In these circumstances, section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot in my view be invoked so as to assist the 2nd defendant. That section provides that "where several properties are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage." This provision, however, defines the relation of the mortgagors inter se, and there is nothing in the language of the section which compels the conclusion.

that the mortgagee must be paid in a certain manner, or is liable against each and every party. The property made security for the mortgage is pointed out in Raghu Nath Persha Harlal Sadhu (1) and Krishna Ayyar v. Muthukumaraswamiya Pillai (2). I conclude, therefore, that the mortgaged property in the hands of the 2nd defendant is liable for the entirety of the mortgage-debt.

In regard to the 3rd defendant, the position is one of some difficulty. The 3rd defendant is the son of that Britto who purchased from Koneri. It is admitted that the 3rd defendant is not the only heir of the deceased Britto, but that there are other heirs who are not brought upon this record. It must also, I think, be taken, since the contrary is not made to appear, that no Letters of Administration had been taken out to the deceased Britto's estate, and it is apparent that the 3rd defendant was brought upon the record as one of the heirs of the deceased, on the footing that the deceased Britto had died intestate. In this state of facts section 190 of the Indian Succession Act comes into operation, and no right to any part of the property of the deceased Britto can be established in any Court unless Letters of Administration have first been granted by a Court of competent jurisdiction. This appears to me to be at present decisive against the plaintiff's claim against the present 3rd defendant, and the decision in Virchand Vajekaran Shet v. Kondu Kusam Atar (3) cannot remove the difficulty created by section 190 of the Indian Succession Act. It would, however, be unsatisfactory to leave matters in this condition, since the result would be to throw the whole burden upon the 2nd defendant, leaving him to prefer a separate suit in order to recover contribution from the 3rd defendant. The less round-about method of securing justice will be to obtain, if possible, adequate representation to the deceased Britto's estate, and Mr. Jahagirdar on the plaintiffs' behalf has applied for a stay of the final orders in this appeal so as to enable Letters of Administration to be taken out. In the view which I take of the question, the decree should be made in favour of the plaintiffs.

SHAH, J.—

FINAL JUDGMENT.

The appeal was allowed, dated the 25th September 1914, by the determination of this appeal. The learned Judge ordered that to allow Mr. Jahagirdar, the learned Advocate, to appear on behalf of the plaintiffs, Letters of Administration to the estate of the deceased Britto, who upon the present record is represented only by one son, the 3rd defendant. The learned Pleader, however, now draws our attention to the fact, which is not contested, that Britto was a Native Christian, so that the law applicable to his case is Act VII of 1901, by section 3 of which it is provided that sections 190 and 239 of the Indian Succession Act do not apply to any part of the property in question. It follows, therefore, that even without Letters of Administration the mortgaged property in the hands of the 3rd defendant must be liable for the mortgage-debt. We must, therefore, make the usual decree for sale. That decree will declare that the amount due to the plaintiffs on account of the principal, interest and costs, calculated up to this day, is Rs. 500, and that such amount shall carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from this date until realization; that if the defendants pay into Court the amount so declared due within six months from this date the plaintiffs should deliver up to the defendants, or to such persons as they appoint, all documents in their possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall, if so required, re-transfer the property to the defendants free from the mortgage; in the event of the money not being paid within the limited period of 6 months, then under section 15B (2) of the Decree Act, there will be a sale of such portion of the property in the hands of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, viz., Revision Survey No. 1058 and the house in Belgaum, as may be necessary for the realization of the sum due. The plaintiffs' appeal is allowed.

Clause (1) of rule 32 applies to injunctions, both mandatory and prohibitory. In the present Code the words "for an injunction" take the place in the old Code of the words
"for the performance or abstention from any other particular act." The expression
"the act required to be done" means, "what has to be done to enforce the injunction."
Refers to Venkatachallam Chetty v. Veerappa suit has not been brought within 3 years from the breach complained of, the plaintiff's remedy is barred. Refers to Article 181 of the Limitation Act.

As to the clock-shed the decree of 1895 does not affect it.

As to the privy, the suit in essence is a suit for ejectment to which Article 142 of the Limitation Act applies. The plaintiffs' claim to the land is barred by limitation.

(1) that the defendant by raising the north wall of his house has disobeyed a permanent injunction embodied in a decree between the parties, dated September 1895;

(2) that the defendant by building a cook-shed has interfered with the plaintiffs' ancient lights;

(3) that the defendant has encroached on a narrow strip of land between the two premises, which belongs to them, by building a privy on the eastern end of it.

As to (1) the plaintiffs ask for the demolition of the wall so far as it is above the height limited by the permanent injunction. The defence made is that the plaintiffs should not have brought a fresh suit but should have applied for the execution of the decree of 1895 under Order XXI, rule 32, clause (1) or clause (5), and that an application for execution at the date of the suit would have been barred by limitation under Article 181 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act of 1908, corresponding with Article 178 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act of 1877.

The learned Munsif in the Trial Court upheld this plea, relying upon the decision of the Madras High Court in Venkatachallam v. Veerappa Pillai (3), which is clearly in point. In the lower Appellate Court, the learned Subordinate Judge has taken a different view. He is of opinion that clause (5) of rule 32 only applies to a mandatory injunction as distinguished from a prohibitory injunction, such as we have here, that the plaintiffs are entitled to enforce the injunction by suit, that the wrong done by disobeying the injunction is a continuing wrong within the meaning of section 23 of the Limitation Act, and that the suit is within time. He has, therefore, made a decree awarding the relief claimed, and the defendant has appealed.

I agree, in the result, with the Munsif. Clause (5) of rule 32 is a new provision. It supplies a gap in the Code of 1882, to which attention was drawn by the cases of Sakaral v. Bai Parvatibai (2) and Durga Das Nandi v. Dewraj Agarwala (1). These cases and others illustrate the practice, and the practice is in accordance with the Code. Rule 32 gives a remedy by execution and the enforcement of an injunction being a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree by which it is awarded, a separate suit is prohibited by section 47 [cf. Jumsetji Manekji v. Hari Dayal (11).]

Clause (1) of rule 32 clearly applies to injunctions, both mandatory and prohibitory. In the present Code the words "for an injunction" take the place in the old Code of the words "for the performance or abstention from any other particular act." I can see no reason why clause (5) should be limited to mandatory injunctions. The clause gives a discretionary power to the Court to direct that "the act required to be done may be done so far as practicable by the decree-holder or some other person appointed by the Court at the cost of the decree-holder." The expression "the act required to be done" means what has to be done to enforce the injunction. In the present case it is the part demolition of the defendant's wall. In my opinion on an application for execution of the decree of 1895, the Court might have proceeded either under clause (1) or clause (5).

The question of limitation, if it were necessary to decide it, is perhaps more difficult. It is contended for the plaintiffs that if the suit in respect of this wall is not competent, they are entitled under clause (2) of section 47 of the Code to ask that the suit may be treated as an application, that if Article 181 applies, that Article is governed by section 23 and that on this footing the suit or application is in time.

The answer seems to be that assuming that a suit upon a decree which has never been carried into the execution department at all, can be treated under clause (2) as an application to execute that decree, nevertheless the power given by the clause is a discretionary power and the present case is not one in which it ought to be exercised. The flaw in the plaintiffs' procedure was pointed out by the Munsif, but nothing has since been done to put the case on a proper footing. If the concession were allowed, the plaint would have to be regarded as partly a plaint and partly an application for execution. The plaintiffs, moreover, appear to have been very dilatory in asserting their rights.

It may be well, however, to add as to Article 181, that the view of the Madras

High Court that under that Article, an application to enforce an injunction must be made within three years of the particular breach or disobedience which is the occasion for the application, differs somewhat from the view taken by the Allahabad High Court. In Ram Saran v. Chatar Singh (8) the learned Judges observe that disobedience of an injunction is a contempt of Court. They hold that an application to enforce the injunction is not governed by Article 179 (now Article 182) and apparently that no period of limitation is prescribed, but made no reference to Article 178 (now Article 181). This case was followed in Bhagwan Das v. Sukhdei (9). Both Courts, it will be observed, agree that the terms of Article 182 put it out of the question. For the present purpose the subject need not be further discussed.

In my opinion, in regard to the wall of the house, the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be discharged and the decree of the Munsif restored.

(2) As to the cook-shed, it was conceded in the argument before us that the decree of 1895 does not affect it. The cook shed appears to be a new building and its north wall is to the south of the line of the north wall of the house produced westwards. The Subordinate Judge is clearly wrong in treating the cook-shed as if the permanent injunction applied to it. That, however, is how the claim is put in the plaint. Obviously on that footing the suit must fail, apart from the admission in the plaint that the cook-shed has been in existence for more than four years, an admission which, as the Munsif observes, would, in any case, preclude the plaintiffs from claiming as an easement under section 26 of the Limitation Act.

The plaintiffs' claim in this respect should also, in my opinion, be dismissed.

(3) As to the privy, the suit is in essence a suit in ejectment to which Article 142 of the Limitation Act applies. That is the view of the learned Munsif and here again I agree with him. The privy has brick walls and was built more than twelve years ago. The observation of the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs only came to know of its existence within twelve years of the suit is irrelevant. In a case falling under Article 142 they were bound to prove possession within twelve years.

In this Court reference was made for the plaintiffs to Framji Carsetji v. Goculdas Madhavji (4) and Chokkalinga v. Muthusami (5), but the circumstances of the present case are very different. Here we have a masonry structure built on land close to the plaintiffs' house. Possession so taken cannot be whittled away.

The possession, however, of the land on which the privy stands does not entitle the defendant to the remainder of the strip of land between the two houses. As to that remainder the decree of the Subordinate Judge will stand.

The result is that the whole suit must be dismissed, save and except so far as it relates to the strip of land. The declaration made by the Subordinate Judge in respect thereto will be affirmed, except as regards the land on which the privy stands. The parties will receive and pay costs throughout in proportion to their success and failure.

BEACHECROFT, J.—I agree in making the order proposed by my learned brother substantially for the reasons given by him. But I express no opinion whether Order XXI, rule 32 (5), applies to prohibitory as well as to mandatory injunctions.

Decree modified.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1 of 1917.

February 12, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Oldfield and Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar.

MURAJALLI MUNIA GOUNDAN—

DEFENDANT NO. 3—APPELLANT

VERSUS

RAMASAMI GHETTI AND OTHERS—

PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1, 2 AND 4 TO 10—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 126, 144, 148—Hindu Law—Joint family—Sale by father of equity of redemption of family property as his acqui- *tion—Redemption by vendee and possession thereafter as absolute owner—Redemption, suit for, by son's alienee

First defendant and his father G. mortgaged family property to 2nd defendant. G. subsequently sold the equity of redemption as if the property was his self-acquisition to 3rd defendant. Third defendant redeemed 2nd defendant and obtained possession of the property. After G.'s death 1st defendant sold his share in the property to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff for possession of 1st defendant's share on payment of a proportionate portion of the mortgage amount:

Held, that Article 126 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the suit and that time commenced to run from the date of 3rd defendant's entering into possession [p. 868, col. 1; p. 871, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Article 126, which speaks of a suit "to set aside" the father's alienation of ancestral property, includes a suit in which possession is claimed and does not only contemplate a mere declaratory suit. [p. 870, cols. 1 & 2.]

An alienation under Article 126 need not be for consideration. The Article applies alike to an alienee with and to an alienee without notice. [p. 871, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Salem, in Appeal Suit No. 99 of 1915, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Dharmapuri, in Original Suit No. 702 of 1912.

[FACTS appear from the judgment.]

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Appellant, argued that the adverse possession of the 3rd defendant commenced from the date when he got possession as an absolute owner. The proper Article to apply is Article 126. There is no room for the residuary Article 144 as the case is covered by the terms of Article 126, the present suit being by the son's alienee to recover the son's share. Article 145 applies only to suits for redemption against the mortgagee and, not to suits against a person who obtains a charge by paying up the mortgage. The prayers here are to set aside the sale so far as 1st defendant's share is concerned, with the consequential relief for possession.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondents, argued that Article 148 was the appropriate Article. The property was mortgaged by both father and son. The son's alienee virtually seeks to redeem that mortgage to the extent of the son's interest from the person who discharged the mortgage and was in possession. Article 126 can apply only where the father sold the property as ancestral property. It was not so in the present case. The adverse possession, moreover, will commence only when the alienee takes possession by virtue of the father's alienation and not where he redeems a subsisting mortgage and gets possession from the mortgagee.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The facts admitted or found are that 1st defendant and his father Gopal Row mortgaged their property to 2nd defendant with possession under Exhibit 1. Gopal Row afterwards sold the equity of redemption, as though the property were his self-acquisition, to 3rd defendant by Exhibit II. The lower Appellate Court has found, and we accept its findings, that the property belonged to the family and the sale does not bind 1st defendant. After Gopal Row's death, 1st defendant sold to plaintiff by Exhibit A and plaintiff now sues for possession of 1st defendant's share on payment of the appropriate proportion of the mortgage amount, which 3rd defendant has paid. The question is whether the suit filed on 26th August 1912 is in time. It will be if the Article of Schedule I, Limitation Act, applicable is No. 148. It may be, if the Article is No. 144 and 3rd defendant's possession, which, it is not disputed, began in 1898, was not adverse to 1st defendant and plaintiff. It will not be if the Article is No. 126.

It is simplest to disregard for the present the distinction between Articles Nos. 144 and 126. The substantial question is then whether the suit is for redemption or for possession, subject no doubt to the satisfaction of 3rd defendant's lien. It is brought in effect by one co-owner, represented by plaintiff, for recovery of mortgaged property redeemed by another co-owner and now in possession of his transferee, 3rd defendant; and argument has turned on whether Article No. 148 or 134 would apply to the case thus simplified. The question has not been dealt with by this Court. But the conclusion reached in Allahabad and Bombay is in favour of the latter. It was no doubt held in Ashfaq Ahmad v. Warir Ali (1) that when one co-heir of a mortgagor had redeemed the whole mortgage, the suit against his representative was subject to Article No. 148. But recently, when that decision was considered in Jai Kishen Joshi v. Budhanand Joshi (2), the question being whether Article 134 should be applied against a transferee from a redeeming co-owner on the assumption that the latter had the equivalent of a mortgage right, one learned Judge held, with reference to the principle stated in section 95, Transfer of Property Act, that he was only a charge-holder and applied Article No. 144 whilst the other concurred, observing with reference to the earlier decision that the possession of the charge-holder need not be regarded as in all respects equivalent to that of a mortgagee. The view taken in Ashfaq Ahmad v. Warir Ali (1) was not adopted in Vasudev v. Balaji (3) or in other cases decided by the Bombay High Court and referred to therein or in Bhaiji Shamrao v. Hajimiya Mahamad (4). The objections made to the reasoning in these authorities are that the Transfer of Property Act was not applicable to the facts, the mortgage in the later Allahabad case having been executed before it and the Act not being applicable to the Bombay Presidency at the time, and that the distinction between the positions of a mortgagee and a charge holder or, as he is called in the Bombay cases, alienor has been abrogated since the decision of the Privy Council in Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (5). The first is unsubstantial, the principle involved not depending on the Act for its validity. The second was, no doubt, not noticed in the judgments in question. But it cannot affect the conclusion. For the Privy Council held only that a simple mortgage was to be treated as equivalent to a charge for the purpose of Article No. 132, not that every charge was a mortgage for the purpose of Article No. 134. And the argument is unsustainable, because 3rd defendant's right, being equivalent only to that of Gopal Row, is, as the cases referred to show, not based on the principle of subrogation recognised in section 101,
